The Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, La., sends in a vest pocket that is about as good as they need to make it. It is five and a half by seven folded once the long way to get a 2¾ by 7 folder. On the front are the underlines, and on the back is a schedule of stars without reference to their plays. The inside is taken as a single page and set with dated days. The layout is just about as good as can be done and we'll appreciate it if the management will send in a pair of programs on white paper, that they may be reproduced. The theater runs on a sliding scale for features, and where there is a change in price both the prices and the time table are run for the information of the patron. Not only is the typographical display good, but the same intelligence finds reflection in the wording of the announcements. They read attractively and possess real pull. Even the space between the back and front pages is made to work, for it carries this notice:

> This program will be mailed you weekly if you will leave your name at the box office. Also oblige us by an occasional line of criticism as to our show. Say what kind of pictures you like. Do you like long pictures? What pictures have you seen that you consider ideal and why? We want to know these things because it is our business to please you. P. E. Coe, Manager.

Much of the stuff is in six point type and not a large face at that, but it is all so neat and clean cut that it has more display value than many in large faces. We should like to visit a house that can turn out work like that.

Garfield Keeps Plugging.

The Garfield, Chicago, sticks to its small folder program, but has changed to a better color. The issue is too small to permit much text other than the title and a single line, but the front page is always reserved for the house and here the mangagement gets in its house argument with telling effect. It does not matter whether or not you elaborately describe the films if you make it clear in your house talk that the house is worth while. This does not mean the "always a good show" line of argument, but the why of it.

Two Good Ones.

The following paragraphs are from the Paramount Pointers, gotten out by the Famous Players Exchange, Philadelphia. The sheet is a newsy little pamphlet and has much good material for its patrons. Sometimes the ideas are good beyond the shadow of William Penn:

> Here is one of the cleverest summer ideas for a motion picture theater that has come to our attention. Mr. Joseph McCready and Mr. Yonker of the Fifty-sixth Street Theater made up their minds that they would give their patrons a treat during the hot months, a treat that has eventually turned into a great advertising idea for the theater. A "bar." At least that is what Mr. McCready calls it, although it is in reality a bower in the rear of the promenade; a bower made of lattice covered with flowers. In this bower is a "barmaid" who serves grape lemonade to the patrons without any cost. From the very first night it has made a big hit, and all the people in that neighborhood are talking about it. We believe this is a new idea for motion picture theaters.
> A. C. Lewis is better known on the Jersey Coast as "The Lumber King" on account of his lumber enterprises. Last spring he decided to build a little theater at Seaside Park, N. J., and run only for the summer months. Being in the lumber business he was able to put up an exceedingly attractive theater. And he did not stop at expense in equipment, buying the best apparatus obtainable, the best screen, best seats, good music, etc. But Mr. Lewis built his theater just north of Seaside Park, and everyone in the film business said "It will never go." But they overlooked one thing—Mr. Lewis knew what he was doing. He is known as a wonderfully clever business man. In order to get people, and he gets them, too, he resorted to a very simple and effective method. Just got the jitney boys in Seaside Park together and told them if they would put signs on their cars every night "To the Colonial Theater, fare 3 cents," they would clean up—and they did. Answer—full house. The jitney boys are doing a rushing business, and Mr. Lewis is going to realize on his investment. Also—he shows four Paramount Pictures every week together with the Bray Cartoons and Pictographs.

Minusa Methods.

Nat I. Brown, of the Minusa Gold Fibre Screen, sends in some advertising done by exhibitors for the screens erected in their houses and writes:

> It has never been our good fortune to break into print in your advertising department, not because we have not appreciated the value of this work, because we have followed the column closely and realize its importance in the interest of the exhibitor.
> Just recently the thought occurred to the writer that possibly the inclosed marked copy of a program issued by Mr. George Shorey, of the Queen theater, and the clipping from a newspaper in the South, might be of interest to you.
> We supply each of our purchasers with a number of press notices, which they in turn use in their program and also in the local newspaper, as is evidenced by the two inclosures.
> If you can use this material in your department, we would be very much pleased indeed to have credit for same.

One of these is a reproduction of a clipping from an Athens, Ga., paper and purports to represent the reporter's idea of a screen installed by the Vaudette, though evidently it is merely the specially prepared copy. It is written in newspaper style and from the local point of view, in which Mr. Brown shows himself to be a real press agent, for a real press agent writes stuff that can be printed, and not merely the stuff he would like to see printed. It tells simply and therefore effectively, what the screen is and wherein it is good. It is the sort of stuff a reporter might have written. One of the programs of the Queen, Knoxville, is sent, the back page being given the screen and surcharged in red ink with the name of the screen. Mr. Brown puts into practice what we have already recommended in this department. If you better your house in any way, make a noise about it. Tell the people what you have done for their comfort. Make them appreciate it. A good screen is as much of an attraction as a good picture or comfortable chairs or a new system of ventilation, but they will not notice unless you tell them, then they'll sit up and take notice. We know one exhibitor who very nearly paid the cost of a Power's B by keeping it in the lobby a few days and telling why the loop setter was going to make for better and uninterrupted pictures. People stopped to see the machine and later came to see if the statements were true. Mr. Brown might supplement his press stuff with a neatly framed sample of the screen, perhaps a six inch square, with a printed but brief explanation of why this made for better pictures inside. One of those frames could work in the lobby for weeks or even months and would be worth more than the cost of the frame to the live exhibitor who is primed with facts about the screen. The live exhibitor advertises his theater as a whole and not merely the pictures he shows.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Looking Ahead.

PHIL LANG, of the Kalem Company, offers a rather startling suggestion. He intimates that perhaps the star writers of tomorrow will be the rank outsiders. And he has argument with him. He points out that the successful writer of today is the man who studies the wants of the directors and supplies them with scripts that permit them to make a reputation. Much of this stuff is trick work. It is not good narrative told in sincere style, but tricky themes furbished up with camera devices and production stuff. He points out that ultimately the pictures will present proper plays and that the men of today will be unable to supply the demand because they have become too deeply ingrained with the methods of today.

To those who have not studied the situation carefully this may seem fantastic and illogical, but it is none the less true that there is little really novel work being offered in the market today; less than was shown two years ago. Directors will not make, and therefore editors will not purchase, stories that are too radically different from the story they made last week and will make again next week. They fear the story they cannot understand because they lack the ability to dig beneath the surface at the real meaning of the author. They get only the superficial action that shows in the script and fail utterly to sense the psychology of character. Men who have sought to write this style of stuff have been told that it is not wanted. The more independent have dropped out, the others have moulded their style to the demand. We get only the hackneyed stuff because the present-day authors know that this is the only stuff that stands a chance of a sale. The man who can think new ideas and new methods has given up in despair or disgust, according to his temperament. They are not now in the market and will not come into it because some one advertises they want new and unusual ideas. They came in the first time and perhaps more than once because they saw these advertisements, and now they know that these advertisements are written for the exhibitor to read. They are not appeals to the authors, they are intended to fool the film renter into the belief that the advertiser is really trying to get stuff when all the time he may be standing over a staff of tame authors like Legree over Uncle Tom. As a result the market is left to the beginners and to the men who have caught the trick of helping the short-weight director fool the public into the belief that he is clever. Presently some man will come along with such a fine ignorance of the business that he will not only advertise for the unusual, but he will buy it and require his directors to make it. Then there will be a rush on the part of other makers for the material they have repeatedly turned down and the faithful ally of the director will be left out in the cold because he cannot quickly enough readjust his point of view.

There is coming the day when it will be realized that the fifteen hundred dollar story will be better than the five thousand dollar a week star, when some business man will get into the film business and show that, after all, the play really is the thing. The star system cannot long endure. On the speaking stage a certain star may be seen once a season or perhaps twice in three seasons. Here the stars are seen monthly if not more frequently, reissues and return bookings may make it possible to see them weekly. They lose their freshness and appeal and generally about the end of the second season—if they last that long, they develop the big head and become utterly useless. Fine plays will always be welcomed and some day this will be proven, and perhaps it will be a new generation of authors who must be looked to to supply the demand.

The Inquest Club.

There have been a few requests for a resumption of the Inquest Club. There were no meetings held this past season, for we were busy with the new edition of Technique of the Photoplay from August of last year to March of the present year, but we can manage to make the time this year if there is a sufficient response to make it worth while. If you want to belong to the Inquest Circle drop a line to this department. There will be no further invitation.

For the benefit of those who do not remember the old organization, it is explained that an Inquest Club sat for several seasons through the winter months, attending some photoplay performance and later gathering at Keene's Chop House to hold an inquest on the films just witnessed and others seen by the members. There is no formal list of members, no officers other than the Coroner, no initiation fees and no dues other than the payment for refreshment ordered at the meeting. The meetings are held alternate Mondays through the cool months. If you want to come in and give serious thought to the study of photoplays, drop a line and you will be notified of the first meeting if these are resumed.

Study the Screen.

Lately we undertook to discuss some technique with a would-be student, but the only reply we received to numerous objections was that the author had seen the same thing done on the screen. Told that was no argument, the reply was that all authorities urge on the pupil the study of the screen. They do, and all good authorities add that the good and bad are both to be studied. That is where the value of screen study comes in. The productions must be studied both for things to be done and for things to be avoided. Were we always to accept as proper usage the stuff that is thrown on the screen, the errors of today would be perpetuated tomorrow and next year and the next. But in the present status of production pictures are worse, technically, than they were four or five years ago. To urge that things are right because they are done is to argue no perception, to admit the lack of the selective faculty.

Study the screen, but study it intelligently. See what is good and know why. See what is bad and know why. Avoid the bad and seek to improve upon the good. It is the only way in which advancement may be gained. That it is done every day is no excuse for your mistakes. Because it has been done every day is the very reason why you should avoid the error you know to be so common. Study the screen, but draw your own conclusions.

Close-ups.

Close-ups are one of the most valuable devices of photoplay, and precisely because they are so valuable is the reason why the effect should not be overworked. Look at almost any feature and you will note how the director seeks to replace intelligence with trickery. He cannot make a good narrative production because it is beyond his intelligence, so he tries to fuss things up and make trick devices cover his lack of brains. He knows that close-ups are effective. He overworks them. He knows that irising is "pretty," so he overworks this and leaves it to the leader editor to print in the story after he gets through illustrating it. This is a poor example to follow. Instead, take scenes and practice writing close-ups. See when they are needed and when they are not. Then use them only when they will actually enhance the value of the scene and not merely as a device to cover paucity of idea. Take all your old scripts. Look them over. See if you have too few or too many close-ups. One is as bad as the other. Learn to employ just enough and no more. In time you will so thoroughly master the close-up that you will use them when you need them and at no other time, and when you do need them the want will automatically make itself felt. Close-ups are useful to isolate part of a scene, to break up a scene running too long in a set which cannot be left and to emphasize the importance of an action. Use them for these purposes and for no other reason. That they are decorative to some extent is not an argument in favor of their overuse.

Read Between the Lines.

When a company advertises that it will pay fancy prices for scripts, do not utter wild shrieks of joy. Last spring a certain company advertised that it would pay as high as $75 for good comedies for a new star. The advertisement was well displayed and attracted much attention. The star lately wrote that of the material sent in because of this advertisement not a single story had been purchased. Many of them were good and others gave promise, but always the man in charge had some objection to interpose and the story had to be sent back while a home-made story that cost nothing was put in work "until we find something good," and another seventy-five was saved to the head of the company, who would rather lose his left leg than a ten-cent piece. Try out these advertisers if they seem to speak with sincerity, but do not place too much reliance upon the statements of an advertisement that is not wholly intended for the authors.

Stupid.

Several letters have been received from a woman correspondent who wants to make some money out of photoplays. She has discovered that she cannot steal the ideas of other writers and offer them as her own, so now she announces that she is going to become a staff writer. She does not even know how to spell. She has a system all her own, and yet she has the egotism to suppose that she can become a staff writer merely because she wants to.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies, by mail, on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 154.

What is for and against a large picture—say above 17 feet?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 145.

The Roll of Honor on question 145 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; M. M. Moon, Shermau, Texas; Dean A. Suyder, Bangor, Pa.; G. A. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; J. J. Bell, Palestine, Texas; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; M. Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; W. E. Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; L. C. Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; F. N. Irvin, Lufkin, Texas; M. Capobianco, Roseto, Pa.; B. C. Nye, Jr., Wolf Point, Mont.; John Koltzan, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Raymond Brown, St. Louis, Mo., and E. R. Havener, Marquette, Michigan.

The replies to question 145 brought out a divergence of opinion as to whether the operator should stand or sit at his work, and many were the arguments advanced for and against. The large preponderance of opinion was, however, that a chair or stool should be provided, and the ports so located or arranged that the operator be enabled to either sit or stand, at his pleasure. I am publishing three replies to this question, the same being, in my opinion, one of very decided importance, as applied to excellence in screen results. First we will present the negative.

Reply to Question No. 145.

By M. M. Moon, Sherman, Texas.

The Question:

In your judgment, is it better that the operator be compelled to stand up or that he be seated at his machine? Give reasons for your opinion. In answering, lay aside personal preference and consider the question entirely on its merits.

The Answer:

In my opinion the operator should be required to stand up, for the following reasons, viz.: because the standing operator will always be on the alert for any trouble which may occur; also he will be in the most convenient position to work, and, in case of any sudden accidents which might occur while the machine is running, he will not have to get up out of the chair and take time to push it back out of his way in order to have room to move around, and when I say "move around," I mean it, since it is very essential for a man to work faster when things are going wrong, especially when the screen is dark. Of course, it is nice for the operator to have a chair, but an operator will get a little careless or lazy if sitting, but where a man is required to remain in the operating room from eight to fourteen hours each day, he should have a chair, though it is not best for screen results. Where an operator is compelled to crank his machine he should always stand, since it permits a more even turning of the crank.

Reply to Question No. 145.

By G. A. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.

The Answer:

In my opinion the operator should be allowed to sit at his machine. Of course, there are many arguments both for and against this practice. Many managers, examiners, fire chiefs, etc., claim an operator cannot possibly make the same headway in case of fire that he could if he was standing, basing their claim on the fact that if he should become excited he would, in all probability, overturn the chair or stool, which would vastly impede his movements. Another claim advanced by those not in favor of the operator being seated is, he cannot project as good a picture.

In my view, however, the operator who would become excited in case of fire is not a proper person to be in an operating room at all, since if he did have a fire he would very likely cause a panic or stampede, regardless of whether he was standing or seated. Also an operator who has to work from six to eight hours a day cannot reasonably be expected to stand up for that length of time, as he would become so tired that he would not care much whether he projected a good picture or not. In constructing an operating room the port holes should be made so that the operator can get a clear view of the picture either standing or sitting.

Reply to Question No. 145.

By Dean A. Snyder, Bangor, Pa.

The Answer:

In my opinion to secure the maximum efficiency from an operator he must be supplied with a comfortable chair, which should be light, revovable, comfortable, having a slightly curved back about two feet high. If space permits, there should be one of these chairs at the right of each machine. The chair should be so located, and the ports so made that the operator will have a clear view of the screen, either sitting or standing. The advantages of having a chair may be most clearly shown by enumerating the disadvantages of standing. First: the operator who is continually on his feet will soon become tired, and, as a result, will not deliver satisfactory projection. Second: standing promotes restlessness, and the operator will be inclined to roam around the room, and that, in turn, is bound to result in shadows on the screen, lack of proper gauging of speed, and at some time probably serious disaster. Third: the standing operator will not keep his eyes as steadily on the picture as will the sitting operator, from the fact that he is more tempted to look around due to restlessness and uncomfortableness. I make the assertion that the sitting operator can handle the machine just as well and just as efficiently, if not even better and more efficiently, than he can when standing, therefore, there is no reason under heaven why the sitting operator won't do just as good work, or better work, than the man who is standing.

To the three foregoing I append the short reply by W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, since it brings out a point not covered by previous replies.

> I believe an operator can do his best work while standing, and there are times when standing is absolutely necessary. However, the operator cannot stand for a long period of time without weariness, and a tired man cannot, in the very nature of things, do his best work. When things are running smoothly the work can be done in a very satisfactory manner when the operator is seated, and a chair should, therefore, be provided. The good man will not abuse the privilege, and a lazy man would be about as indifferent standing as seated. In either case, it would be better to keep the chair and get rid of the man.

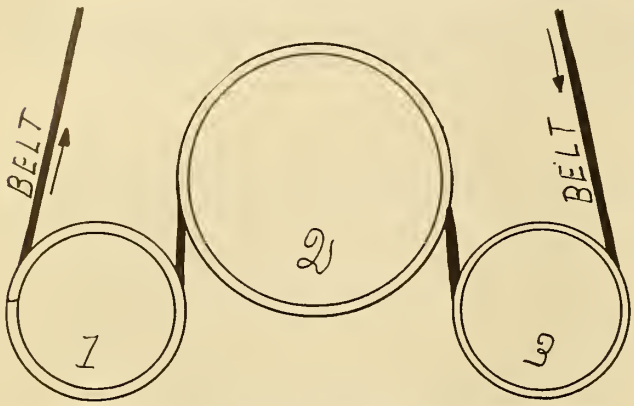
My own view in this matter is, I think, well known. I believe firmly in the operator being allowed to either sit or stand, preferably sit, because of the fact that when seated we know where he is, viz.: right beside the machine where he ought to be, whereas, my own observation, taken in hundreds of operating rooms, is that you very seldom find the standing operator at the observation port beside his machine, unless it be a crank-driven projector, and even then he more often than not is looking at something else beside the picture, whereas, on the other hand, you will almost always find the seated operator rubbering out of the observation port at the picture, as he should do. In my opinion, the objections of fire chiefs, examiners and managers to the seated operator are not well founded.

A False Rumor.

For some weeks past there has been a rumor floating around that the manufacture of the Edison Super Kinetoscope was to be discontinued. For the benefit of all concerned, I would say that there is absolutely no foundation for this story.

The Edison Super Kinetoscope was and is a high class machine, built to project pictures at normal speed. It was found, however, that the demand of the "speed demon" was so insistent that it was necessary to make such changes in the machine as would enable it to handle film at high speed.

I am informed that the Edison Company now has the machine in such shape that it will handle film at eight minutes to the reel, which ought to be fast enough to almost satisfy everybody, though I imagine there are those, and not all of them in low class theaters, either, who will want a minute or two cut off the eight.



The Super Kinetoscope is, as I said, a high class machine, and I personally was rather pleased to know there was one machine which would not handle film at jumping-jack speed. I have said before, and I again repeat, that the running of film at greater than 70 or at most 75 feet per minute ought to be prohibited. It ruins the work of the artists, mars the work of the producer, strains and abraids the sprocket holes, and sets up undue and unnecessary wear in the projection mechanism itself, besides very materially lowering the value of the result on the screen.

Eliminating the Bind.

W. S. Turnpaugh, Abilene, Texas, writes:

I hope this simple contribution will be of benefit to someone as it has been to me. It will apply to almost any machine with a belt-driven take-up. The accompanying sketch speaks for itself. The take-up belt on a Power's Six A or Six B has a tendency to lift up on the split pulley on lower magazine shaft, and if the belt be a bit tight this tendency is sufficient to cause some binding, which is materially increased as the lower reel becomes loaded with film.

As per the drawing, you will see that with the two idler pulleys arranged as per sketch, so that the take-up belt will pass under Nos. 1 and 3 and over split pulley 2, the pull on the split pulley will be down, which will tend to counterbalance the weight of the reel, and thus avoid any binding of the shaft, as well as reducing wear on the bearing. If you have never tried such an arrangement you have no idea how easy the take-up will pull; also it will enable the operator to run the take-up tension much lighter at the starting of the reel, at which time it pulls hardest on the film.

There are four picture houses in this city, viz., the Mission, Rex, Queen, and Gem. Your Humble Servant is chief operator at the Mission and Rex, of which Mr. J. E. Hamlett is proprietor. The Mission and Queen are the two largest houses, and are up-to-date in nearly every respect.

Undoubtedly the addition of the idler pulleys would have the precise effect Brother Turnpaugh claims. I pass the thing along to our readers, with the notation that it looks very good to this particular editor.

The Soldier Operator.

Much complaint is coming from Canada that crippled or otherwise disabled soldiers who have returned from the scene of battle are being employed as motion picture operators, taking the places of union operators at reduced salaries. Now, this is a rather delicate subject to discuss. There is a halo of sanctity about the brow of the returned soldier, particularly when he has returned from a war of defence against aggression. There are, however, usually a good many things to be considered when one is examining any one particular proposition. It is quite true that the returning soldier, who comes back broken in health or crippled, must either become a direct burden upon society for all the rest of his life, or must be placed in some employment which his physical disability will not render prohibitive. Unfortunately for the motion picture operator, motion picture operating offers, to some extent, exactly that sort of employment.

During the past months of the European horror the very flower of the manhood of the British Empire has been reduced to a bloody pulp by the cannon of the enemy, or sent back in a patched up, crippled condition after meeting the withering fire of that marvelously wonderful help to civilization, the machine gun. These men went forth because they were fired with the zeal of patriotism. They imperiled their lives presumably to defend those who stayed at home, among whom may be numbered Canadian theatre managers. My view may be perverted, but it does seem to me that if these crippled soldiers are to displace motion picture machine operators it is not acting the part of loyalty to take advantage of their condition by offering them less money than they would have to pay a normal man for the same service. Mind you, I don't presume to advise as to what should be done as to the employment of these crippled soldiers. That is a matter which belongs entirely to the people of Canada. I do feel, however, that the displacement of present labor in favor of lower priced labor cannot fail to operate not only as against the motion picture industry as a whole, but against the British Empire. It is a step backwards, and one must carefully remember that this proposed reduction comes at a time when the prices of the necessities of life are soaring to the skies.

In conclusion, I would like to add that the fact that a man is a crippled soldier cannot justify his taking a position as motion picture machine operator unless he is possessed of proper and adequate knowledge of projection. If he does so, then the people are going to suffer in a good many ways, not the least of which will be the evil effect upon the eyes of the community due to improper knowledge on the part of the operator. If the returning crippled soldier is physically able to do the work, is competent to do the work (a competent operator) and receives the same remuneration paid the man whom he is to displace, then there can be, it seems to me, no legitimate protest against his employment. He went forth to protect his country, and certainly is entitled to any reasonable favor which can be shown him upon his return. I for one, however, could never, under any consideration, sanction the employment of returning soldiers in the operating room except they be competent operators, any more than I would sanction their employment as locomotive engineers if they possessed no experience as such.

Asbestos Ring Condenser Holder.

Several inquiries have been received by this department asking our opinion as to a condenser holder now being put out by the Baird Machine Company. I have examined this casing, which consists of a heavy cast metal weight, to which a smaller metal ring and two moulded asbestos rings (they seem to be moulded, though perhaps they are cut out) are attached, the two latter holding the condenser, which, by this arrangement, is allowed to expand or contract at will. Tis holder will not, in my opinion, deliver the goods so far as breakage be concerned. My reason for this conclusion is found in the fact that the principle itself is wrong. In my judgment the only holder which will prevent, or at least very largely reduce condenser breakage, is a holder in which the lens comes into direct and even contact with the metal, the amount of metal being carefully calculated so that the thin edge of the lens and the metal ring will heat up precisely as fast as does the thick center of the lens. Free expansion and contraction is not what is needed in this case, and, moreover, it tends to produce breakage. Even expansion is the need, and that is the secret of the success of the Preddy and Elbert holders. They supply a heat reservoir which brings about an even heating of the whole lens. The amount of metal must, however, be carefully computated, because if you get too much metal, then the effect will be the reverse, and the edge of the lens will heat up more slowly than the center, thus setting up precisely the same trouble in the opposite direction. It therefore follows that a different holder is necessary for a lens of short focal length, say 6½ inches, and one of very long focal length—say nine or ten inches.

One Thousand Foot Reels.

We are informed that the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity has been agitating the passage of a law prohibiting the use of more than 1000 feet of film in a projector at one time. The Department has not, as yet, however, secured its passage, nor do I believe it will. Such a law would, I think, serve no good purpose, and would add an unnecessary burden to theater managers and operators. Whereas I don't believe it is best to place more than 2000 feet on a reel, still there is really no very serious reason why this should not be increased to 3000. The only two important arguments which can be made against the 3000-foot reel are that in case of fire you might have 3000 feet of film ruined instead of one or two thousand, and that it requires considerable more take-up tension to handle the large reel than the small one. But with modern take-up tensions this latter does not constitute a serious objection.

The things in favor of the large reel are: first, the fact that in changing-over from one machine to the other most theaters burn both arcs for a period varying from one to three minutes, which consumes considerable additional current and carbon; also the number of theaters in which the change-over is made without perceptible effect on the screen are comparatively few, therefore the less change-overs the better. Another argument is that it very considerably lessens the labor of the operator. It is very much less trouble to thread up once than it is to thread up two or three times; also it is less trouble to rewind a 3000-foot reel than it is to rewind three 1000-foot reels. This department has heretofore opposed the 3000-foot reel, although it approved of the 2000-footer. We have, however, been doing considerable investigation, as a result of which the writer cannot see that there is any really serious objection to the use of even as much as 3000 feet to the reel. Operating rooms are fireproof, and in case of fire a 3000-foot reel would not do any more damage, except as to the relative value of the film itself, than would the burning of a 1000-foot reel.

Road Show.

The publication of the following has been long delayed. I won't offer any excuses. We just simply could not get to it. Harry Bowman, Jr., Greensboro, N. C., under date of April 8th, says:

My "Bible," the Moving Picture World, arrived today. We're surprised to see the picture of our outfit therein. You ask for description of same, so here goes, with the hope that it will interest some brother show man, and possibly be of benefit. We have a khaki tent, not a black top, 35 x 75 feet, with a 10-foot sidewalk. Top is trimmed in red, and the poles are painted yellow and red. Have twenty-five folding benches, fifty folding chairs, two sets of reserves with backs, and two sets of circus blues. We have a 10 x 16-foot stage, lit with acetylene in towns where there is no juice. The machine is an Edison Exhibition Model, but we keep it in perfect repair, so that it is as good as many of the later models used. I find it better for traveling purposes, as it is not so delicate. It sure has stood some hard knocks, but is still in the ring, and projecting as good picture as any traveling show, with the exception of Lyman Howe. We own our own film, and haven't a reel but that is in better shape than when we bought it. I keep all mis-frames and broken sprocket holes out, and keep the films clean with a simple cleaner I have made by sawing a block of wood in two, hingeing the two parts together and tacking flannel or felt to the inside of the two halves. The film passes between the flannel and most of the dirt remains right there on the cloth.

Our show consists of three reels and three acts of vaudeville, changing every night for a week, and staying for two weeks if the town is good. This cuts down moving expenses. We carry a number of feature pictures, and play the smaller towns, as there is more money there, though the people are harder to please. Have had a number of queer experiences, but you doubtless could not spare space to tell them. One is, however, too good to keep. In a certain town in Virginia a near-operator, who had, according to his own statement, worked all the large towns in the U. S., and belonged to several unions, though at the time I met him he was resting, took it upon himself to criticise my projection. He told me what was wrong with my light when the exciter was not working good at the lighting plant and the current was erratic. He said: "Your arc short-circles the gellerater at the rearystackle and kills the current." What's the answer?

In closing will say that we use calcium gas when we can't get current, which is most of the time. Have just purchased a Bliss Oxy-Hydro-Cet outfit which seems to be all that is claimed for it, though we haven't had a chance to try it out thoroughly as yet, as we have not showed since receiving it. The tests made, however, seem to be very satisfactory. I want to get one of the new Handbooks as soon as I get to work, and, by the way, we have one of the best advertising devices of the day, viz: an electric Unafono which has been advertised in the columns of the World. It is something no small show has and we are proud of it. What it takes to make a full size man-grown noise the Unafone possesses.

All of which is interesting and is passed along, without comment, for the benefit of other road show men.

Measuring Lenses.

An Albany, N. Y., operator writes:

Some time ago an operator gave me a lens concerning which I know nothing, except that it is made by A. Dariot, Paris, France. Have looked all over the lens barrel, but can find no marking except S° III, and the trade-mark. If you can tell me what the size and throw of this lens is I will appreciate it very much, or tell me what to do to ascertain the focal length of the lens.

You will find full directions for measuring lenses on page 104 of the Handbook, with diagram explaining the methods employed. I, however, very much doubt your having a Handbook, as I don't believe there are more than two or three Albany operators who have copies, the men of your city being, as a whole, decidedly non-progressive. For your benefit I give the following: Pin an ordinary sheet of letter paper to the wall of some room, preferably one having only one window. Open the window and, holding the lens with its rear end (end which goes toward the film) toward the paper and about six or eight inches away from it, move it back and forth until some distant object outside of the window is sharply focused on the letter paper. Then measure the exact distance from the letter paper to a point midway between the two combinations of the lenses. This measurement will be the equivalent focus of the lens. Having the equivalent focus of the lens, you can determine very nearly the size of picture it will project at a given distance, as follows: Multiply the distance from lens to screen, less the equivalent focus of the lens, by the precise width of the machine aperture, and divide this product by the equivalent focus of the lens. For example: Let L be distance from lens to screen, say 40 feet, or 480 inches; let 15/16 equal the width of aperture, and let us suppose the E. F. of the lens to be 5 inches. Width of picture will then equal $15/16 \times 475$ $(480 - 5) \div 5$, which would equal approximately 7 feet. You might be able to dispose of your lens to one of the exchanges in your city. A more accurate method is to place the lens in your machine and project the white light. Then, using a tape line, measure width of ray, say 6 feet, and 10 feet from the lens. The difference in these measurements divided by 4 will give you the precise spread of the ray per foot of throw.

A Remarkable Demonstration.

On Friday, July 21st, at the request of the Sabo Manufacturing Company, New York City, the writer visited the Schuyler theater and the Eighty-First Street theater, both on Broadway near Eighty-second street, and there witnessed a truly remarkable demonstration, not only of the value of the lens which that company will presently place on the market, but also of the correctness of the conclusions this department and its editor arrived at by and through the experiments in light rays, and by and through the assistance of Brother Griffiths, Armstrong and Deutsch and others. The test certainly was an absolutely fair one, because there was an ammeter on each lamp, and each machine projected white light to half of the screen, the other half of its aperture being covered with a metal plate. In both instances, with precisely the same amperage on both machines, that portion of the screen covered by the new lens appeared at least 25 per cent, and some of the spectators estimated it at 50 per cent. brighter; also the light tone was purer and whiter. At the Schuyler, particularly, until the light from the new lens was thrown on the screen, the old lens seemed to be giving beautiful illumination. I myself remarked to the inventor of these lenses: "You'll have to go some to beat that, old man." Well, he very promptly "went some," while the editor stood there with his mouth open, taking it all in.

Mr. B. K. Bimberg, owner of the Schuyler, is also owner of five other theaters. He was enthusiastic, and promptly informed me he was going to put the new lens into all six houses just as quickly as he could get them. Mr. A. Buitekauk is operator at the Schuyler. He, too, was highly pleased with the performance of the lenses.

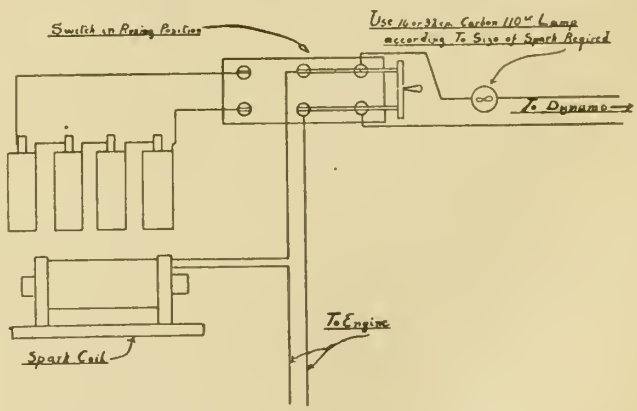
At the Eighty-First Street theater, Mr. A. L. Shackman, manager and owner; I. A. Lobel, operator, the test was almost equally satisfactory. The Eighty-First Street theater is a commodious house; also its operating room was one of the neatest I have ever seen. It is 9x12 feet in size, with a 10-foot ceiling and a 14-inch vent flue in which is an exhaust fan. The floor is carpeted and the whole room scrupulously clean. There are two Powers Six B machines, and both at the Eighty-First Street theater and the Schuyler the arcs are handled by arc controllers and at the back wall of the room sets a Fort Wayne A. C. to D. C. compensare, enclosed by a wire netting cage, painted black, on the cover of which is spread white oil cloth, and on this oil cloth Brother Lobel has his tools arranged. The only possible criticism of this room is that the observation ports are not as large as they should be, and the walls are not painted black. Between the two machines stands the spot light, used with vaudeville acts. Friend Lobel is to be complimented on the neatness of his room. Friend Shackman, manager-owner, is a live wire, up to date exhibitor, who is willing to go the limit to get good projection, and I am told that with the assistance of Brother Lobel he gets it. Brother Tom Costello witnessed the demonstration with us, and on our way down town informed me that the projection at the Eighty-First Street theater was literally beautiful.

Minusa Removes to New Factory.

The Minusa Cine Products Company has removed their factory and offices to No. 2665-69 Morgan street. While I have not seen the new plant, I am told it is very complete, and strictly up to date, containing 28,800 square feet of floor surface.

Must Go South.

F. N. Irwin, Sherman, Texas, says:



We are having quite a time with our films, but the exchange is co-operating with us, and I believe we will get it fixed up before long. Would much rather remedy this evil through the exchanges than through the department, and thus leave the space to something else. I have read with interest the reports of your trips, and assure you that if the opportunity ever presents I will hear the lecture even though I should have to travel far to do so. Certainly if it is worth your time to go over the country and deliver the lecture, it must be worth my time to listen to it. Do you think you will ever get to the Southland? If you do and don't come to the Lone Star State you will be the loser, and I imagine "the boys" will feel pretty sore.

Yes, I expect to be south next winter, and while I have not the list here, as I remember it Houston is one of my stops, therefore I hope and expect to have the pleasure of meeting Brother Irvin. No, I would not even dream of going south without visiting Texas, because I lived in the Lone Star State, at Palestine, Houston and Beaumont, for almost two years. Moreover I have an abiding admiration for Texas men, and in that state I have many business and personal friends.

Engine Firing.

E. L. Le Brun, Ottawa, Canada, says:

It gives me pleasure to supply Mr. F. H. Gray, of Wellington, Colo., the information he asks for in issue of June 17, regarding the firing of a kerosene engine from the mains of an ordinary lighting dynamo in order to save batteries. Friend Grey does not say whether his engine is fired by spark-plug or make-and-brake contact. The engine being run on kerosene, however, it is more than likely the latter, in which case the enclosed wiring diagram will do the trick. The incandescent lamp is for the purpose of limiting current flow, and care should be taken to use the smallest size lamp that will do the work, in order not to injure or destroy the firing contacts. Should the firing be by means of the spark-plug system, I shall be glad to forward wiring diagram to suit. An induction coil is made up of two or three pounds of about No. 12 magnet wire, wound on a ¾-inch by 6-inch long iron wire core. Owing to high percentage of free carbon, the spark-plug system does not operate very well on kerosene engines. For the information of all concerned, the make-and-break contact system, of which I have spoken, consists of two platinum contacts, located inside the cylinder, well insulated from one another, and so operated that they open and close the circuit with a very quick break.

All of which is passed along to Brother Grey, and others to whom it may be of value. I would suggest, however, that the spark-plug diagram would be quite acceptable if Neighbor Le Brun will kindly supply it.

Optical Center.

George Raymond, St. Louis, Mo., propounds the following:

Is the optical center of the lens always between the two surfaces of the lens?

No, it is not. To find the optical center of a meniscus lens you would first measure the curves of the lens, and then make a circle of such diameter that its periphery would fit the surface of the lens. In the meniscus lens, which we take for example, we would draw two circles, as per accompanying sketch, one to fit the concave and one the convex surface. From the center of these two circles marked AA, draw lines BB, which must be exactly parallel to each other, let one line extend to the concave, and the other to the convex surface, and then draw line C as shown. The optical center of the lens will be at D.

Light Trouble.

E. D. Kiddoo of the Nebraska Conservation and Welfare Commission, Lincoln, Neb., writes as follows:

> You have been recommended to me as an authority on motion picture projection. I therefore wish to ask you a few questions. Our machine is a Power's Six mechanism with a Six A lamphouse, mounted on a wood base so that it is portable. We meet most all conditions as regards current, length of throw, etc. Lenses are 2, 2½ and 3 inch, and we are at present using 7½ and 6½ inch condensers. We have been having a great deal of trouble with blue ghosts in the field. The maximum distance from the condenser nearest the aperture and the aperture plate is 18 inches. We use ⅝ inch Columbia cored carbons, adjusted about as per sketch, the current being alternating. The condensers are about ¼ inch apart, and the distance from the crater to the condenser is from 2½ to 3 inches. When the arc is moved back in the lamphouse so as to eliminate the blue ghost the field is not well covered in the corners. Are the carbons set right for A. C.? Are the condensers of the right size and distance apart? For example: Using a 3 inch lens at 100 feet, what size picture would be projected, and in what position should the lamphouse and arc be to cover the field well, and eliminate the blue spots? Have you tables showing these things? In setting carbons what have you found to be the best way to arrange them for A. C.? For D. C.? Is there any difference? And now as tothe shutter. Should one use a three or two wing shutter with A. C.? With D. C.? In timing the shuter should the wide blade just cover the lens when the intermittent begins to move, or should it be two-thirds or one-half of the way across? Do you know of any belt, leather or otherwise, which will successfully operate the take-up when using 2000 foot reels? We are having trouble in that a tight belt pulls out the lower loop when the 2000 foot reel is about two-thirds through, and if too loose it does not take it up. Do you know of any company which puts out a good cloth screen that can be folded and carried around, and one which has no seams in it? This screen should be 12x15 feet at least and should be heavy enough to work well out doors without any background. No doubt these questions seem simple to you, but the solution of some of the problems would help us in our work.

No, the questions you present, Brother Kiddoo, are not at all simple. In fact, it has in the past cost a great amount of labor and money to ascertain the correct answers to some of them. To answer these questions fully and intelligently would require at least six pages of this department. I therefore trust you will not feel that I am trying to force you to buy a Handbook when I do the only thing I really can do, viz: refer you to the answers to your questions as set forth in the new 720 page Handbook, price $4.00, from the Moving Picture World. First: I would refer you to "Carbon Setting," pages 290 to 302, inclusive. I would refer you especially to Figure 123, page 295; Figure 124, page 297, and Figure 126, page 300; also I would recommend that you carefully study the text matter. You are using the antiquated, out-of-date jack-knife set, with which it is utterly impossible to secure steady light. With the set as shown in Figure 126 you will not get quite so bright a light, but you will get a steadier light after you have learned to handle it, and the brilliance can be secured by increasing the amperage. It is possible that a part of the discoloration you speak of is due to the set you are using.

As to the lens proposition, I would refer you to pages 113 to 146, inclusive, and particularly to Table 1, page 141, which gives you all the data you ask for. It will be impossible for me to tell you what condensers you want, and what distance you need between lamphouse and film without knowing the back focus of the objective and its exact diameter. As to the distance between the condensers, the altering of the distance between the lenses operates to change the E. F. of the condenser. Except in special instances, where it is necessary to change the E. F. of the condenser without having the proper lenses to do it, I would recommend that the two condensing lenses be placed so there is not more than 1-16 of an inch between the apex of their curved surfaces.

As to the two or three-wing shutter, you will find that fully dealt with on pages 469 to 476 inclusive. If you will note the number of pages of the book included in each one of these topics you will see why I could not possibly answer all this intelligently in the department. If there is not more than the ordinary lost motion in the gears of the machine the shutter should be set so that it covers about two-thirds of the lens when the intermittent is just on the point of moving. I would also recommend that you examine Figure 63a and Figure 145 of the Handbook, together with the text matter on page 146, and thus learn how to find the proper distance to set the shutter from the lens.

There should be no trouble with your take-up belt pulling out the loop with a 2000 foot reel, two-thirds rewound, and if there is trouble such as you set forth it ought to occur right at the beginning of the run. It seems to me as though the spindle of the take-up which carries the lower reel is not properly lubricated. Better take it out,, examine it, and see if there is anything wrong with the bearing.

As regards the cloth screen, I am not sure, but I believe the J. H. Genter Company, Newburgh, N. Y., can supply you with a cloth screen of the width you seek; also possibly the Mirror Screen Company, Shelbyville, Ind., can. It is also possible you may get it from the Minusa Cine Products Company, 2665 Morgan street, St. Louis, Mo., but outside of those three places I don't personally know of anywhere else you can secure cloth of a greater width than 108 inches, which latter is carried in stock by most large department stores. You can, of course, obtain a Mirroroide, a Minusa, or any of the patent metallic surface screens of that width which may be rolled up and carried along, though they cannot be folded.

Now, Friend Kiddoo, please remember that I would be glad to answer all this through the department if it were practical to do so. The thing you need, however, is the Handbook. Send $4.00 to the Moving Picture World, 17 Madison avenue, New York City, and it will be sent you at once.

An Interesting Letter.

W. H. Booker, Chief of Bureau, North Carolina State Board of Health, Raleigh, N. C., writes:

> First of all, I wish to thank you for calling our attention to your most excellent Handbook for Managers and Operators. I think I have read everything in that book that applies to our outfit, and part of it I have read several times. I have also had our lecturer and operator read it, and I wish to assure you that it is of tremendous assistance to us in our work. I have also written to the Wallace Golden Rule Shows, at Red Oak, Iowa, and have received two of the most courteous, helpful letters imaginable. I think it is a hit unfortunate that some of our friends in the moving picture business seem to think they have a corner on the information in regard to moving pictures, but not so with such men as are back of the Wallace Golden Rule Shows. They do not hesitate to show their hand and offer assistance in every way, shape and form. As I wrote you in a previous letter, our outfit is equipped with a generator set made by the Universal Motor Company of Oshkosh, Wis. The generator has a capacity of 50 amperes at 60 volts D. C., and by using ⅝ inch cored and ½ solid carbons, and a Power's Road equipment we have been successful, in our own opinion, in securing a fairly satisfactory picture on the screen. Ordinarily, in little country school houses, we use a ten foot standard muslin screen, although we have a sixteen foot screen for larger halls. I should like to ask your opinion with regard to the matter of resistance in series with the arc. At present we are using two grids from a Power's grid rheostat, and these two grids we have located in a Studebaker car and pass the current through them in parallel or in multiple, after which the current goes through either a 35 foot piece of No. 8 stage cable, or a 65 foot piece of No. 4 stage cable, or a combination of the two, depending upon the distance we have to locate the car from the projection machine. We very rarely have to use both pieces of cable except where the hall is on the second floor. The manufacturers of our engine generator set recommend using the outfit without rheostat in series. Neither do we use the field rheostat with the generator. The current for the field is taken directly off the armature, although it would be readily possible to install a rheostat for the field if it were necessary. Would you recommend dispensing with our two grids, or making some other combination, or what would be your advice in regard to a ballast or steadying resistance in series with the arc. We have been having some little trouble breaking condensers, but I have recently ordered one of the Preddy mounts. Sometimes in very small schoolhouses where we have to use a 3 inch projection lens, we find that we are scarcely able to get over a 4x6 picture, and in a great majority of cases we are scarcely able to get over a 4x6 picture, and in a great majority of cases we find that a 10-foot picture would be amply large. It has occurred to me that we might, in all probability, be able to use a ½-inch cored carbon with very good results in such cases. Don't you think such a carbon would be ample large? If, in your judgment, a smaller carbon would be satisfactory, please advise me where they can be secured. I should like to ask your opinion in regard to an asbestos booth. I note the Howe shows use an asbestos cloth arrangement over a metal frame. We are endeavoring to travel just as light as possible and, in fact, we already have our Studebaker car very much overloaded. I should like very much to cut the weight of our equipment down materially, but, of course, we do not wish to seriously endanger anyone, and, as a rule, it is necessary to locate the machine in the back part of the room with the moving picture machine between the greater part of the audience and the door. I shall greatly appreciate an expression from you with regard to your opinion as to the danger of such an arrangement, and whether or not, in your judgment, an asbestos booth should be installed. We have an automatic fire trap on the Power's road equipment; also the usual fire traps on the upper and lower magazines, and, furthermore, we have clamped a Pyrene fire extinguisher on the back legs of the machine.

With reference to the matter of traveling about over the country as light as possible, and having in view the fact that our entertainment is frequently given to audiences of from 1 0 to 200, I should like to ask if, in your opinion, we could operate some standard machine such as, say, the Power's road equipment, using acetylene burners or prest-o-lite instead of the arc. Of course in such cases we would expect to use a mirroroide screen, and do everything else to conserve all the light possible. We would probably add the bi-convex condensers, and reflectors such as are ordinarily installed in connection with such gas burners. It has occurred to me that if such an outfit could be rigged up, so that we could project a picture, say, not over 8 or 9 or perhaps 10 feet wide, we might be able to operate such an outfit with one man and with a Ford machine instead of a Studebaker, and at much less expense than the outfit we are now using.

Again, I have been considering the matter of endeavoring to use a small lighting plant, which I understand is now being placed on the market and which has a capacity of about 750 watts at 32 volts. It occurred to me that such an outfit might perhaps be used in connection with storage batteries using, say, a 1,000 watt nitrogen lamp, or perhaps by using the outfit direct it might be operated successfully with a 750 watt lamp. I have seen small pictures projected fairly satisfactorily with a 500 watt lamp, using 110 volts. The difficulty with this outfit, however, would be that it weighs about 250 pounds as against perhaps 50 or 75 pounds for the prest-o-lite gas tank, and as against 625 pounds for our present engine generator set.

You are doubtless familiar with the little Pathescope which I understand is finding its way quite generally into the public schools of the country, and this little outfit, I am advised, uses about 2½ amperes at 14 volts, or in the neighborhood of 35 watts, and projects a picture 4½x6 feet. We could not think of using the Pathescope for the reason that we could not get satisfactory films for it, but it occurred to me that perhaps some way might be found whereby we could use a standard machine and a gas lighting outfit which would greatly lighten our traveling outfit. Please pardon the length of this letter, but in conclusion I wish to send you the regards of Mr. L. C. Wallace, who asked me to kindly remember him to you, and I also wish to take this further opportunity of telling you that I hear very favorable comments in regard to you personally and with regard to the work you are doing at practically all the moving picture theaters we visit, in connection with this and other work about over the state. If you care for photographs, or any further information with regard to our outfit, and our method of operating it, I shall be very glad to send them to you.

My dear sir, it is unfortunate that so many of the moving picture fraternity seem to wish to establish and maintain a corner on information. It goes without saying that the Wallace Golden Rule Road Shows are not going to lose anything by helping you, any more than you would lose something by helping someone else. I never was a believer in every hog for himself and the devil take the bind hog. I like to help others, the same as I like to be helped when I need it. You will note the name "Wallace Golden Rule Road Shows." Well, that is exactly what the "Golden Rule" stands for, and I am glad to see that Brother Wallace is living up to the name. There are so few who even think of doing it.

As to the use of the grid rheostat, I could not offer you any intelligent advice without being right there on the ground and examining the outfit. If the manufacturers of the outfit recommend you to use it without rheostats in series with the arc, why try it out and see what happens. If you find it works better that way, use it; if you find it does not, then put your resistance back in. It is quite possible, always provided the generator is built for that kind of service, that you can handle the arc fairly well without any resistance in series. Your No. 8 stage cable is too small. I would recommend that you displace it in favor of No 6. It is particularly too small when used in conjunction with the 65 feet of No. 4, although the No. 4 is of ample size. But in any event, I would suggest that the No. 8 be changed for No. 6, or if you don't want to do that, use the No. 4 all the time and use the No. 8 when you have an especially long throw; but place it at the end of the No. 4; that is to say, between the end of the No. 4 and the lamp, and not between the generator and the No. 4.

Yes, you can use a ½-inch cored carbon to good advantage, provided you are not pulling more than 25 amperes of current, and if you do that I would use a ⅜-inch solid carbon below—not the ordinary solid carbon such as is used in street lighting, but the kind you buy from motion picture supply houses. The street lighting carbons are too hard. Above 25 amperes I would recommend ⅝ cored above with ½ inch solid below, and above 40 amperes I would recommend ¾ cored above with ⅝ inch solid below. You can get them from Ludwig Hommell & Co., Philadelphia. See their advertisement on another page.

I am not acquainted with the type of booth Lyman Howe uses, therefore could not give you an intelligent answer. I am sure, however, if you write Mr. Walkenshaw, general manager for Lyman Howe, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., tell him I referred you to him, and ask him for details as regards the asbestos booth he is using, he would accommodate you with the information desired. As to the advisability of the asbestos operating room under the conditions named, why, if there should be a fire it might save the building from burning down; also it might have some slight effect in allaying the tendency to panic, though, of course, unless a vent pipe of dimension which would be impossible under the conditions, were to be installed, nothing could prevent the smoke from pouring into the auditorium. I think, my dear Mr. Booker, you are just as capable of judging on the value of asbestos operating rooms, under these conditions as I am. One thing is certain, however: I would either have an asbestos booth, or I would not have anything around the machine at all. So far as the audience itself is concerned, I do not believe there would be any great amount of difference in safety with or without the asbestos booth, always provided there be no adequate vent pipe for the escape of smoke.

No, I could not recommend acetylene burners or prest-o-lite but you might get by fairly well by using a small picture, a semi-reflective screen, and a dark room with Oxy-Hydro-Cet Light, or a Model B gas-making outfit, using Gull Pastile in place of limes. You can obtain full information with regard to these various things, including prices, by addressing either the Picture Theater Equipment Company, 1651 Broadway, or J. H. Hallberg, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City. I would, however, prefer to rig up a small dynamo attached to the Ford engine. I think Mr. Hallberg can fix you up with a generator which will give you very satisfactory results when mounted on your Ford car and belted to the engine. This arrangement would be easier to handle, and would be far superior to gas. I must apologize for the length of Mr. Booker's letter, but I believe our readers will find it interesting, moreover, it tends to show to what extent the states themselves are going into the moving picture propaganda work.

A Little Peeved.

Jack W. Fau, Sydney Mines, N. S., replies to Question 144, and says:

> I am a little peeved because I cannot hear your lecture on projection, for I know very well you will not get away up here in Cape Breton. This is the most easterly point on the continent, but I am sure we could give you a good time if you came, but the roads are—well, I don't swear, and ordinary language is too weak. Why do you not have your lecture put in print for the benefit of those who are not able to hear you? I think you would be surprised if you saw our theater. The operating room is 14x9 with a 21-inch vent, and two windows to the outside air. Two Powers' Six A machines with two economizers in multiple. Metal shelves, metal rewinding table and film cabinet. Observation ports 12 inches square. All films start in frame, because of a little device which I will describe as soon as I can make a drawing of it. The population of Sydney Mines is only 700, but we work on the theory that people in a small town are entitled to the best, and appreciate good things more than do their big city cousins.

And that is the right system to work on, Brother Fau—absolutely the right system. I would like to get up to Cape Breton, but I fear it is impossible. I may possibly go to Halifax, but I think not. I will, however, make St. John, N. B., and will try to get to the largest city in Nova Scotia, if possible. My daughter and I intend to leave Monday, the 24th, and this is the 21st. Between Quebec and Nova Scotia I don't know what we are going up against, but rather expect it will keep us extremely busy. For one thing I understand there is not much English spoken—nearly all French, and all the French I am master of is represented by a nice, little, straight ———. However, I never tackled anything I could not finish, so I guess I will finish this somehow or other, but for at least three weeks I won't have to read a letter, answer a letter, or a single question pertaining in any way, shape, manner or form to motion pictures, for which I am most devoutly thankful, because it is the first time in almost seven years, and I think it does any one good to break loose from the grind at least a couple of weeks in that length of time. Send in that descriptive—we need it in our business.

The Future of Motion Photography As a Profession (Continued).

Films will be made to fit certain courses of instruction by competent educators who will pursue well thought-out courses laid out in logical sequence along scientifically formulated lines. Such pictures will take up a subject from its beginning, pursuing all of its phases in the same manner that a text-book does at present, so that the student will have demonstrated before his eyes in a comprehensive manner the same things which he to-day digs out with repugnance from the dry-as-dust leaves of his dog-eared school books.

Even to-day with the enormous magnitude of the industry there are still many croakers and knockers who are ready to tell you that the motion picture has reached the crest of its popularity—that the public is becoming satiated, and that from now on will come the decline. They are all mistaken. Enormous as the business is—the fifth in importance in this country—it is still moving onward and upward. Rome was not built in a day, and with all its rapidity, the motion picture industry will not be revolutionized in an hour. Many of these things of which I have spoken may be a long ways in the dim future, but they, or some more magnificent manifestation which I am not able to perceive, are coming as surely as the sun rises in the east. And the worker who keeps his face to the east, and with unfaltering effort keeps abreast of the inevitable progress, must eventually reap his rich reward.

The Use of Color Filters in Cinematography.

The speed at which motion pictures are usually photographed is so great that the use of color filters is greatly restricted. In still photography, many beautiful effects may be recorded with the longer exposure that may be employed. These are not attainable to the cinematographer because the speed at which he must work does not permit him to get enough exposure to impress his film. In consequence, very little attention has been paid to the subject by the manufacturers of film or by the cinematographer himself. There is, however, within a much smaller range than in still photography, a region where we may obtain results with color filters in cinematography and greatly benefit thereby.

While the film ordinarily used in making negatives is not highly isochromatic, it is nevertheless somewhat sensitive to the yellow rays in the spectrum; and if we employ filters which will not be too deep in color so as to bring the exposure beyond the limit set by the motion camera, we are able to produce many pleasing effects.

There has been a great deal of literature written about the advantages of orthochromatic pictures although most of it has been in reference to still pictures. Ordinarily, the slight difference between the black and white picture which registers the image in values of blue light reflected from the object is not distinguishable to the ordinary untrained eye from that which registers in a scale comparable to what is termed "visual luminousity." This term is perhaps one which needs explanation. To the eye, the brightest color in the spectrum is yellow—but to the photographic print, blue is the lightest; consequently, when we photograph an object in which blue and yellow occur, the photograph will show the yellow as being very dark and the blue as very light—whereas to the human eye, the brilliance is reversed.

Isochromatic plates and films are those in which the sensitiveness of the emulsion to yellow light has been increased by the use of a dye which has the property of making the emulsion more sensitive to the lower range of the spectrum. This dye does not, however, reduce the blue sensitiveness to any great extent, nor does it increase the yellow sensitiveness enough to make the ratio of color brightness the same as it is to the human eye.

The color filter is a transparent substance either of colored glass or a combination of glass and colored gelatine, which absorbs certain colored rays of light and permits others to pass. A yellow filter, for instance, allows yellow light to pass through unobstructed. If it is of a light hue, it permits other colors to pass through also, but absorbs a large percentage of the other colors. On the other hand, if the color is deep, it absorbs that much greater, until at last we reach a point where all of the other colors except yellow are absorbed.

It is possible to prepare a filter which will absorb just enough of the blue light so that the action on the film is in the same ratio as the brilliance of the different colors to the human eye. This color, however, must be regulated so as to correspond with the sensitiveness of the emulsion to different colors. For instance, if we use an ordinary emulsion—one which is not of the order termed orthochromatic—we cannot obtain a record comparable to that of vision because such an emulsion is only sensitive to blue light. On the other hand, if we use an orthochromatic emulsion which has considerable sensitiveness to the yellow rays, we attain a very close approximation to visual luminosity.

It may be well to state here that even the ordinary emulsion is faintly sensitive to the entire range of the visible spectrum and also far into the ultra violet—the region beyond the violet end of the spectrum which is invisible to the human eye. This faint sensitiveness, however, is so small in comparison to the sensitiveness of the violet end that the ordinary emulsion is quite useless in obtaining orthochromatic effects, and this very slight sensitiveness may therefore be disregarded in any discussion relating to practical picture taking.

A great deal of nonsense has been written in regard to the care which must be taken in excluding or cutting out the ultra violet rays in orthochromatic photography. Most writers on the subject fail to take into account the fact that although ultra violet rays are the most actinic (that is, have the most action upon the ordinary photograph emulsion) they are almost always entirely absent under ordinary conditions. In the first place, the atmosphere is highly absorbent for the ultra violet rays and at sea level and ordinary altitudes, they are comparatively weak—although still strong enough to produce considerable effect on the emulsion if it were not for the fact that the glass used in making lenses is practically opaque to these rays. We will therefore dismiss them from further consideration.

It is not necessary that we go far into the laws governing color; it is sufficient to state that all white light is simply composed of three primary colors, i. e., red, yellow and blue. Color is simply caused by the blocking out of one or the other of these primaries in various proportions depending upon the hue.

It is far better and very much cheaper in the end to buy filters already prepared by competent makers than to use valuable time experimenting in the making of your own—the shortage of adequate dyes alone presenting at this time an almost insurmountable barrier.

The subject of the making of color filters is too long to be taken up here, although persons who may be interested in experimenting along these lines can find enough material in various text books on color to give them an endless variety to work upon.

It is also quite possible for workers to color-sensitize their own films; but almost superfluous at the present time to give directions for color sensitization, as it is practically impossible to obtain the proper dyes at any price. Should there be any readers of the present article interested in the subject, the writer will be glad to furnish the names of the best text books on the subject—with the warning that the price of the best dyes for color sensitization of photographic emulsion is at present over $600 an ounce.

The introduction of a color filter into the path of a light beam lengthens the necessary exposure simply by reason of the fact that the filter has absorbed or filtered out some of the rays which would otherwise have acted on the film. The percentage of light held back depends, of course, upon the absorption of the filter used.

It is plain, therefore, that not only will the exposure time be increased when the filter is used, but that the increase will vary according to the type of filter and the sensitiveness of the film used. The number of times that the exposure is increased over that required for the same object without the use of the color screen is called the multiplying factor of the filter. Since the filter invariably increases the exposure required, it becomes apparent that there are only a few filters which we can use in making motion pictures.

The question now arises "When and where should we use a filter?" Since the filter increases the exposure so greatly, we are limited to subjects which are strongly lighted. Exterior pictures in the sunlight are about the only ones which come within the limited range. They are fortunately the ones in which the filter may be used to the greatest advantage. In ordinary scenes out of doors where clouds in the sky add immensely to the beauty of the scene, it is seldom possible to render the difference between the white of the clouds and the bright blue light of the sky without under-exposing the other objects in the picture. If, however, we hold back the blue light of the former, using a light yellow filter, we can fully expose the objects in the foreground which normally reflect a large percentage of the yellow light and at the same time retard the blue light of the sky—and thereby obtain a harmonious rendering and at the same time show the fleecy contour of the clouds.

Music for the Picture

Musical Setting for "The Upheaval."

Released August 28, by the Metro Pictures Corporation.
Musical Suggestions by S. M. Berg.

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay, though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a consents to marry him on condition of a loan to her father, although the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 19¼ T "The next day" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 31 D "When Bear unfastens chain" is a description of action.

Jim Gordon publicly follows in his father's footsteps, as a corrupt political leader, but secretly decides to follow the straight path. Through his efforts the "Sanitary Bill" is passed, causing the financial ruin of Joan Madison's father. Joan, whose life has been saved by Jim, consents to marry him on condition of a loan to her father, although believing him a grafter. After a series of dramatic incidents, it is discovered that Jim is on the level and all ends well twixt Jim and Joan.

The character of action is a Modern Drama of oppressive Business Methods and the Reform Wave.

Note particularly: Guests dancing at 18½; Water effects at 26¾. and Allegro and Agitatos at 61¼ to close.

Time schedule: 73 minutes (5 reels—4,850 feet).

Further inquiries concerning any phase of this work should be addressed to Mr. S. M. Berg, Columbia Theatre Building.

How the Church Organist Can Become a Picture Player.

By S. M. Berg and Norman Stuckey.

At the present time there is an exceptionally large demand for competent organists for moving picture theaters. In this article, it is the aim of the writers to offer suggestions and proven practical information that will be of value to the church organist who is turning his efforts into this particularly remunerative field.

When playing an organ for moving pictures, it is essential that the church organist abandon the style of playing that resembles a church. Nearly all modern organs are equipped with an electric-pneumatic action and this feature is a distinct advantage over the old tracker action, as a greater variety of effects and combinations are made possible by the new type of instrument.

The action of an electric-pneumatic organ is as responsive as that of a piano, and one of the secrets of successful organ playing for moving pictures is to play the organ as nearly like a piano as possible. Many church organists rebel at this thought, but unless the church organ style of playing is entirely discarded much difficulty will be experienced in pleasing a moving picture theater audience.

Piano and orchestra training are valuable to the organist who wishes to become an expert picture player. Improvisation is also necessary, and the organist who is unable to improvise with ease should immediately take steps to improve himself along this line. It is not necessary to become a "faker," as many musicians in theaters are known. With time and study, the conscientious theater organist can develop an aptitude for instant changes and phases of music that are in keeping with the screen action. Discretion and common sense are also important factors for the church organist playing in a theater and the appropriate selection of suitable music for the film is interesting and highly profitable work.

Many church organists are under the impression that only popular songs and well known selections are in demand. In this respect they are mistaken, for many music lovers attend the picture theaters, and selections from the great masters, an excerpt from an opera, or a fragment from a symphony will often be recognized and appreciated. Do not lose sight of the fact that a picture audience comprises all classes. Therefore a great variety of music must be used to satisfy and please all.

Patrons of moving picture theaters object to much sustained music that makes the organ "sound like a church." Most people come to a theater to be entertained and this fact should not be forgotten by the theater organist, who, at all times, should make a feature of the lightest and most tuneful numbers available. Only in andante movements is it advisable to hold down the pedals for any length of time, but in waltzes 2-4 movements, the use of a staccato bass is advisable, and a semi-staccato accompaniment, which at all times must be clean and precise. Many organists experience much difficulty when playing a 2-4 movement rapidly, but if the pedals and the left hand are practiced alone until entirely independent of the right hand, a rapid 2-4 movement is possible on organs with an electric-pneumatic action. Waltzes are suitable for the organ and much screen action. When playing a waltz let your attack be similar to that of an orchestra. Do not drag it. Pick up the tempo and play in a brilliant style, much the same as a theater orchestra would play it. It is always advisable to play waltzes in strict concert style, excepting of course a valse lento or a minor waltz when the screen action requires a slow movement. The right hand, or melody, should usually be legato. The successful organist for moving pictures is a melody player and he will not overlook the works of Schubert, Haydn, Shumann, Brahms and other great masters.

Do not play pieces if the melody is covered by variations and other embellishments. While it may be appreciated by a few, the majority seldom understand and appreciate any music when they cannot recognize the melody. The average theater audience is not appreciative of technical difficulties. Simple, tuneful numbers are more pleasing. Intermezzos, novelettes and 4-4 numbers are always suitable for many scenes in moving pictures. An arpeggio accompaniment with the left hand, and a legato melody in the right hand is particularly effective for certain numbers when a bright, joyous scene is portrayed on the screen. Melodies on the lower register, with Cello, Clarinet, or Oboe stops, with fluto variations are exceilent for rural scenes, woodland seenes and waterfalls.

Tho open diapason when used as a solo stop, if not too loud, or used too frequentiy, is an effective combination used with sustained chords in the right hand, preferably in the treble. Tbe organist who can pedal well, in certain scenes can play a melody with bis feet and use both hands for variations. Flute combinations are always acceptable and reed effects fit mysterious scenes or action of impending danger.

Thirds and fifths are effective when played in slow waltzes and andante movements. Do not play thirds if you cannot play them clean and even. Piano practice will be found a great help and the turning under and changing of fingers at the piano will, to a certain extent, obviate much of the blur that is noticeable when the thirds and fifths are used. It is advisable to use soft effects when playing thirds and fifths.

Popuiar songs are acceptable to a theater audience, but do not featuro them. Vary your program with selections from the light operas and grand operas. As mucb expression and phrasing are necessary when playing an organ for moving pictures, it is necessary to do much pedaling with the left foot. The picture organist must always be alert and ready for sudden changes of scene that require loud or soft effects. He must be familiar with tbe crescendo pedal and ready to use it instantly. Full organ is necessary for fire scenes, fights, marches, pageants, etc.

Much phrasing can be done with the swell pedal, but it must be used carefully at all times. Many organists use the swell pedal as a foot exercise without regard to its effect. Care should be taken to avoid this unmusicianly habit. When playing a melody on the Swell Organ, your accompaniment on the Great Organ should be a shade lighter than the combinations used on the Swell. The same rule applies when the melody is played on the Great Organ. It is advisable to play on the same manual with both hands, for plaintive scenes, church scenes, also for a mob scene and when full organ is required.

By not playing on the same manual witb both hands, you obviate the church effect, which, if played for any length of time is extremely monotonous to the average listener. Experiment with the various combinations until you know what is the most effective and pleasing to your audience. Church organists, taking up this new work, should lay aside all church music until they have developed the style of playing that is required for interpreting moving pictures. Many organists, confronted with the problem of improvising find difficulty in selecting enough suitablo music to depict the action on the screen. A perusal of the catalogs of the various publisbers will convince ambitious organists that there is no dearth of appropriate music. Good judgment and good taste are important factors when selecting a suitable musical setting for a film drama.

A knowledge of piano and orchestra music is helpful, especially the piano accompaniment. The violin part is usually cued in above the accompaniment. Here you have practically music arranged for organ, the three lines, and witb a little ingenuity and practice you can get the same results and sometimes better effects than you would from regular organ music. Many piano numbers can be used for organ, especially tbose witbout too many variations or embellisbments.

When applying for a position as organist, don't be too anxious to show the manager of the theater how clever you are in rendering scales. Don't play pieces that are tecbnically difficult. Nine out of ten times they will not be appreciated. Play music that is tuneful in character. Then your success is assured. When you have succeeded in pleasing the public, then bring your organ solos, Bach, Widor, Guilimant, and others, and gradually work them into certain scenes in the pictures.

In conclusion—Remember that an Organist, Pianist, or Musician is a Professional Man, having a code of Honor and Morals different from the Business World. Strive at all times to give pleasure to your audience. Satisfy yourself that you are doing your Best. Earnestly try to realize your faults and correct them. By so doing, a reputation will be assured you of being a Sincere, Earnest Musician and Gentleman.

What Goes in South Africa

Correspondent from Bulawayo Tells What Pictures are Popular in Far Away Land

Bulawayo Club, Bulawayo, Rhodesia, South Africa, July 14, 1916.

The Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—Although I am not in the film trade, being merely a "movie fan," I thought I would drop you a few lines to let you know what an enthusiastic reader of your paper I am.

I have never missed taking your paper for the last two years, although lately, of course, they have been very irregular in arriving owing to the war, but as I usually receive a batch of about four at a time, it helps a little to make up for lost time.

I think it is a splendid paper and always straight to the point and quite candid in its criticisms.

This is quite a small town, with a population of about 4,000 people, which manages to keep two Bioscopes going, both run by the African Theaters Trust, with pictures changed three times a week, and must say for the part of the world we are in, get some splendid features, in fact practically all the big American features come direct to this town from Cape Town.

One theater is run at 1 shilling admission, with piano only (rather monotonous), and the other at 2 shillings and 1 shilling, with a full (?) orchestra of five. My heart aches to hear the lovely music and see those pictures at your Rialto and Strand theaters, about which I have read such a lot in your paper.

Of course the supreme favorite here is Charles Chaplin, it always being a full house when any of his films are shown. All the Essanay Chaplins have been screened here up to date, except "Carmen," so we are eagerly looking forward to the next batch.

All the big Griffith features have been here, as well as the big Ince feature, "The Wrath of the Gods."

The Keystones, once so popular here, have absolutely fallen flat lately, as they seem to have been reserving all their good stuff for the Triangle programs. The short subject Keystones shown here lately have hardly raised a smile, which is a pity, as when the good ones come along nobody will be attracted by the name of Keystone, which was the best drawing card six months ago.

The L-Ko comedies take very well here and I think they turn out some very funny stuff, although, of course, Billie Ritchie is not nearly such a favorite as Chaplin.

Of course the war has affected the business very much here, although the Bioscopes manage to keep going, with an occasional change when we are treated to a visiting dramatic or musical company.

Well, make what use you like of this letter, trusting it has not bored you too much.

Wishing you every success with the continuance of your paper, hoping you will never cut off my little supply of "one" to Rodesia, I am, dear sir,

Yours faithfully,

J. WALLIS.

"VISITING STAR" SYSTEM INTRODUCED BY HEARST.

William Randolph Hearst has decided to introduce into the motion picture the system of "visiting stars" that was years ago such a pronounced success in the great dramatic stock companies in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco and other cities. These "visiting stars" will appear in the various episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax" and other of the serials of the International Film Service.

Betty Howe was the first of the "visiting stars" selected to appear with Harry Fox and Grace Darling in "Beatrice." The experiment was such a decided success that Mr. Hearst decided to continue it in the other episodes. To that end Miss Mary Cranston, one of the most beautiful women in the country, and winner of a number of beauty contests, has been especially engaged. She will make her first appearance with Harry Fox and Grace Darling in the seventh episode of "Beatrice Fairfax," "A Name for a Baby."

Other prominent screen favorites will be added to the cast of "Beatrice Fairfax" later on, although in every episode Harry Fox will be the principal star, with Grace Darling ranking next in stellar honors.

MARGARET ANGLIN'S FIRST PICTURE.

In her first venture into the realm of motion pictures, Miss Margaret Anglin will use as a vehicle a filmatization of Maxim Gorky's great play, "The Chosen People." It is a powerful story and well suited for adaptation to the silent drama. In it are many strong scenes, and most of them will call for all the cunning at stagecraft of Arthur Voegtlin, the advisory director of the Margaret Anglin Picture Corporation, and the technical director, Livingston Platt, who are already at work on the elaborate costumes and the scenic effects. One of the chief scenes is laid in an ancient Russian street, of which there is no counterpart in this country, and the entire street, houses and all, will be constructed for the photoplay.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS

PARTIAL SURVEY OF EDUCATIONALS.

THERE appear to be just two large divisions into which all films may be grouped. Stories, in which personal relationship are developed; educationals, in which other values are presented. One does not have to see many reels screened before he realizes that the two classes are not sharply separated by any tangible boundary. Under such circumstances it is easy for a surveyor of the field to range at will, but even so the task of making a comprehensive and thorough survey is extremely difficult. I shall here merely sketch the lay of the land.

TOPICAL.—The three semi-weeklies (International, Pathe, and Selig-Tribune) and the two weeklies (Gaumont-Mutual and Universal's Animated) apply about the same principals in the selection of their topics. Thrillers are preferred, novelties next, then the spectacular, the item that gets big headlines in newspapers ("all the latest disasters," etc.). Many situations that are strong in human interest are shown, and frequently something that is highly instructional. What a pity we can't have such illuminative records of the centuries that are dead!

MAGAZINES.—Only two of these yet, both still in their infancy—Pictograph (Paramount), 30 weeks, and Reel Life (Gaumont-Mutual), 18 weeks—young; but their infancy is much like that of Hercules. In balanced variety of subjects treated, in careful presentation of the topics selected, and in avoidance of the merely sensational, the magazines far excel the news-reels, though there is room for improvement in all. They also contain a larger proportion of instructive material, ranging through a number of headings in this list—almost anything from preparedness to psychology.

GEOGRAPHIC.—Although the truly geographic film may hardly be said to have come into existence yet, a near approach may be cited: Dr. Sugden's "Lure of Alaska," with his interpretive lecture, as recently given at the Rialto, thanks to Mr. Rothapfel's discernment of merit. We shall not have the privilege of enjoying the wholly geographic treatment of topics, however, until many exhibitors can be persuaded that the intelligence of their audiences is equal to such diet, a rich intellectual treat. The Burton Holmes (Paramount) reels also at times come near to geographic treatment.

SCENIC.—These are the usual substitute for the geographic, but instead of choosing the situations that have to do with the relations between men and their natural environment, in the regions selected the cameraman seems to have had one eye for the picturesque and his other optic for the unusual, the bizarre. Result: Scenes that are charming to gaze upon, but not so instructional as they might have been. Only rarely is a map shown, but among exceptions on this point should be noted some of the excellent Beacon travel reels and the recently begun Metro travelogues. Many of the scenics are veritable storehouses of beautiful pictures, equal in charm to the work of all but the greatest artists. No wonder theater audiences love to see them on every program.

NATURE STUDY.—Films about animals and plants have been produced in large numbers, and there is a fair amount of current production. Pathe and Beacon are among the most regular contributors to this shelf, and it is rumored that other producers are preparing to add to the library. Microscopic studies from Leggett-Gruen and others are also welcome additions.

INDUSTRIALS.—Agriculture is a combination of nature study and industry; hence some of its topics may be placed under either head. The scenics frequently give fine glimpses of industries in other lands, and the news weeklies catch snatches of labor everywhere. Gaumont's Reel Life has shown about the best specimens of short industrials yet screened; only, from a strictly educational standpoint, they are not quite long enough for adequate analysis of all processes.

SOCIOLOGICAL.—Some critics of photoplays seem to have the notion that sociology deals only with the slums, but its range is as wide as are the customs of the human species. Of plays that are distinctly sociological in parts the list would be long; of sociological studies not in story form there are a few—may their tribe increase!

HISTORICAL AND COSTUMES.—The latter term is preferred in the trade, and (consciously or not) for good reason. In some supposedly historical plays there is little to justify the classification besides a name or two and the costumes—for instance, Davy Crockett (Paramount), a very pretty story, but mostly unhistorical. Maybe Nathan Hale (World), or The Crisis (Selig), will give us some bits of the past as historians know it. The scenes show many historic places, also some archaeological remains.

STANDARD LITERATURE.—I mean only those classic stories, ancient and modern, that are accepted as standard in educational institutions. Some of them have been filmed by more than one producing company. We are soon to have two more versions of Shakespeare—Romeo and Juliet (Metro), and King Lear (Thanhouser-Pathe).

HYGIENE AND SPORTS.—These topics appear chiefly in the news weeklies. How girls are taught to swim by first practicing the movements in the air—and like situations—have been excellently shown.

CIVIC AND POLITICAL.—Governmental departments and their work, as well as the holders and seekers of political offices, appear on the screen so frequently that we grow to feel at home with thm.

MILITARY AND NAVAL.—Although danger and official restrictions limit the foreign supply, our own troops and ships furnish enough of these spectacular scenes to delight the souls of the champions of preparedness. To everybody such views are highly informational.

CARTOONS.—While it cannot be said that animated jokes are truly educational, some of them serve at least as a review lesson upon the current events and prominent persons they so broadly sketch and distort. Others are mere burlesques, involving only imaginary characters.

JUVENILE.—There has recently been a noticeable increase in the production of films suitable for childrens' programs. But as in the case of securing films that are distinctly pedagogical, just so in regard to juveniles—we need not expect a large and steady output until the number of regular users of such specially designed films can be multiplied many fold.

RELIGIOUS.—The appearance of Bible films is so irregular that the type may almost be said to be extinct, owing to the failure of churches generally to use those that were produced. But there are many plays in which the principles of religion are applied to modern life, and some employ sacred persons in allegorical scenes—notably Civilization (Ince), and The Light at Dusk (Lubin).

Each of the classifications I have enumerated above, and some others, will be discussed more fully in future articles.

EDUCATIONAL COMMENTS.

While the epidemic of infantile paralysis is hurting the attendance at the moving picture houses, the pictures are returning good for evil by doing all they can to stay the progress of the disease. The Hearst International News Pictorial Service is sending out a number of films taken in the wards where the afflicted children are being treated and where everything known to the medical world is being done for the little sufferers; pictures of the critical, convalescent and receiving wards, also "close-ups" of the massage treatment, the hoops used to raise the sheets from the sensitive paralyzed legs of the little victims, and other contrivances for the comfort of the little ones are shown. These pictures ought to be very useful in many places, adding another triumph to the benefit of the pictures, probably instrumental in the saving of many young and perhaps valuable lives.

Scenes in Japan are among the latest Pathe releases on the educational list. The well known famous and sacred Fuji mountain is the central picture, all the beautiful lakes and villages surrounding are shown in splendid detail, adding another picturesque film to the already large list of this garden-land of the world.

Medical science is advancing in and with the use of the moving picture in almost every possible way, indeed it has now come to be an accepted adjunct to all kinds of clinical work; the records of most unusual cases and operations are passed on to various hospitals, thereby enhancing the value of the operation with the experience gained. The University of Minnesota College of Medicine is now on record as arranging to build up a "library" of films of the most important operations. Recently an unusual operation on the muscles of the eye was filmed in three parts; first the patient's symptons, second the operation, third the results in the cured and recovered patient. The titles are exhaustive and technical so that the film is self explanatory to medical students. Another film shows an operation for the removal of a goiter and has just been exhibited before the local medical societies.

A new and most unusual contest is being conducted in a Western Agricultural School—a contest of amateurs in operating moving picture machines. The principal of the school is probably correct when he says that he thinks it is the first contest of the kind ever held. Teachers and principals of consolidated rural schools in the State of Minnesota attending University summer sessions are taking a special course on "How to Operate Moving Picture Machines." Elimination contests are first held; the last four survivors are then called to do their work in public with the audience as the judges. There is no doubt that this is a step forward toward the time when many of these perfected amateurs will be required in many schools. This is also helping to solve the problem of the working of the picture machines in schools generally; may many readers of this follow this good example.

How shall we entertain the American soldiers on the Mexican border? In answer to this question Adj. Gen. Frank Bridges of Indiana said he hoped the Y. M. C. A. would establish moving picture exhibitions for the men. Never before have the moving pictures had such an opportunity for good, and never before have the moving pictures been such a valuable and welcome addition to an encamped army; there is positively nothing that can take their place and their usefulness now shows how great a void previously existed. It is further pointed out that the use of the pictures would be many-sided, they would restrain the men from using their spare time in unprofitable ways, they would be at once entertained, interested and often educated, and still more important, there are many military tactics which have been filmed, the usefulness of which now proves of inestimable value. Gen. Bridges hoped that patriotic friends at home would see that this very excellent opportunity was not lost to do so much practical good, and especially to afford such a pleasure to the men who are making such sacrifices would be a service of the highest kind. CAMERAMAN SMITH BACK ON OLD JOB.

Robert C. Smith, a well-known cameraman, has returned from Cleveland, Ohio, where he has been working on a feature produced by the Midland Film Manufacturing Company. Mr. Smith has taken back his old post in the Popular Plays and Players studio, where he is doing the camera work on the five part feature, "The Iron Woman," in which Nance O'Neil is starred for the Metro program. Mr. Smith photographed "The Scarlet Woman" production, in which Mme. Petrova was starred on the Metro program, introducing many novel effects in photography which he originated.

HOLAH ASSISTANT MANAGER.

In the issue of September 2 it was stated that A. M. Holah was city salesman of Pathe's Cleveland office. This was incorrect. Mr. Holah is the assistant manager.

A Move in the Right Direction

New York City Board of Education Decides to Investigate Educational Film Possibilities with a View to Their Use in the Class Room.

THE election of Clara de Lissa Berg as official investigator of educational moving pictures, Department of Education of New York City, is one of the most important and startling events in the recent history of the educational film; especially as this move is taken with a view to giving the moving picture its proper place in the class room.

Clara de Lissa Berg.

Miss Berg, who is a graduate of Barnard College, as well as having spent several years in teaching, has been for the past two years actively connected with the film business in the educational departments of the Pathe Exchange and other firms making a specialty of educational pictures. She is already at work delving among the manufacturers' "cold" copies as well as recent releases for the purpose of ascertaining the quality and quantity of the film which educators will have to choose from.

The move is portentous of a change in the commercial value of the educational film, be it ever so slight. The report made by Miss Berg will be used by the Board of Education as a basis for its plans with regard to the use of pictures in the New York public schools during the coming year.

C. AUBREY SMITH GOES TO LONDON.

C. Aubrey Smith, who has just completed his work in the screen production of W. J. Locke's great novel, "Jaffery," which will shortly be released by the International Film Service, Inc., has gone to London, where he will spend several weeks with the celebrated English novelist.

Mr. Smith and Mr. Locke have been intimate friends since boyhod. They went to school together and even in those days Mr. Locke dreamed of writing a great novel and Smith of becoming a famous actor. One day Locke laughingly remarked that when that time arrived he would write a big book with Smith as his hero.

The time to carry out his promise came sooner than either expected. When Mr. Locke first conceived the plot for "Jaffrey" he decided that Smith was his ideal in appearance and actions for the gigantic, whole-souled British war correspondent. He kept Smith constantly in mind as the story progressed. Many of Jaffrey's deeds of kindness, it is declared, are really those of Smith.

JAPANESE GIRL ENGAGED FOR "BEATRICE FAIRFAX."

Miss Yumiko Nagahara, diminutive and very pretty Japanese lady, has been engaged by the International Film Service, Inc., to play the part of "Mimosa San" in the episode of "Beatrice Fairfax," of that title. Yumiko, translated into English, means Grace, and Miss Nagahara is all that the name implies. She was born in Tokio less than eighteen years ago. At the age of nine she was brought to this country by her parents and spent several years in Seattle and Los Angeles. Her first appearance in pictures was in "Madame Butterfly." Her work attracted the attention of the International Film Service, Inc., and she was especially engaged to appear with Harry Fox and Grace Darling in the "Mimosa San" episode of "Beatrice Fairfax."

CONKLIN WITH LASKY.

William Conklin, recently featured by Pathe as "Illington" and the "Brute Man" in their serial "Neal of the Navy," also several of their Gold Rooster plays, has joined the Lasky Company and is playing a leading role in a big subject now in the making.

Observations

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

AT no time in the history of the motion picture business have conditions affecting it been more discouraging than they are at present. The circumstances are such that it would be folly for any one to attempt an appearance of indifference. The conditions must be met squarely and the seriousness of the situation must be candidly admitted in spite of any belief as to what the pictures really are and what they can be made. But in spite of these conditions, there is absolutely no foundation in truth for a great majority of the reports that are being circulated regarding the industry. These reports emanate chiefly from two sources. Many come from people who are not in the slightest degree connected with any branch of the business, but delight in impressing those with whom they come in contact with the idea that they really are conected with those who know and their position gives them opportunity to get official information. They are the same class of people who in loud voice make known to those about them in the theaters a lot of stuff which their imagination, or irresistible boasting habit, has misled them to treat as facts regarding the professional and private lives of players. Their stock of information is nothing more than a jumble of misconstrued or distorted stories they have read, or been told by people equally as ignorant or misinformed as themselves.

In a discussion with some friends at a well known club recently, a young man who aspires to become a star of the screen some day, was boasting of his knowledge of motion pictures and those who make, appear in and exhibit them. "You people," said he, "are not in a position to question my wisdom in adopting photoplay work as a position. You do not know what talent I have, nor the extent to which I have gone in studying the possibilities of the profession. None of you would select me as an actor for either the stage or the screen, but there are hundreds of high salaried players who at one time or another appeared in the eyes of friends as I appear to you tonight. Take, for instance, an actor who is today receiving more salary by several hundred thousands of dollars than was ever paid before to any individual player You want to read and otherwise get acquainted with facts, as I have done. Charley Chaplin never was an actor. Did you know that? He would meet his friends at the hotels and cafes and indulge in little antics with his hat and cane, interspersing them with his comedy leg movements. His friends thought he was awfully funny. One night a couple of managers dropped into a cafe and saw him amusing his friends. They took hold of him and today he is a millionaire. I may have the laugh on you fellows some day." No doubt the poor fellow believed what he told his friends of Chaplin's professional start, just as others of his calibre believe in the rot they dish out concerning the picture business; but he is deserving of more consideration than those who ignorantly, or through egotism, recklessly circulate unfounded stories that tend to create doubt as to the commercial standing of any industry. With people connected with the industries such vaporings have no weight, but they do harm in circulating false impressions among people who are not in a position to get at the real facts. And still greater harm is done in lending color to statements that are constanty being made by people who have a motive in antagonizing any industry for selfish motives.

This brings us to the second source of distorted and unfounded reports concerning the motion picture business. The assertion that the promoters and managers of the legitimate theaters, vaudeville and burlesque companies have aways been bitterly opposed to motion pictures has often been questioned and quite frequenty, to controvert the assertion, it has been pointed out that many of the same managers have gone into the motion picture business. It is well known to all acquainted with conditions of the stage for the past few years that the people who have left the regular theatrical line for the photoplay business did not do so willingly; and developments of the present summer season have shown that the spirit of resentment against motion pictures on the part of the old line is as strong as ever. They share the same spirit of loyalty to the speaking stage as that which imbues so many of the people they employed as actors and actresses. The old line people have been industriously engaged for the past two months in impressing managers and players throughout the country with the thought that moving pictures have seen their best days and are now on the decline, which is absolutely without foundation in fact. These people have taken advantage of a condition which has arisen through no deterioration of the pictures either in quality or popularity with the public, but from circumstances entirely foreign to the picture industry. In Greater New York there are about four hundred moving picture houses closed, others working only three days a week, and still others running regularly behind expenses, but kept open by the managements at a loss because they fear the effect of shutting down altogether. This is being assiduously used by the old line people in support of their claim that "the pictures are done for." The fact is that were it not for the infantile paralysis epidemic every house in the city would be working full time.

A manager asked the other day what object the old line people could have in circulating false reports concerning motion pictures as stated above and he was promptly told that there was one very well defined object, namely, to weaken the faith of professional people in the pictures and get them to flock to the old time managers for employment. Having accomplished this, the managers then use their argument to get the players to sign contracts at cut rates. This has been done in hundreds of cases. There are many witnesses to such transactions in the ranks of the professional people.

It is the privilege of the old line people to criticise motion pictures, and considering the vast inroads the pictures have made in their business it is natural that they should devise means to get the public to turn from the new and return to the old form of amusement. There cannot be sincere complaint against this, but let the campaign be an honorable and fair one. Misrepresentation and falsehood should not be resorted to and no wise manager will resort to it. Indeed, it seems quite certain that instead of working harm upon the pictures such a policy is more likely to rebound against the promoters of such a policy.

If there is anything in the minds of the motion picture people that portends an unfavorable future for the pictures, they do not show it. Any apprehension they may display deals solely with the existing unfortunate conditions, and considering the great loss many of them have sustained through those conditions they have been surprisingly patient and hopeful. This hope has been increased by a report that License Commissioner Bell is considering a renewal of picture theater licenses and the other authorities are disposed to allow the reopening of houses about September 1. No official announcement to that effect has been made and the report is looked upon in many circles as premature. But there is a strong belief that by October 1 the picture business will be pretty near to a full scale. Some of the more experienced managers are inclined to believe that even with the epidemic ban removed there will not be an immediate return to the amount of business the houses did before they closed. They share with others the belief that a closed house loses more or less prestige and work will be required to get the old patronage coming again. This will mean additional expenses for a time. For instance, houses closed for two or three months will require renovation, and to get the attention of people who have lost the habit of going to shows attractive programmes will be necessary. Already a number of managers have started to clean up and redecorate their houses, which would seem to give color to the report that the authorities have indicated there is a chance for early reopenings. There has been but one complaint by the picture people since the plague ban was put upon their theaters. They feel that the health authorities have not exercised the same diligence requiring their attention. Among the shortcomings charged are the indiscriminate crowding of cars by children within the prescribed age and the crowding of public baths by unattended children. These instances have not been in accordance with the instructions of the Board of Health to prevent the intermingling of children during the epidemic. The picture theaters could be no worse than crowded cars, nor could their atmosphere be worse than a body of inclosed water filled with an indiscriminate crowd of children. It is the opinion of many people that, after all, the spread of the epidemic was not due to children mingling with each other. It was supposed that the order of the Board of Health regarding the admission of children to amusement places was a general one. The writer was present one night when the ticket-taker of a sideshow refused to admit a lady because she had her two small children with her. He was also in an amusement park almost directly opposite the sideshow when an announcer publicly stated that children would be admitted to the show for which he was working.

Australian Notes

THE Theater Royal, Sydney, reopened last week for a short season as a photoplay house with two Paramount features, "Madame Butterfly" and "The Cheat," the former being billed as the star attraction. The season will last for a fortnight only, when the theater will again revert to the spoken drama. A special orchestra renders appropriate music, including the whole score of "Madame Butterfly," while Madame Slappofski, a noted singer, sings the favorite aria, "One Fine Day," at each performance.

I hear on good authority that George Marlow, a prominent theatrical personage in this city and director of the Adelphia theater, is about to produce a few pictures of his big legit. successes. The first of these will be an adaptation of the famous melodrama, "The Bad Girl of the Family," and it is probable that several stage artists will be engaged for the leading roles.

Following the system inaugurated by Union Theaters, Ltd., with their Triangle program, the J. C. Williamson-Waddington management announces that in future double programmes will be presented at several of their theaters. The programmes for the first week are "Jewel" (Universal) and "Her Hidden Past" (Fox) at the Majestic; "The Fighting Hope" (Paramount) and "The Little Brother of the Rich" (Universal) at the Grand.

Wirth's Hippodrome, which has been used as a circus since the opening of the house four months ago, has been reopened as a photoplay house. The Hippodrome is said to be one of the biggest theaters in Australia and it is very comfortably fitted up; seating accommodation is provided for over 2,000 persons. The first program consisted of "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "The Great Pearl Tangle," while "The Unwritten Law," a California subject, is advertised for next week.

The publicity department of Australian Feature Films, the controllers down here of Paramount Pictures, is working at full pressure in an effort to apprise exhibitors of all the good things offering. In addition to a very much enlarged newspaper publicity campaign, they are publishing a neat little magazine under the heading "Paramount Motion Picture Magazine," which is running into big sales at 2d per copy. It is the only paper for picture fans published here.

This week Australian Feature Films are opening a new projection room in their offices here. The latest model of the Powers projecting machine has been installed, and the "theaterette" is likely to become very popular among Paramount exhibitors in Sydney.

It was the original intention of Australasian Films, Ltd., to present "The Battle Cry of Peace" at the Sydney Town Hall, but owing to the building being otherwise engaged the preparedness picture was presented at the Crystal Palace, and drew record audiences. The realistic battle scenes made a big impression on all who saw the picture.

On November 1, 1914, a great fleet of transports, convoyed by grey cruisers, left the harbor of Albany, W. A. They carried the first Australian and New Zealand contingents—the men who subsequently stormed Gallipoli. Bert Ive, the Commonwealth Government photographer and cinematographer operator, who accompanied the vessels from Melbourne to Albany, took many fine scenes of life aboard the transports—the drills, parades, exercises, amusements, etc. At Albany he secured pictures of the transports at anchor in the harbor. The Government has made this film available to the New South Wales Recruiting Committee, and it has been included in the series of films now being shown in conection with the recruiting campaign. The picture is of great interest, and will be screened in other countries, including the United States.

Australasian Films, Ltd., has secured the sole rights in this country for Radium Gold Fibre screens. The first of these has been installed this week at the Hippodrome, Sydney's latest picture house.

The first of the Mutual-Chaplin comedies, "The Floorwalker," arrived last mail and is being screened by Union Theaters, Ltd., simultaneously at two of their largest Sydney houses, the Crystal Palace and the Lyceum. The picture is proving one of the greatest drawing cards for some time, and Chaplin still seems as popular as ever.

The Metro feature, "Her Great Price," was screened to appreciative audiences in Sydney last week. It has been favorably commented upon by various newspapers as being an out of the ordinary production.

"The Birth of a Nation" started its Adelaide season at the Theater Royal to a crowded audience on the night of June 24. The great reception accorded the mammoth photoplay in Sydney and Melbourne no doubt has influenced the success of the picture, as a vast crowd gathered at the doors long before the opening hour. The prices of admission charged are three shillings, two shillings and one shilling. A symphony orchestra under the baton of W. R. Cade supplies the music.

The South Australian Treasurer hopes to raise between £20,000 and £30,000 by means of an amusement tax, which the treasurer intends to ask Parliament to approve. The tax is one of a farthing on 3d tickets or 1d on every shilling. The treasurer intends to ask for authority to impose the tax as soon as possible, as the money is needed by the Government.

The Itala Company's spectacle, "Cabiria," has begun a season in Auckland, New Zealand, at the Lyric theater. A special orchestra has been engaged, and prices of admission ranging to two shillings are being charged.

The Government of New Zealand has introduced a bill making provisions for the censorship of all films imported into the country.

OUTING OF THE SIMPLEX EMPLOYEES.

The employees of the Precision Machine Company, manufacturers of Simplex Projectors, to the number of four hundred, held their annual outing at Belvidere Park, L. I., on Saturday.

The weather was ideal and the boys gathered early for the day's sport. The band of ten pieces of music enlivened the traveling over the ferry and all the way to the park. The ride on the four special cars was especially enjoyed on account of being accompanied by two automobiles of picture men from the Metro Film Company.

As soon as the park was reached a hearty breakfast was served, which the boys had no trouble getting away with. After breakfast all kinds of athletic sports were had, among which was featured the baseball game between the men of the 11th and 12th floors, the formeer winning by a score of 26 to 16. A hopping race among the officials was also very interesting.

The sport of the day was the different boys trying to ride a mule named "Miss Murphy," for which a prize of $10 was offered by the proprietor. Nobody rode her.

There was a very good dinner served at 4 o'clock at which very interesting speeches were delivered. After dinner the boys amused themselves in different ways and about 8 o'clock started leaving for home, after having one swell day's sport.

PATHE EXCHANGE ENTERTAINS AT LUNCHEON.

Representing the Pathe Exchange, Inc., P. A. Parsons acted as host at an informal luncheon given to various "truly thankful" members of the trade press at the Hotel Astor on Monday, Aug. 28. At 12.30 precisely these nicely hungry wielders of the pen, including E. P. Smaney, Dramatic Mirror; Miss Agnes Smith, Morning Telegraph; Miss Marie F. Lennards, Billboard; F. C. Kennedy, Motography; Messrs Kearney and Krahft, Evening Mail; James Milligan, Billboard; Peter Milne, Motion Picture News, and Margaret I. Macdonald, Moving Picture World, were received by Mr. Parsons in the lobby of the hotel, after which they repaired to the dining room.

Immediately following the luncheon the party proceeded to the projection room of the Pathe Exchange, at 25 West 45th street, to view the first four episodes of the new Pathe serial, "The Shielding Shadow," and a five-part Thanhouser feature, "The Fear of Poverty."

Many Pathe Successes Made by Balboa

Something About That Enterprising Concern and the Three Directors Who Made the Pictures.

THE Balboa Company is among the best known of the companies which J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has assembled under the title "Producers of Gold Rooster Plays." Three years ago, when Pathe was still releasing through the General Film, Mr. Berst purchased from H. M. Horkheimer some of the very first photoplays which had been made under the Balboa mark. Since that time Balboa pictures have been almost continuously upon the Pathe program. Nor has the Horkheimer work upon Pathe serials, such as "Who Pays?" "Neal of the Navy," "The Red Circle" and "The Grip of Evil," interfered with their production of a number of Gold Rooster plays. "Comrade John," "Little Mary Sunshine" and "A Matrimonial Martyr" are a few of the titles. Of these "Little Mary Sunshine" is worthy of more than passing notice, since it has played to capacity business everywhere and has been heralded as a truly unusual picture.

Henry King.

It has been said that a director is more than half a picture, yet he usually receives but little mention. Following out the Pathe policy of best authors for the stories, the most famous players in the casts and the highest quality of production, Mr. Berst has always insisted that the best directors only be put upon the pictures made for the Gold Rooster program. Three Balboa directors are identified with these Pathe productions. Their careers are of more than ordinary interest.

Harry Harvey.

Henry King, who first became famous as a star playing in Balboa pictures, by reason of his length of service with the company, deserves first mention. Mr. King was one of Balboa's first players, and it was only a little over a year ago that he joined the ranks of the directors. He is a modern example of the old type of Southern gentleman. After going through Roanoke College, he decided to make the stage his career. His education as an actor was gained in stock company work in Atlanta, Buffalo and New York. Then he went on the road for several seasons as leading man in such attractions as "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Devil." "Graustark" and "The Common Law."

During his summer vacation, three years ago, Mr. King was pressed into service by an eastern studio on a very few hours' notice to replace a player who had taken sick. He liked work before the camera so well that he has never returned to the stage. Coming to Balboa in July, 1913, he has remained in the employ of the Horkheimer brothers ever since. First he played "leads," but he was advanced to stardom after a year. His biggest work to date as a director was done in the "Who Pays?" series with Ruth Roland. Mr. King's first Pathe Gold Rooster production was "Little Mary Sunshine," in which he co-starred with the Balboa and Pathe "Baby Grand." This play is drawing ever stronger now than when first released.

Bert Ensminger is Mr. King's assistant director, Joseph Brotherton, of the famous Brotherton family, is chief cameraman, and Jack Blake assistant.

Harry Harvey, another Balboa director of Pathe Gold Rooster plays, was born at Kansas City, Mo., about thirty-five years ago. He was educated in the public schools of the Western Missouri metropolis, and when only a boy enlisted in the Hale Zouaves of the state militia as bugler. Later he enlisted in the Seventh Cavalry, U. S. A., and when his term expired, joined the Marine Corps, U. S. A. It was while serving in the Marine Corps in the Phillippines that Mr. Harvey won a medal of honor for gallantry at Binictican.

He resigned from the army to enter the moving picture game then in its early stages. He served his apprenticeship with the first company that made pictures on cards, which were turned through a machine to get the effect of motion.

Now Mr. Harvey is one of the most experienced directors in filmdom. Since joining the Horkheimer brothers at their Long Beach studio he has put on several notable successes, such as the "Neal of the Navy" serial. His staff is composed of Harry MacPherson, assistant director; Roland Groom, chief cameraman; Cullen Landis, assistant.

It was while practicing law in New York that Sherwood MacDonald, the third of Balboa's directors of Gold Rooster plays, was attracted by motion pictures. At every studio where he applied for work at the directing game they looked him over and offered him a place in stock. It finally got on Mr. MacDonald's nerves and he went to work as an extra, just to learn the technique of the game.

One day a scene called for a man in evening dress, and as MacDonald was the only man who possessed such an unheard of outfit he was preferred before his fellows and exalted to a regular job. The evening clothes made him a marked man. One day he appeared at the Balboa studio, Long Beach, and was put on in stock. This was the beginning of Mr. MacDonald's real career in pictures, for he manifested so much intelligence and resource that he attracted the attention of the Horkheimer brothers and was very soon promoted to a directorship.

Helene Rosson

HELENE ROSSON, of the American Company, is developing with almost startling rapidity. In a wonderfully short space of time she has become well known to the fans and every week finds her popularity growing.

Helene is only seventeen, very young to be a leading woman, but she is fully entitled to her position, for she has talents far above the ordinary, and is working hard to achieve the success which is bound to come her way.

Helene Rosson.

She has not been in the profession for very long, although she was well known on the concert platform and in amateur theatrical circles. She started her picture career with the Universal and her very first piece of work brought her into prominence. She was given important parts from the outset.

She has been playing leads at Santa Barbara ever since, and her work constantly is winning added praise. In "April," especially, she has found many admirers.

Miss Rosson is a very graceful girl with beautiful hands, which she knows how to manage to perfection. She is of medium height and her expressive eyes are blue-gray.

In private life she is an athletic girl who rides, swims and plays tennis. She is bubbling over with fun and is a general favorite. She lives in a pretty bungalow with her brother, Dick, and a sister, Queen, both of whom are prominent in their profession.

Kalem's New Series

Robert Welles Ritchie to Write "Grant, Police Reporter," Featuring George Larkin.

ROBERT WELLES RITCHIE, among the best known of current magazine contributors, has been engaged by the Kalem Company to write the stories for a new one-reel series which will feature George Larkin, the screen star, recently signed by that company. "Grant, Police Reporter" is the title of the latest Kalem effort, which, as indicated in the title, will cover the adventures met with by the average police reporter of a metropolitan daily.

It is the plan to have each of the new productions replete with the spectacular thrills and exploits which have gained Larkin his reputation as a dare-devil. The one-reelers will be released weekly, each telling an absolutely complete story, as in Kalem's "Hazards of Helen" series, and each under an individual title as part of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series.

In outlining Kalem's elaborate plans for the new series Mr. Wright of that company said: "We are once more showing the way in the production of 'Short Length Features' with 'Grant, Police Reporter.' Both in story, star and support we promised surprises and we are delivering 'the goods.'

"We have kept the idea of quality uppermost in our minds in planning for the new series. While each one-reel story will be packed with action and contain sensational thrills the plots will be logical and convincing—the work of an author of undoubted standing. Mr. Ritchie knows newspaper life from A to Z and it is the real thing that he will show screen fans in 'Grant, Police Reporter.' You will see none of the usual clap-trap of reporters who lug big note-books around with them to be pulled out on the slightest excuse, or the hackneyed stories of a reporter who is always rushing like mad to 'stop the presses' and get his 'scoop' in the paper.

"George Larkin, the star, will be seen in the title role as Grant, and you may take my word for it that he has his work cut out for him in performing the feats called for in the stories. Larkin is widely popular, a very good actor and possessed of unusual daring. His 'feature' qualities are evidenced by the fact that in the past six weeks he has been seen on Broadway in four multiple reel productions. When the complete supporting cast is ready to be announced exhibitors will see that we haven't overlooked a single link in making the new series a real 'Short Length Feature.'"

In addition to his position in the literary field Mr. Ritchie has also seen service as a newspaper man in the four corners of the globe for the New York Sun, the New York World, the San Francisco Call and the London Telegraph. He will draw on his own experience for the plots of "Grant, Police Reporter," and in many cases the stories will be based on real occurrences in New York newspaper annals. In some instances reporters on the different New York papers will be able to see their own exciting adventures on well-remembered stories portrayed in detail.

Robert Welles Ritchie has become an enthusiastic screen fan following his experience with Kalem's current two-reel series, "The Girl from Frisco," of which he is the author and which marked his debut in the screen field. The author confesses to an eagerness to see each succeeding episode of the screen productions. "I am delighted," he says, "with the elaborate manner in which Kalem has staged the stories. I must admit surprise at the lengths to which the director has gone in his demand for absolute realism. It is this that had much to do with my decision to write the 'Grant' stories, for I know that by following the Kalem policy we will give the public at last a real glimpse of actual newspaper life. It is a field fertile in opportunities for absorbing adventure stories."

The first release of "Grant, Police Reporter" will be made about the middle of September, according to present plans. George Larkin, the star, started last week for Jacksonville, where the thrillers will be staged.

Pathe Keeping Up Pace On Serials

Productions for Present Year Already Completed and Work Started on Two Subjects for 1917.

WITH Pathe's serial program for 1916 completed, J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, announces that production of the first two serials for 1917 is already under way. This statement is particularly significant at the present time, as it indicates the thorough preparedness with which the house of Pathe carries out its plan of seven serials a year.

The first of the 1917 serial productions will be based on "The Journal of a Neglected Wife," and its sequel, "The Woman Alone," by Mabel Herbert Urner, whose stories have been read by millions in the Hearst publications and more recently in a large list of metropolitan newspapers served by the McClure syndicate.

"The Journal of a Neglected Wife" and "The Woman Alone" tell the story of "the eternal triangle"—the loving wife, the neglectful husband and "the other woman." So as to be certain that her characters will be faithfully portrayed on the screen Mabel Herbert Urner is adapting the stories for film reproduction.

The serial will feature Ruth Roland, the popular star of Pathe's successful "Who Pays?" series and "the Red Circle" serial, as well as a number of Gold Rooster productions. The serial is being produced by Balboa, with the assistance of W. A. S. Douglas, who has been assigned by Mr. Berst as Pathe's representative at the California studio.

The Astra Film Corporation, which produced "The Shielding Shadow," and some of the most successful of the Gold Rooster productions, has been selected to produce the second of the 1917 series. The story is founded on Gilson Willetts' famous novel, "The Double Cross." Leon Bary was chosen for the lead because of his acting in "The Shielding Shadow," which will be released October 1. Mollie King will be co-star with Mr. Bary in "The Double Cross." Her fine performance in "Kick In," her first release under the Pathe banner, was the reason for this choice. The production of "The Double Cross" was started last week under the direction of Donald Mackenzie of the Astra forces.

Pearl White, the most popular serial girl in the country, is starred in the last Pathe serial of 1916, scheduled for release in November. Another member of the all-star cast, as the "heavy," will be Theodore Friebus, who has attained an enviable reputation for his work in stock in Boston and New York City. This will be Miss White's fourth serial. It will have a military setting. It is from the pen of Guy W. McConnell. As part of the national advertising campaign this story will be published in the National Sunday Magazine simultaneously with the release of the picture. The National Sunday Magazine has a circulation of 500,000.

ABEL DISCUSSES "PICK-UP MAN" QUESTION.

The evil incidental to irresponsible pick-up men and messenger service as usually found in the larger cities of the United States is under discussion by the F. I. L. M. Club of Chicago, writes Sidney E. Abel of the Chicago V-L-S-E.

"Why should not the pick-up men," says Mr. Abel, "who are deriving their income from the film industry and at the expense of the safe arrival of feature film service, which is the property of the different exchanges, be subservient to and appointed by both the film exchanges they are doing business with and the exhibitor, as a protection to both? They are handling valuable property. The average film messenger is careless in his respect for the value of that property and for any delay incidental to its proper delivery.

"The F. I. L. M. Club of Chicago feels its members should be protected and that all its members, who constitute the managers of the exchanges doing business in Chicago, should have sufficient protection from injury and delay that might come, and at times does come in the handling of films on the part of messengers. Why then, should not the exhibitor have equal protection? He does not know what minute a feature used at his theater will go astray.

"Conditions in this branch of the business therefore should receive wide comment and discussion at this time, with a view to creating greater system and greater protection for each one who is subjecting himself to the difficulties incidental to the proper delivery of films."

A CORRECTION.

The page advertising plate of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation in the last issue of this paper, through an error, showed the address of the company as 126-130 West 40th street. This should have been 46th street.

Vitagraph's New Serial Ready

"The Scarlet Runner," with Earle Williams Starred, Is a Series of Twelve Complete Two-Part Stories.

SEVERAL months ago, when it was first announced that Vitagraph would do a serial picture with Earle Williams in the lead, Albert E. Smith, president of the company, stated that, in his opinion, exhibitors would appreciate "The Scarlet Runner" because each episode told its own story and the exhibitor's patrons missing one or two installments would not lose interest in the series as a whole.

In many respects "The Scarlet Runner," which has been aptly termed "Vitagraph's Mile-a-Minute Motor Series," is one of the most exceptional pictures ever released by the organization that has produced "The Goddess," "God's Country and the Woman," "A Million Bid," "The Christian" and "The Battle Cry of Peace."

When it was first decided that Earle Williams should have the honor of appearing in a weekly release, the executives of the Vitagraph Company read a great many books before deciding upon "The Scarlet Runner," written by the internationally famous story-tellers, C. N. and A. M. Williamson.

William P. S. Earle, who has recently won his spurs as a Vitagraph director, has contributed to "The Scarlet Runner" series the first and fifth episodes, "The Car and His Majesty" and "The Jacobean House." All of the other ten episodes are directed by Wally Van, whose painstaking work is evident in the range of beautiful locations secured that carry out the English atmosphere of the story.

Another great difference between "The Scarlet Runner" and most other serials is that the star, Earle Williams, remains impervious to the charms of women until the final two chapters of this delightful series of motor mysteries. The love interest throughout the twelve stories is worked out by ten beautiful women who have their own affairs of the heart around which the stories center. Earle Williams as Christopher Race, owner of the speedy "Scarlet Runner," succeeds in portraying the part of Cupid's helper to the satisfaction of everybody.

As the series approaches its close, the genial Mr. Race meets the one girl in a million, portrayed by Edith Storey, and the series literally winds up with a bang when Dorothy Herbert (Edith Storey) deliberately wrecks the car she is driving in order that Christopher Race (Earle Williams) may win.

Exhibitors are asked to bear in mind that "The Scarlet Runner" does not depend upon blood and thunder situations for sustaining the interest of their patrons, but it is the type of picture that will keep them coming week after week.

The first release of "The Scarlet Runner" will be made on September 18th. It is entitled "The Car and His Majesty." It is followed a week later by "The Nuremburg Watch" and ten other complete two-part stories, released weekly, through Vitagraph V-L-S-E exchanges.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of September 3 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Parson of Panamint."

DUSTIN FARNUM was the star at the Strand theater the week of September 3, being featured in a screen play produced by the Pallas Pictures. "The Parson of Panamint," as the picture is called, was written by Peter B. Kyne, one of the popular short story writers of today. The scenes are placed in a western village in the mining days. Panamint, the mining town, has become so prosperous that the inhabitants feel the need of a parson. Eventually, the parson proves that he is a good shepherd for his rough flock. How he accomplishes his purpose makes up an unusual story.

Featured on the musical program was the playing of a Wagnerian overture, by the Strand Concert Orchestra, to the accompaniment of an electric effect. Soloists for the week included Bruce Weyman and Autumn Hall.

The Strand Topical Review, a travelogue, a comedy cartoon and a short comedy completed the program.

"The Dawn Maker" at the Rialto.

William S. Hart, in "The Dawn Maker," displayed his likeable personality on the screen at the Rialto. In order to create the atmosphere suggested by the title of the picure, four classic dancers were engaged to interpret Grieg's "Morning," from the Peer Gynt Suite, just before the feature was shown. "The Dawn Maker" tells the story of a half-breed Indian's struggle to make his full-blooded brethren accept the educational ideals of the white man. The scene is laid at the northernmost station of the Hudson's Bay Company. When the Indians of that region save themselves from starvation during a blizzard by stealing the food supply at the trading post, the half-breed's love for the factor's daughter leads him to sacrifice his own life in saving hers. Charlie Chaplin in "The Count" was added to the bill Monday. The usual special features and musical numbers completed the entertainment.

"Each Pearl a Tear" at the Broadway.

Fanny Ward was seen at the Broadway theater for the week in the Jesse L. Lasky production of "Each Pearl a Tear," from the story by E. L. Sheldon. This Paramount picture deals with a young girl who is led by an unscrupulous millionaire to believe that she has lost a valuable string of pearls and is forced to work for him to repay the loss. How she discovers that he still has the pearls and uses them to wreck him financially, at the same time bringing wealth to her sweetheart, is brought about in a striking manner.

Miss Ward has been surrounded with a cast which includes Jack Dean, Charles Clary, Paul Weigel and Jane Wolff.

Charlie Chaplin in his latest two-part comedy, "The Count," was added to the program on Monday.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four Triangle pictures were shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Dorothy Gish in "Gretchen the Greenhorn" and a Sennett Keystone comedy were on the program. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, William S. Hart in "The Patriot" and a Triangle Keystone comedy were the picture features.

HELEN GIBSON IN RODEO.

Helen Gibson has taken a week's vacation from work on Kalem's thrillers, "The Hazards of Helen," to compete in the current western rodeo being held at Bakersfield, Cal. Miss Gibson will defend her title of Pacific Coast woman's champion in a number of the rodeo events.

Lillian Tucker. Jean Stuart Marguerite Blake. Adele Kelly. Zena Keefe. Edith Storey. Lillie [illegible] Betty Howe.

An Octette of "Scarlet Runner" Beauties.

Mutual Offerings

Richard Bennett in "The Sable Blessing" and Florence Turner in "Grim Justice" Are the Big Features for Week of September 11.

AS the hero of "The Sable Blessing," a five-act Mutual Star Production, one of the two big feature offerings for release the week of September 11, Richard Bennett, celebrated star of the speaking stage, makes his first appearance in a photoplay feature since his success scored in "Damaged Goods," a film version of the Brieux sociological released as a Mutual special feature a year ago.

"The Sable Blessing," a comedy drama, presenting Mr. Bennett in one of the most startling characterizations ever offered in a screen production, is from the pen of Baron Hoffman, many of whose contributions to literature have found their way to the screen. It was adapted for the screen by Anthony A. Coldoway and produced under the personal direction of Director Sargent, who staged "The Secret of the Submarine" and many other notable features. Mr. Bennett essays the role of "John Dumont," the only nephew of a notorious old tightwad who insists that he marry the girl he has selected for him.

The cast in support of Mr. Bennett is a large and unusually capable one. Rhea Mitchell, ranked among the foremost of dramatic stars of the screen, appears in the role of the little slave. Others in the company are George Periolat, the noted character man of American-Mutual releases, Adrienne Morrison (Mrs. Richard Bennett), Alfred Hollingsworth, Ashton Dearholt and several others. "The Sable Blessing" will be released September 11.

"Grim Justice," a drama in five acts, and fourth of the Mutual Star Productions featuring Miss Florence Turner, is the second of the feature offerings of the same week. This feature, adapted from the screen from the famous novel of the same name, by "Rita," one of England's foremost novelists, finds Miss Turner portraying one of the most appealing roles she has ever been featured in. It was produced by the Turner Films, Ltd., of London, under the personal direction of Larry Trimble, and gives Miss Turner most unusual opportunities of demonstrating her widely recognized talents for powerful emotional acting. September 11 is the release date.

"The Man in Black," second of the series of five-reel "Fantomas" stories, based on the exploits of the most notorious criminal in the history of French detective literature, is the Mutual's three-part offering of the week of September 11. This offering, which will be released as Episode No. 2, deals with another startling crime perpetrated by the elusive "fantomas," mystery man, and the continued efforts of the celebrated detective "Juve" to capture him. This series of "Fantomas" pictures, adapted for the screen from the stories of two of the most popular French detective story writers, has been running weekly in magazine sections of a string of newspapers with a circulation of many millions and has proven exceptionally popular.

Mutual's three two-act features of the week present a host of popular stars in the leading roles. First of them, "The Heart of a Doll," a Thanhouser production starring the famous Fairbanks Twins, Madeline and Marion, who have won a large following among Mutual followers, will be released Friday, September 15. The little co-stars are supported by various of the players who have appeared with them in the many Mutual releases in which they have been starred by the Mutual.

The Centaur two-part feature of the week, with William Clifford and Margaret Gibson as the co-stars, will be released Saturday, September 16, under the title of "Tangled Hearts." Written by Elsie M. Callaghan and staged by Alvin Neitz, "Tangled Hearts" features these popular co-stars in the most interesting characterizations since they joined the Horsley studios. Nan Christy and Alva D. Blake appear in their support.

Third of the two-act feature is a Vogue comedy, "Doctoring a Leak," featuring Rube Miller. This feature will be released on Sunday, September 17.

Comedy offerings will include two releases under the Cub brand, the first of which, "Harmony and Discord," featuring Billy Armstrong, will be released September 11, and the second, "Jerry and the Blackhands," starring the inimitable George Ovey, will go out on Friday, September 15.

The three Mutual single-reel features, Mutual Weekly No. 89, "See America First" No. 52, picturing a trip along the famous Columbia Highway in Oregon, and "Reel Life" will go to the public on their usual days of the first two named on Wednesday, September 13, and the last on Sunday, September 17.

Artcraft Selects Exchange Managers

New Pickford Company Will Have Offices in Fifteen Cities —First Release Early in October.

PLANS for the distribution of the productions of the Mary Picford Film Corporation are practically completed. Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, announces the organization of a chain of Artcraft exchanges from coast to coast. Within a week all of the fifteen exchanges provided for in the original plan will be in operation. Many of the branch managers are already in their territory. Al Lichtman, Artcraft general manager, who has just returned from a swing around the circuit, reports that for the handling of the first of the new Mary Pickford productions the following cities have been seleeted as centres of distribution:

New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, Atlanta, Dallas, Chicago, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Denver, Seattle and San Franciseo. The Canadian agency for distribution will probably be announced as soon as negotiations are well under way.

Extensive space has been set aside in the main offices of Artcraft at 729 Seventh avenue for the New York manager, Arthur G. Whyte, and his assistant, Charles S. Goetz. They will handle the entire state and northern New Jersey. Mr. Whyte is well known in the motion picture industry as producer, manufacturer and distributor, and his selection as head of the important New York exchange is proof of Mr. Greene's desire to recruit the most capable staff that is available in the film field. Mr. Goetz was formerly with World Film and more recently with Bluebird.

Samuel Bernfield takes over New England, with headquarters in Boston. He has had charge of Pathe distribution in that section.

To the Philadelphia exchange comes B. C. Cunningham, for four years manager for the Mutual in Washington. Eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey are included in this compact territory.

In Washington exhibitors in the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and a part of North Carolina will deal with V. P. Whitaker, formerly of the Paramount forces.

The rest of North Carolina, Tennessee, Mississippi and all the territory south of these states and east of the Mississippi River are grouped in the Atlanta exchange. That part of Louisiana which includes New Orleans will be served from Atlanta. C. W. Brandon, who has been successful as southern manager for V-L-S-E, is manager.

In Pittsburgh Samuel Plame goes from Paramount to Artcraft. He will have charge of western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio adjacent to Pittsburgh.

Headquarters for southern Ohio, Kentucky and southeastern Indiana is to be in Cincinnati, with Harry M. Berman as manager. He has represented Universal there and was Kansas City Metro manager.

Northern Ohio, northern Indiana and Michigan will be served by Frank Rutledge in Detroit, where he was well known as manager for George Kleine's enterprises.

Chicago and Minneapolis have been combined under the general supervision of Max Goldstine, who will organize staffs from the most successful film men in that territory. Mr. Goldstine is to have charge of distribution in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and the adjoining section of Iowa.

The rest of Iowa, all of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and the northern part of Oklahoma are in the Kansas City district. P. C. Wreath has been placed in eommand here. He has a wide acquaintance gained as manager of the Kansas City Feature Film Company.

From Dallas the destinies of Pickford pictures in Texas, Arkansas, southern Oklahoma and Louisiana west of the Mississippi will be directed by J. Rotchford. He has represented Pathe and Kleine in the section to which he has been assigned by Artcraft.

Arthur S. Kane is organizing exchanges in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast states. He will select managers for branches in Denver, Seattle and San Francisco and will supervise their operation. In a long career in the film industry Mr. Kane has been general manager in New York for Pathe and assistant general manager for the General Film Company.

The first picture in the forthcoming Mary Pickford series is scheduled for production early in October. Mr. Greene feels that with the new organization he will be able to make a good start toward successful distribution.

New Young Subject by World

Popular Players Soon to Be Seen in "The Dark Silence," Directed by Capellani.

A NEW Clara Kimball Young play, "The Dark Silence," will be issued shortly by the World Film Corporation. This will signalize the reappearance of Miss Young in the motion picture theaters after an absence of four months' duration, her last previous photoplay having been issued by the World at the beginning of May.

"The Dark Silence" is to be a regular World Pictures program release. It is a Parisian drama containing scenes of peace and war, and its heroine, an exceedingly successful young artist in the French capital, also becomes a nurse of the wounded soldiers.

The love story of which the setting is thus indicated illustrates the rivalry between a young physician and a nobly-born Englishman for the heart and hand of the beautiful artist-nurse. It is through the girl's broken-hearted disappointment at the supposed desertion of the man she really loves that she throws herself into the work of caring for the battle-torn soldiers. This blending of tender romance with the grim realities of armed conflict is what makes "The Dark Silence" an unusual drama of the screen.

The new World picture is produced under the direction of Albert Capellani, who has devoted his utmost care and effort to making "The Dark Silence" a perfect exhibition of the stagecraft of which he is so famous an exponent.

In the principal role Miss Young finds wide range for those gifts which have gained such general recognition in the motion picture field. Indeed, those who have been favored with an advance view of "The Dark Silence" insist that the star is at her very best in her impersonation of the heroine of this World Picture Brady-Made.

Moss Announces Initial Subject

"The Power of Evil," a George Bronson Howard Story, Will Open New Program in October.

THE far-reaching effect of the drink habit, its hereditary influence and the meshes in which it may entangle are the basic ideas that George Bronson Howard has used for the new dramatic production, "The Power of Evil," to be released by B. S. Moss in October.

The author explained in a recent interview that it was through the sad plight of a young man of good family, who had succumbed to his father's sins, and to whom Mr. Howard's attention was called by an interested friend, that the idea of this film was conceived. "My every instinct was aroused against this terrible thing," said Mr. Howard.

"The Power of Evil" will be the first release of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation under its new state rights plan, and will be followed each month by an equally strong production. "In the Hands of the Law, by William O'Hurst, a parallel to the Steilow case, setting forth the danger of circumstantial evidence and the fallibility of man-made law; "Boots and Saddles," by Eugene Walters, a timely story of the Mexican border; "The Woman Redeemed," which furnishes a powerful vehicle for the art of Marie Empress, and "One Hour" are among the features now in the course of preparation.

An extensive advertising campaign has already been started to interest state right men in the new Moss plan, which has many novel features, including a service designed to help exchanges to interest exhibitors and to help the exhibitors to crowd their house.

Biographs on Request

Reissues to Be Booked Through General Film for Extended Runs.

THE Biograph Company has adopted a new plan for booking their releases through the General Film Company and hereafter no Biograph subjects will be scheduled to an exhibitor on his program unless he specifically requests his exchange to do so.

This change has been made by the request of a large number of exhibitors throughout the country who see big advertising possibilities and great drawing power in the Biograph reissues because of their quality and stars, and who have been unable to book them for a period long enough to justify liberal publicity.

Under the new booking plan it will be possible to book a Biograph reissue for a three, four or seven-day run, give it the necessary advertising and draw the business these subjects are capable of. It will, of course, be necessary for the exchanges to schedule them on programs when so instructed, but they will no longer do so on their own volition.

Five Vitagraph Reels on General Film

A Broadway Star Feature and Two Comedies Listed for Third Week in September.

HUGHIE MACK, Vitagraph's immitable heavyweight comedian, can be seen on Friday, September 15, on the General Film program in "Loot and Love," a screamingly funny farce directed by Lawrence Semon from the script by Mr. Semon and Graham Baker. "Loot and Love" is quite up to the standard Vitagraph has set with Hughie Mack comedies. Hughie receives excellent support from Patsey de Forest, William Shea, Edward Dunn and Frank Brule. The action is fast and funny, but never vulgar.

"Busting In and Out of Society" is a comedy along new lines produced by Vitagraph's Bayshore studio. The situations are extremely funny and move rapidly along to a hilarious climax.

Gordon Gray, Vitagraph Player

GORDON GRAY, the popular Vitagraph player, has just finished work on a three-part drama which is soon to be released. In this picture Mr. Gray has a role which, he says, was very congenial. He portrays the part of an artist, with much inspiration and little cash, and failing health in addition. As Mr. Gray had intended taking up art as a profession, this characterization came easy to him. His story of how he forsook the idea of becoming a painter should be interesting.

Gordon Gray.

His father, Carleton Wiggins, who is known as America's foremost cattle painter, was opposed to having his son follow the same career and offered him almost anything in the world if he would give up all thoughts of becoming an artist. When the young aspirant to fame seemed reluctant to obey, his father backed up his remarks with a threat to shoot him if he failed to follow his advice. Of course, Mr. Gray had no desire to be shot, and in order to please his father, cast about for other fields to conquer. Being light on his feet, it was but natural that he should pick dancing as his second choice and it was not long before his grace and dignified bearing in modern dances became recognized.

Soon after he had determined to become an artist of terpischore, his services were in great demand and his face became familiar to patrons of such exclusive dance halls as that of the Plaza and the Waldorf-Astoria. While Vernon Castle was in Europe, Mr. Gray filled an engagement at the Castle House. He has also been seen in exhibition dances in the better resorts along the Atlantic Coast from Maine to Florida. Mr. Gray considers dancing before an audience very easy as compared with dancing for the benefit of the camera's iens, but he has composed several new dances which, he believes, will be particularly well adapted to motion pictures, and when projected on the screen will not make the performers appear awkward, as is so often the case with the present dances. In "Letitia," a recent production, in which he also had a part very much to his liking, Mr. Gray had the opportunity to exhibit some of his dances on the screen to excellent advantage.

MARGARET GALE TO MAKE TOUR OF UNITY EXCHANGES.

The Unity Sales Corporation has completed arrangements for Margaret Gale, who plays the role of the persecuted heroine in "The Yellow Menace," to make a tour of the Unity Exchanges and appear on the stage of the largest theaters in the cities where "The Yellow Menace" is being exhibited. The tour will require several weeks and Miss Gale's first appearance will be in the historic Boston theater, Monday night, September 4.

Paramount Reaches High Standard

Program for Week of September 18 Has Many Excellent Subjects.

THE features to be released by Paramount on its program during the week of September 18, surrounded by three single-reel features issued by the Paramount Corporation, are of unusually high standard, and form one of the most interesting programs of pictures that has ever been released by this distributing organization.

The two leading features of the Lasky production of "The Storm," an unusually strong dramatic story in which Blanche Sweet plays the leading role, and the Famous Players' production of "Ashes of Embers," in which Pauline Frederick appears in an entirely new characterization.

The single reels include the thirty-second edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine on the screen; the Burton Holmes travel pictures, in which series of "easy chair journeys" all around the world Mr. Holmes takes his fellow-travelers this week from Glasgow to Edinboro, and the Paramount-Bray cartoon, "Farmer Alfalfa's Wolfhound," drawn by the well-known cartoonist, Paul Terry.

The Paramount Pictographs for this week will contain four special features, the first of which will be "The Greatest American Exercise," in which there is shown in a most graphic manner how this country became a nation with an iron jaw, because the children of years past refused to heed the warnings of their mothers, and spent their pennies for chewing gum at the corner grocery, despite the fact that the parents told them that the gum was made from the hoofs of horses. This picture shows every stage of the making of chewing gum in a factory where more than two million pieces are manufactured each day, starting from the taking of the sap from the sapodilla tree in Central America to the packing of the gum, without it ever touching a human hand.

"The Light that Never Fails" is another feature, picturing the story of a lighthouse on a barren coast, and the manner in which warnings to sailors at sea are given both by day and night. This is followed by a very interesting picture on trap fishing along the eastern coast, where fishermen set circular traps and drive the fish into a sort of funnel, catching them at the other end and preparing them for market by segregating the bad from the good. The finish of this picture shows the catching of two remarkable species of shark, one a hammerhead and the other a man-eating shark, while the boat on which the fishermen were going to their traps ran into this school of sharks.

The other feature pictures the training by military standards of 1,200 boys who have gathered together at Fort Terry, Plum Island, N. Y., and show the self-control, obedience, self-reliance and other necessary qualities taught them. These boys gathered together at Washington Camp, and are in charge of Lieut.-Col. Andrew Hero, Jr., who has been interested in instilling military ideas into the youth throughout the country. What these boys do from early in the morning until late at night is shown in a most interesting manner.

The Paramout travel pictures, which Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler, is conducting, takes the "easy chair journeyers" who are tripping around the world with Mr. Holmes this week on a trip from Glasgow to Edinboro where they see the manufacturing of ocean liners, have the opportunity of witnessing Glasgow, one of the busiest cities in the world, and taking a most interesting ride up the River Clyde, the greatest of all man-made rivers, which but a hundread years ago was only a shallow creek.

Mr. Holmes also takes the traveler through the Scottish Lakes, made famous by Sir Walter Scott, and then continues inland, arriving at Edinboro, where they climb to the high esplanade of the castle, where they have an opportunity to inspect the evolutions of one of the most celebrated Scottish regiments, the Cameron Highlanders.

The Paramount-Bray animated cartoon, which was drawn by Paul Terry, deals with a very funny story of Farmer Alfalfa and how he bought a wolfhound to keep wild animals away from his ducks, only to find that he had a lemon, in that the hound preferred following rabbits instead of wolves, and when he attempts to sell him back to the man from whom he purchased it and is refused, he casts the hound among the sharks, expecting it to be his last day, only to be surprised after a severe struggle to have the hound appear on the river bank pulling behind it an enormous man-eating shark.

On the Kalem List

"Girl from Frisco" Episode and "Hazard" Supply the Thrills for Week of September 18.

KALEM'S list of releases for the week of September 18 is headed by the two-reel episode of "The Girl from Frisco," featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman. "The Gun Runners" is the title of this week's installment, which is issued on Wednesday, September 20. Robert Welles Ritchie has written a story in which Barbara Brent, played by Marin Sais, uncovers a gun-running scheme to aid a revolution in a South American republic. She is mistaken by the conspirators for "English Rose," an agent of rival plotters, and finds herself in grave danger. True Boardman, as her admirer, Congressman John Wallace, succeeds in saving her in the nick of time.

Frank Jonasson and Ronald Bradbury are other Kalemites seen in prominent roles in this episode, number seven in the fifteen weeks' series. Kalem officials report a number of requests from exhibitors and exchange men to extend the series beyond the period originally stated, an unusual sign of success, in view of the fact that the current week only sees the release of the fifth installment.

"Defying Death," a one-reel "Hazard of Helen," is the other dramatic release on the Kalem weekly schedule. In this thriller Helen Gibson on an electric speeder, a development of the old hand-car, races with a passenger train on an adjoining track. Coming to a switch Helen finds that the brakes on her speeder will not work and in a few seconds she is under the passenger coach, missing death beneath the wheels by inches, as she speeds along apace with the passenger coach. "Defying Death" is released Saturday, September 23.

Ham comes to bat in this week's schedule with "The Mud Cure," a one-reel comedy staged at Arrow Head Springs, the action of which finds Ham and Bud attendants at a fashionable mud bath resort. Ethel Teare is also seen to advantage in this single reeler, released Tuesday, September 19.

"That Pesky Parrot" is the title of the Ivy Close release of the week, issued on Friday, September 22. With the capable aid of Henry Murdock, Robert Ellis, William McKey and Mary Taylor-Ross, Ivy furnishes a comedy well up to the strong Kalem standard for laugh-makers.

SERGEANT "SAMMY" BURNS RETURNS.

On a furlough of thirty days, Sergeant S. R. Burns, the popular cashier of the Nicholas Power Company, returned to New York on Thursday, August 31, and was enthusiastically greeted by the officers and employes of that company. Sergeant Burns said he had no complaint to make of conditions on the border, although he is mighty glad to be back in old New York. Mr. Burns is sergeant of Company D, Seventh Regiment, National Guard of New York, and went with that regiment to the Mexican border at the time the National Guard was called out by President Wilson. Sergt. Burns does not expect to return to the border, as he believes all the New York regiments will be returned before the expiration of his furlough. In the meantime the cheerful little sergeant is back at his desk at 90 Gold street.

ARROW WANTS GOOD FEATURE STORIES.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building, New York City, announces that the Arrow company is in the market for feature stories of at least five-reel length; also for exceptionally strong two-reel episode serial stories. Costume plays or stories of foreign setting are not desired at this time, as Arrow is already well supplied with big picture material of this nature.

What Arrow wants is modern American stories dealing with domestic, economic, sociological and similar problems of every-day life, but plays based merely on sex exploitation are not desired. "The Woman's Law," the five-reel feature in which Arrow starred Miss Florence Reed, represents the sort of plot that Arrow will buy. Complete synopses, rather than scenarios, should be submitted.

FAMOUS PLAYERS COMPLETE FIRST MAE MURRAY PICTURE.

"The Big Sister," the first picture in which Mae Murray has starred at the Famous Players studio since her transfer to New York after the formation of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been completed and is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program September 7. It was produced under the direction of John B. O'Brien.

That Universal Program for the Week of September 11

Four Features and a Well Selected List of Comedies and Dramas Calculated to Make Business for the Exhibitor.

STARTING with the week of September 18, the Universal Program will be made up of 19 regular program reels, including the Weekly. There will be a Red Feather and a serial in addition. In other words, the program will be twenty-six reels per week, including a Red Feather, a serial episode and the Animated Weekly. In addition to the twenty-six reels the Universal will use reissues of five reels, one comedy and four dramas, which will be considered in addition to the program and which can be ordered by the exchanges needing more than twenty-six reels per week.

The second Universal Program of the fall season of 1916 excels in interest the first program which will be released on Labor Day, September 4. Four features will be included on the program of September 11. The Red Feather release is entitled "The Whirlpool of Destiny," a five-reel spectacle drama in which Flora Parker De Haven will be featured. This Red Feather was produced under the direction of Otis Turner. Jack Mulhall and Bertram Grassby appear in support of Miss De Haven.

The second feature of the week will be Carter De Haven in "Hired and Fired," a two-reel comedy episode of the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" series. "Hired and Fired" was written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Wallace Beery. Robert Milash, Vola Smith and Mina Cunard will appear in support of Mr. De Haven.

"The Caravan," an unusually fine two-reel Egyptian drama with a wealth of the color of the period, will be released in the same week, with Claire MacDowell and Lena Baskette featured. The play was written and produced by Raymond Wells and Jay Belasco. C. G. Brides and Malcolm Blevins will appear in support of the principals.

The feature of the week, however, will be the fifth two-reel episode of "Liberty," in which Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo and Jack Holt will be featured. Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard, "Liberty" features besides the principals, Bertram Grassby, G. Raymond Nye, Maude Emory, Neal Hart and L. M. Wells. Episode four of "Liberty" will be entitled "Dead or Alive."

On September 11 Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean will be featured in "Nobody Guilty," a Nestor comedy written by Ben Cohn and Harry Lyons and produced by L. W. Chaudet. Wilkes Gamble also takes an important role in the picture.

The following day Alice Howell is starred in "Tillie's Terrible Tumble," a three-reel L-Ko comedy. On the same day, September 12, Matt Moore and Jane Gail are featured in "Jane's Choice," a Victor comedy produced by Matt Moore. Frank Norcross appears in support of the principals.

Douglas Gerrard and Francelia Billington are featured on September 13 in the Laemmle drama, "The Price of Victory," which was scenarioized by Fred Myton from the story by Laura Oakley and produced by Douglas Gerrard. Alfred Allen appears in support of the principals. On the same day Mary Fuller will be seen in the Gold Seal two-reel society drama, "Love's Masquerade," which was scenarioized by Catherine Carr from the story by Campbell Hall and produced by Lucius Henderson. Harry Benham, Johnny Walker and Margaret McRae, appear in support of Miss Fuller. Universal Animated Weekly No. 37 will also be released on this day's program.

On September 14 Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby play the principal roles in "Baby's Toofs," a Victor two-reel comedy of babyland and domestic life, which was written and produced by Harry Myers. James Rosen plays the part of "Little Precious," the baby. "For Her Mother's Sake," a Big U drama featuring G. Raymond Nye and Vola Smith, will also be released on this date. Written by Frank M. Wiltermood and produced by Clifford Elfelt, the play also includes in the cast Marc Robbins and Edwin Brown. Another Dr. Dorsey educational, the Powers release, "Hunting Whales in Japan," will be released on this date.

The feature of September 15 will be Violet Mersereau in "The Angel of the Attic," a two-reel Imp heart interest drama written by Catherine Carr and directed by Francis J. Grandon. Harry Benham appears in the same play, playing the leading male role. On the same day Molly Malone and Jack Nelson play the principal parts in "The Timber Wolf," a Big U drama scenarioized by Calder Johnstone from the story by Arthur Statter and produced by George Cochrane. Vestor Pegg, Rex De Roselli and Ann Dodge also play prominent roles in the picture. Just to add the comedy touch to the day's program, Harry Depp and Yvette Mitchell, co-star in the Nestor rib tickler, "Speeding," which was scenarioized and produced by F. C. Hartigan from the story by R. A. Dillon. O. C. Jackson and Ernie Shields also furnish their share of the funmaking.

On September 16 the Joker comedy, "In Onion There Is Strength," featuring William Franey and Gale Henry, will be released. This laugh maker was produced by Allen Curtis from the scenario by William Warren Schoene and featured, besides the principals, Lillian Peacock, Charles Conklin and Milburn Moranti. There will be no release under the Laemmle brand on this date and the usual Bison has been replaced with the Universal special two-reel feature, "The Caravan."

September 17 will see the release of the Rex drama, "The Small Magnetic Hand," in which Hal Cooley shares honors with Gertrude Selby. Charles E. Bartlett produced the picture from the story by Sylvia Gibson Gowland which was scenarioized by Bess Meredyth. Cleo Loring and Ed Clark appear in support of the principals. On the same day Roy Clark is featured in the Big U comedy-drama, "Brick Top," which was produced by John McDermott from the scenario written by himself. A. E. Witting, Mrs. A. E. Witting, Lou Short and "Happy" Rosselli appear in support of Mr. Clark. There will be no release under the L-Ko brand on this date.

Death of Sam D. Drane

WILLIAM N. SELIG received with sadness the news sent to him recently from New York City which stated that Sam D. Drane had died of pneumonia at the German Hospital in New York on August 15. Mr. Drane was born forty-seven years ago in Dranesville, Va. His remarkable likeness to Abraham Lincoln caused him to be chosen for the role of the Great Emancipator in the Selig production of Winston Churchill's novel, "The Crisis."

Sam D. Drane.

"It is no secret now," said Mr. Selig, "to state that 'The Crisis' was not put in production for some time because we could find no actor who could undertake the role of Abraham Lincoln. The character of Lincoln predominates in Churchill's wonderful novel, and rather than have the character of Lincoln burlesqued, to be untrue to life, I concluded not to put the drama into production.

"Then one day Sam D. Drane was brought to my attention. I had carefully studied the capabilities of dozens of men willing to portray the historical character and had rejected them one by one. I confess that the Drane proposition did not appeal. However, I decided to meet Drane and wired him to come to Chicago. He came and his tests at the studio were marvelous. No other word will describe his make-up. I consider Drane's characterization of Abraham Lincoln to be wonderful in every detail. He looks like Lincoln, acts like Lincoln and gives atmosphere to the story instead of detracting from the play as is so frequently the case in like instances.

"I think reviewers and the pictureplay public will unanimously agree with me in my tribute to Sam D. Drane when they see his Lincoln on the screen. It is with regret that I learn of his passing. He has never seen the production of 'The Crisis,' to the worth of which production he contributed so talentedly."

HAGER TO MANAGE UNIVERSAL SEATTLE OFFICE.

Mr. Hager, former manager of the Universal office at Butte, Montana, has been transferred to Seattle, taking the place of Mr. Hammington. H. L. Thompson has been appointed manager at Butte.

London Trade Topics

J. D. WALKER, the agent for Famous Players-Lasky, is to release the Burton Holmes travelogues here shortly. The D'Orsey expedition pictures are also announced, these on somewhat novel lines, for they are to be released by the Birmingham firm responsible for their handling in serial form. The travel film is a doubtful factor in this country. At the better class shows they are invariably appreciated, but in the industrial areas they are often received icily. Said a showman the other day, "Never use a slide of the King to signify the termination of the program. A short travel gets them out as quick."

The demand for comedy is having its reflex in prosperity at one house at least catering for the open market center. D. W. Russell, David Horsley's hustling agent, reports encouraging sales on the George Ovey single-reel subjects.

Edgar Wallace, the author, has under consideration a plan for filming the naval battle of Jutland.

A famous statistician, for the want of something better to do, once computed that if the wealth of the world was evenly divided the equal quota for every man, woman and child would be a trifle over £66. A diverting forecast of what would happen under such a distribution has provided George Robey with good material for a screen comedy.

Last week the Triangle organization started its trade campaign in earnest. Something like forty trade shows of subjects to be released under the three-cornered banner are being held each week in London and provinces. The old trade show system, they say, did not allow all exhibitors to attend. To give exhibitors no possible excuse for not viewing a picture the Triangle plan is to show five times each week at each of its eight depots. Three subjects will be shown at each show. "Fatty and Mabel Adrift," the first Triangle film to be released, made its appearance in public also last week. The dramatic subjects will not be seen until September, when "Peggy" will be the initial number. Roy Aitken has been over here for a few weeks inspecting premises and final arrangements for the distribution of Triangles and an extensive prefatory publicity campaign.

The imports of films (negative and positive) from the U. S. A. to this country during the month of June exceeded £141,000 in value, according to the Customs returns. This amount is about £6,000 in advance of the imports for June, 1915.

The release date of "Macbeth" (Triangle-Fine Arts), that is, the release date it will be available to exhibitors upon ordinary rental terms, is Nov. 16th. "The Birth of a Nation" is now being booked, contrary to the policy announced at its London presentation, to some of the less portentious moving picture theaters.

Messrs. Albert and Arthur Clozenburg who have been interested as directors in Ruffell's Exclusives, Ltd., the enterprising concern which handles the Metro output in this country, have withdrawn their interest therefrom and managerial matters are now under the control of Messrs. C. W. and A. C. Lovesy. With this change, Mr. Roscoe C. Spurin, the publicity manager, also seeks fresh fields and pastures new for his insatiable energy and resourceful ideas. It was he who evolved and adopted the most communicative member of the feathered species to symbolize a brand of films that would eventually talk, and the popular parrot as an advertising device for Metro's soon spread to the land of their birth. His work on the Drew comedies has been even better, so much so, that he is regarded by not a few as the most original and able film-booster in London.

Kalem to Add to Forces

New Producing Companies Will Be at Work Under Kalem Banner in Fall Months.

ACCORDING to reports current last week Kalem is making arrangements to place several new producing companies at work under its banner with the coming of the fall months. When questioned Kalem officials admitted plans were under way for an expansion of activity.

It is known that extensive alterations and additions have been taking place for some time at the different Kalem studios in California, New Jersey and Jacksonville. During the summer months the Kalem schedule of releases through the General Film has consisted of five reels, which include the "Girl from Frisco," a weekly two-reel release, and three one-reelers, the "Ham" comedy, Ivy Close comedy, and "Hazards of Helen."

Both the "Girl from Frisco" company and the "Hazards of Helen" forces are now at work in the Glendale studio, while the latter organization also does a considerable part of its work at the Kalem studio station. The "Ham" company is working alone at the Hollywood studio. Both these plants have recently been greatly enlarged, and report has it that Kalem is preparing to engage additional directors and other members of the new companies.

SELZNICK HELPS ILLUMINATE GREAT WHITE WAY

By way of impressing upon all New York the importance of Miss Young's coming appearance in his seven-reel production of Robert W. Chambers' famous novel, "The Common Law," Mr. Selznick recently had installed on the corner of Broadway and Forty-sixth street one of the biggest electric signs in the heart of the theatrical district.

This huge illumination is in two parts, one slanting so as to catch the eye of those coming downtown, the other placed so as to be conspicuous from many blocks down the big street. From across Broadway both sides of the sign blaze their double message. After the first picture is released the letters will be changed to advertise the second production and so on throughout the year.

The installation of the big sign is but one of the phases of the advertising campaign now being conducted for the Selznick pictures. Four styles of twenty-four sheet stands are being distributed throughout the country for the first Clara Kimball Young, picture. Mr. Selznick has contracted for $100,000 worth of billboards for the first year, and to make this billboard campaign of still wider scope is supplying all contract exhibitors with as many stands of paper free of charge as they can use.

Another Broadway location has been secured for a big electric sign now being constructed which will advertise the Herbert Brenon productions beginning with Nazimova in "War Brides."

LEAVES SCREEN FOR STOCK FOR MOTHER'S SAKE.

The important part of "Tommy Mainard," the juvenile in "The Wheel of Justice," in which Emily Stevens is starred on the Metro program, is in the hands of Raymond McKee. The young man has abandoned motion picture work for the winter, in order to take his mother to Florida, to gratify her life-long wish to spend a winter there. When he received an offer to play in a stock company in Jacksonville, he gave up flattering propositions to remain in motion picture work in New York. "I am young," he says, "I can wait better than mother can."

NICHOLAS POWER RETURNS TO NEW YORK.

Nicholas Power, inventor of Power's Cameragraph and president of the Nicholas Power Company, returned to New York on September 1 from Lake Bomoseen, Vermont, where he has been spending the summer at his country home. Mr. Power is highly pleased and encouraged with the business done in his absence, and in spite of the unusual conditions caused by the paralysis epidemic, etc., believes that the motion picture industry will enjoy a good fall and winter business. Mr. Power is again at his office at 90 Gold street.

Spokes from the Hub

BY MARION HOWARD

WE have been well favored here of late in having some remarkably good pictures, so many in number that I cannot do justice to them. On all sides I heard the widest praise given "The Prince Chap," "The Sting of Victory, "The Light at Dusk," "The Eye of the Night," "Davy Crockett," "The Smugglers," "The Wheels of Justice," "Paying the Price," "Flirting With Fate," "Perils of Divorce," "Hulda of Holland," "Fathers of Men," "The Daring of Diana," "Public Opinion," "The Victory of Conscience," "The Honorable Friend," "The Alibi," "Rolling Stones," and now we have "Civilization" packing the Tremont theater and creating a furore. You are all familiar with this spectacle in New York and others will be when communities wake up to its great value.

"Where Are My Children?" is going strong at the Majestic theater in spite of the efforts of overnice but well meaning persons to have it withdrawn. One scene in the play stands out clearly and is a sermon in itself—the one where the mother asks to be forgiven for not enlightening her little one. Here we find a touch of another rare picture "The Blindness of Virtue," which should be shown in every theater. "It is long past the time for the shams of concealment," said a well known clergyman to me on leaving the theater, "and I am going to send all my parishioners to see this picture, as it beats any sermon I could preach." How's that?

Upon hearing a most favorable comment on "Under Two Flags," the Fox masterpiece, I deposited my quarter, went in to see it, and must take back much that I have written on the brand, for here we have one of the very best pictures ever seen in the Hub, and which might easily have run for weeks. Theda Bara heretofore has not impressed me favorably either in her personality or vampire methods. She seemed to have a sort of wicked expression in all she has essayed—that is, in the pictures seen. Now here we see a human being with a soul and mind; a real flesh and blood woman, and she was good to look upon. This picture will do more to convert theater goers to Miss Bara than all the publicity that finds its way into print. Ouida's story is followed well.

"Common Ground" took an old theme and worked it out cleverly to the credit of the Lasky players with little Doro, a pathetic figure under an impossible hat copied from a cheap novel illustration. The story is convincing and went over well here. Reviewers have told of it, but they overlook many little touches, as in the last reel, when the Judge who has succumbed to the beauty of his little slum find takes a bunch of her pictures sent from the seminary and makes a gallery of them for his library wall. This might have been called the evolution of the hat, for here in the first we see the awful hat she wore in the first reel, improving picture by picture until the last one is one of the latest seen on Broadway. There were some fine types of women of the underworld, a dear little boy and that motherly player, Mrs. Lewis McCord. Thomas Meighan is a local favorite, having married a Hub girl, one of the talented Ring sisters. While Doro was seen in the Lasky picture her husband, Elliott Dexter, was appearing under the Paramount guidance at the Exeter theater in "The American Beauty," with Myrtle Stedman and a strong company of Pallas players. We liked this play all through and were treated to some remarkable double exposures, Miss Stedman playing mother and daughter. W. D. Taylor deserves more than passing mention for his studio and drawing room interiors.

Donald Brian in "The Smugglers" repeated his success in "A Voice in the Fog," and as he is a native of the Hub the attendance was large.

"Shoes," the Bluebird picture with Mary MacLaren, was put over here under the name of "Where Is My Daughter?" presumably to catch the eye and keep up the "Where Are," etc., interest. "Flirting With Fate" scored, as anything does with "Doug" Fairbanks—he of the expansive, compelling smile. "Her Soul's Song," with Dorothy Davenport, was delightful, and such a dear baby! "The Prince Chap" ought to put Marshal Neilan in the front row of actor-directors, for I have not seen anything this year along that line of pictures better done in every way. All know the story of the play picturing Cyril Scott. George Fawcett was delicious as Runyon and the studio scenes were perfect in every detail.

"The Rail Rider," with House Peters doing a railway engineer romantic stunt, was certainly well directed and timely these days of strikes and discontent. He was some hero at the outset when he took the reins in his own hands and got his train out of trouble, for which he was rewarded (?) with a lay-off minus pay by the chief villain of the play—a boss in New York. I should think this might be advertised as a railroad picture, the hero doing some good amateur detective work, etc. "The Daring of Diana" gave good opportunity for Anita Stewart, but if she went through all that action I do not wonder the dear girl was stricken with fever. S. Rankin Drew directed it, and it was a good piece of work, especially in the newspaper offices. Surely Diana was daring enough for her admirers in front to applaud, notably when she actually burns her way through a door and makes an exit. There were some inconsistencies, but on the whole we liked the play, even if "yaller" in spots.

A play not listed in this letter at the opening of it is to my mind and to thousands who went more than once to see is "The Bugle Call," featuring that youngster, Willie Collier, Jr., a lad whose work was so gripping as to cause many moistened eyes. Only fourteen and able to outrank all others in the cast. Here we have an intensely human play, one for young folks to enjoy to the utmost, as it has real Indians fighting as they did many years before the government took a hand and put them on reservations. The massacre was vivid and the army life depicted realistically at a faraway post, but it was the development of the boy's character which caught us. His struggle between loyalty to his lost mother and the liking for the young stepmother (of the right sort), too, was artistic in a high degree.

Our Back Bay theater, the Exeter, is to install an organ soon and will have programs. Jarvis Jocelyn, the pianist par excellence of the picture houses, devotes much time and care to his selections, always in keeping with the picture. When a play is on picturing some foreign country we hear the airs, folk songs as well as more pretentious music typical of that land. He follows no set rules, but never slips up and rarely needs a score. His interpolations are a delight to the music lover in front. Mr. Jocelyn has been on the stage and has dramatic instincts which eminently fit him for such a responsible position.

What fun we had in "How Molly Made Good!" It was so full of meat and stage stars that one had to see it twice to get the detail. Did you note Bob Edeson's house at Sag Harbor and the statue in the front garden, that of the Indian Strongheart? Good piece of business staging a scene right there. Then we had a good look at Mrs. Edeson, daughter of the late Linn Boyd Porter. This is not a new release, but it is good for a repeat anywhere. One title was queered by the spelling of a word, "gardner" instead of "gardener."

Here is a belated comment or two on "Salvation Joan." Why have not more seen it? What are managers thinking of not to show it? Here we have lovely Edna May in a wonderfully good picture, ably supported by some strong Vitagraph players and with dear little Bobby Connelly. She films well and it is a pleasure to see her walk and wear her "fine feathers" so well and to note her shiny hair so severely worn as in her stage days. In this play there is a close-up which no reviewer has mentioned, yet it was a gem in photography. Edna and Bobby Connelly facing each other affectionately and then turning their faces toward the house. A man behind me said it was the finest he had ever seen, and after a chat later on the picture as a whole he gave me his card and it disclosed the fact that he was one of the most noted photographers in the land, therefore a good judge. Harry Morey scored.

George Ade's fables are popular over here and we like to see Charles Stine. I saw one the other night called "The Fable of the Willing Collegian Who Wanted to Get a Foothold," and it was a scream. He interviewed men in different professions and they gave good reasons for discouraging his ambitions. Then we find him looking for a job at the Essanay studios in Chicago and here we have a good picture of the big granite entrance, some of the players entering and leaving, and the long line of aspirants to film fame. This is all clean fun and the titles are the funniest things about the series.

If Rita Jolivet, here this week in "An International Marriage," and which I have not yet seen, could read the cut line in a Boston paper she would indeed be surprised. Beneath her expressive face we read that Col. John Jacob Astor gave his seat in the lifeboat to her when the Lusitania was sinking. We all know (or should) that Astor went to his death from the Titanic somewhat earlier and the name of the late Charles Frohman is indissolubly connected with her in the now memorable utterance "Why fear death? It is the most beautiful adventure in life." Astor naturally gave his place to his wife.

"The Light at Dusk" is a series of pictures most impressive and I know of no better one to play the lead than Orrin Johnson, who had much to do in the evolution from the Russian peasant to a man among men so far as wealth and ambition go. It was daring in the allegorical part, introducing the Saviour, but so reverently done with its lesson and all as to make this play a classic as well as an unconscious sermon. The story is a sad one, but not melancholy, for the great faith in the heart of the woman left behind stood out clearly all the way through.

Many went in to see "The Eye of the Night" because of Tyrone Power's great work in "Where Are My Children?" a splendid ad. for him in any future picture, as he has won all hearts. "The Selfish Woman," with a good cast, including Cleo Ridgley, the dependable one; Wallace Reid, and that excellent actress Edythe Chapman (in private life Mrs. James Neill). Thrills galore we have in this and a rather sudden repentance on the part of a very naughty, selfish woman. "The Tarantula" left a bad taste on account of the hideous manner of killing the villain and the thing itself too often seen in this picture and which thousands fear as did the man himself. I was sorry to have it figure to that extent, as the play and the splendid work of Edith Storey lost weight.

Accepting an invitation to the opening of the new Metro exchange, I took a friend along and we were regaled with a reel or two of "The Crimson Stain Mystery," about which I dreamed that night. Maurice Costello, that prince of screen actors, has some part, and dear little Ethel Grandin has a lot of work cut out for her, judging from what she gets into in the second reel. Louis Mayer, the genial head of the exchange and the vice-president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, was in a happy frame of mind.

The World Equitable is showing strong here, chiefly at the Park, where I saw "A Woman's Way," made from the play in which Grace George (Mrs. William Brady) made a hit. It films very well and Carlyle Blackwell made a stunning opposite for Alice Brady.

Henry B. Walthall's name always means much to the producer, and managers are sure to give pleasure to their following in such pictures as "The Sting of Victory," seen last week at the Fenway. In a dual role he certainly scores and shows his versatility. The "Blue and Gray" spirit mingles well, with the South winning our sympathies as in the "Birth of a Nation," which disclosed to the world of playgoers scenes which were duplicated during the War for the Union and of which we hitherto knew only by hearsay. In the recent releases we have some battle scenes showing heroism and all the rest, and the atmosphere was well preserved through good photography of real Southern scenes, including a fine old colonial mansion. The double exposures were unusual and caused wonderment as to how they were managed. I told my neighbor that it was a "trick of the trade," and I would not enlighten her (fact is, I do not know it).

ANDREW J. COBE IN CHICAGO.

Having completed a tour of the exchanges in the southeast and the southwest who are handling "The Yellow Menace" serial in their respective territories, Andrew J. Cobe, of the Unity Sales Corporation, is now visiting the Balaban-Hershberg Film Attraction in Chicago, who are distributing "The Yellow Menace" in that territory, and the United Film Service, who are distributing "The Yellow Menace" in the fourteen Western states with executive offices and headquarters in Chicago. From Chicago he will proceed to Milwaukee, Minneapolis, then through Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh to New York.

Its General Characteristics and Properties.

By J. F. Ancona, Member Am. Soc. M. E., Special Engineer, Eastman Kodak Co.

NEARLY all motion picture film is made of a transparent nitro-cellulose base or support coated with photographic emulsion. A roll or reel of film as used in the projection machines is about 1,000 feet long and weighs about five pounds.

The film base, often termed pyroxylin, kodaloid, celluloid, pyralin, zylonite, etc., is composed largely of cellulose nitrate of a low degree of nitration. Cotton, paper, wood-pulp or other plant matter is composed largely of cellulose. If purified cellulose is acted upon by a mixture of sulphuric and nitric acids, the cellulose is converted into the cellulose nitrates. There are many of these nitrates, but they fall broadly into two classes: those of a low and those of a high degree of nitration. Many articles, such as combs, toys, etc., are made from the low nitrates; the high nitrates are used extensively in the manufacture of explosives. Film is made from a low nitrate and cannot be exploded by a spark, detonator or ignition.

The inflammability and combustibility of film is due to the fact that, chemically speaking, sufficient oxygen is present within the structure of the material to help support combustion, or to continue decomposition without additional outside air.

Although film is inflammable and burns rapidly, the heat generated by its burning is low, as shown in the following table:

Heat in British Thermal Units, Per Pound, Generated by Complete Combustion.

Motion Picture Film	6,800 B.T.U.
Dry Wood	8,000 to 9,000 B.T.U.
Alcohol	12,000 B.T.U.
Coal	13,000 to 15,000 B.T.U.
Gasoline and Kerosene	20,000 B.T.U.

Although the heat given off per pound of film is relatively low, as shown above, the conclusion must not be drawn that film is less dangerous than other materials, since the heat given off per minute is higher for film than the other materials, on account of the rapidity of combustion.

Film when ignited and allowed to burn with a liberal air supply burns rapidly with a yellow flame and no smoke. If, however, film is ignited with inadequate air supply it will often decompose without flame but with the evolution of dense yellowish gases having an acrid and characteristic odor. In this article this latter phenomenon will be termed "decomposition." Decomposition, if allowed to proceed, may generate sufficient heat to cause the gases to ignite and burn with flame. The gases from decomposing film may be ignited by a flame or spark applied to them; but this ignition can be prevented if the gases have been chilled below their ignition point, as for instance by water from a hose or automatic sprinkler.

A roll of film which is burned or decomposed becomes a charred, carbonaceous mass, somewhat resembling charcoal. Parts of this material continue to glow in a manner very similar to "touch" paper or charcoal, for some time, until reduced to a flakey, grayish ash. This slow combustion of charred or decomposed film may continue for hours and often sufficient heat will be caused to start another fire, providing combustible material, such as more film, is adjacent to the glowing ash.

The decomposition of film will take place at comparatively low temperatures. The following table shows the time required at given temperatures to start decomposition:

Temperatures.	Time.
302° F.	4 min. 6 sec.
311° F.	2 min. 25 sec.
320° F.	1 min. 43 sec.

As previously stated, motion picture film does not and will not explode. A popular impression to the contrary is prevalent.

The false theory concerning the explosibility of film may be occasioned by the possibility of decomposition products forming explosive gas mixtures. Such gas mixtures are caused by a dilution of the products of decomposition with appropriate quantities of air under certain conditions. The possibility or probability of the formation of explosive gas mixtures under usual conditions is rather remote, as will be seen in the following paragraphs.

*Reprinted by permission of the Eastman Kodak Company.

Motion picture film if burning freely with sufficient air gives off colorless, smokeless gases which are not explosive when mixed with air in any proportion. Decomposing film gives off yellowish gases. If these gases are mixed with excess air as fast as they are formed, as when film is decomposing in the open air, generally speaking non-explosive gas mixtures will be formed, which however contain compounds that are poisonous and should not be breathed. Gas explosions under this condition practically never occur.

If, however, decomposition occurs in a closed space and normal atmospheric pressure prevails, explosive gas mixtures may be formed. The explosibility of the gas mixture depends upon many factors, such as the air supply, temperature at which decomposition takes place, etc. Experiments made by the Eastman Kodak Company upon film storage vaults similar to those in use in exchanges and laboratories, with good sprinkler protection and properly vented, show that large volumes of gas will be formed by decomposing film. Chemical analysis of these gases with sprinklers in action indicate the possibility of explosive gas mixtures, yet attempts to produce such explosions by means of ignition were unsuccessful.

If the decomposition of film be allowed to take place in a closed space without the addition of air and the pressure within the space be allowed to build up, violently explosive mixtures may be made if the gases formed are then mixed with air in the proper proportions.

Such a condition as described in the last paragraph formerly existed in many of the film storage vaults when they were not provided with ventilators, and most of the so-called film explosions were in all probability explosions of gas mixtures formed from decomposition under pressure.

Another very prevalent and erroneous idea exists, namely, that the odor noticed in film storages is due to the emanation from the film of an explosive gas or vapor. This odor is due to a very slight quantity of volatile solvents which have remained in the film. The quantity of solvents given off in this manner is so extremely small that the idea of its forming explosive gas mixtures is absurd. The gas mixtures that do explode must always come from decomposition, as outlined in a previous paragraph.

Film is not subject to spontaneous combustion and it is impossible to find an authentic report or proof of spontaneous combustion ever having occurred at ordinary temperatures. Film, however, may decompose and ignite if subjected to temperatures of over 200° F. for a long period of time.

Motion picture film may be ignited and set on fire by an open flame, by a spark, by heat, by friction producing heat, by chemical action producing heat. By far the greatest number of film fires are caused by film being subjected to an open flame or spark, such as an electric flash, burning match, cigarette or cigar, contact with hot metal like a rheostat, steam pipe, etc.

Water will extinguish any film fire if applied quickly and in sufficient quantity. Film which has been burning until decomposition has started throughout the entire mass will not be extinguished even if plunged in water; the film will continue to decompose under water. Sand will prevent a film fire from spreading but will not entirely extinguish it; the film is apt to continue to decompose.

If one or several rolls of film have started burning fairly, the most important procedure in addition to dousing the rolls of film with water is to prevent fire or decomposition spreading to adjacent film. The automatic sprinkler is the most useful appliance to accomplish this result. One of the most important features of the automatic sprinkler system is the manner in which the spray or rain of water washes and chills any gases or vapors evolved, thereby keeping them below the ignition point.

The Dangers, Hazards and Remedies.

Having already outlined the general characteristics and properties of film, it seems desirable to summarize the particular dangers of the material and the remedies or methods of minimizing such dangers.

In order of their importance the principal dangers of film are as follows:

First. The ease of ignition.

Second. Combustibility.

Third. Rapidity of burning and ease of transmission of fire.

Fourth. Difficulty of extinguishing when thoroughly burning.

Fifth. The possibility of explosive gas mixtures.

The ease of ignition can only be offset by a habitually careful and conscientious elimination of all possible causes by which film might be ignited, namely, open flame, sparks or heat. The most trivial circumstances may often supply the open flame or spark, such as a match which has been carelessly dropped or trod upon, a broken electric light globe, a short-circuited electric wire, unprotected steam pipes, and the like.

Assuming film to be on fire, the combustibility and rapidity of spread can only be combated by efficient and rapid application of considerable quantities of water for the purpose of extinguishing and controlling the fire. One of the greatest factors in cutting down the rapidity of spread of a film fire is the keeping of film in approved containers, each holding a single reel; this retards the spread of heat from one reel of film to another. The containers also greatly reduce the chance of the film being ignited. Fire-fighting appliances should be provided in liberal quantities and, if possible, film exchanges, studios or laboratories should be located in sprinklered buildings.

The elimination of the possibility of the formation of explosive gas mixtures is entirely a question of proper design and construction of storage rooms or vaults. If such storage places are properly vented to the outer air, and if proper sprinkler protection be installed inside of the vault, the probability of explosive gas mixtures is very remote.

A film fire once started is difficult to extinguish, owing to the rapidity of spread of both fire and decomposition. It is imperative to get adequate volumes of water upon the blaze in the very shortest time. Five seconds at the start is more valuable than twenty minutes at the end of a fire. No known device so completely meets the requirement of quick discovery and rapid application of water when needed as the automatic sprinkler. Many tests made by the Eastman Kodak Company show the operation of the heads to be rapid; and sufficient water may be delivered to hold, control and finally extinguish all burning and decomposing film, if the sprinklers are properly installed.

The rain or spray of water from the sprinklers is of great importance in preventing the spread of fire or decomposition, in chilling the gases so that they do not burn, and also probably greatly reducing the chance of possible explosive gas mixtures.

DOUGHERTY OUT OF BIOGRAPH.

Lee Dougherty, for many years with the Biograph Company, has resigned his latest position of director general of productions, which he has held for the past five years, and is now at liberty. Mr. Dougherty's long connection with the Biograph in almost every capacity fits him for directing the work of production to an extent that is hardly equaled by any other man in the business and he will, no doubt, soon be able to announce a future engagement.

PHOTOPLAY EDITION OF "THE CRISIS."

Grosset & Dunlap, book publishers, are preparing a magnificent photoplay edition of "The Crisis." The book, which is to sell at popular price, will be illustrated with scenes from the Selig play. The publishers are also preparing to issue a line of striking publicity matter, including beautiful one-sheet posters in color, which will also carry scenes from the film drama. It is expected that "The Crisis" will be released to the public soon.

SECRETARY MEGOWN RESIGNS.

Charles E. Megown, proprietor of the Cameraphone theater and one of the hardest workers in the ranks of the Exhibitors' League, has resigned as secretary of the exhibitors' body. Megown accepted the office against his will a few weeks ago, but found that it required too much of his time. Megown and Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the league, are credited with having built up the organization to its present strength. Megown will continue as a member of the body and will devote as much time to league work as he can spare from his business.

ARROW SIGNS SIDNEY BRACY.

Sidney Bracy, who will be remembered for his magnificent work in "The Million Dollar Mystery" and other Thanhouser serials and feature pictures, has been signed by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, for work in a number of new features which will be produced under the direction of Howell Hansel at the Arrow's studio in Yonkers, N. Y.

"THE TOLL OF JUSTICE" READY SEPT. 15.

Word comes from the studio and head office of the Florida Feature Film Company to the effect that their next five-reel picture, "The Toll of Justice," will be ready for the trade on or about September 15.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 69, 1916 (Selig), Aug. 28.—President of France visits the battlefields on the River Somme; Generals Roques and Joffre note artillery fire; high French officials inspect 42 centimeter guns; Gov. Dunne, of Illinois, visits training camp at New Braunfels, Tex.; Ohio building moved from Exposition grounds, San Francisco; railroad presidents confer at Washington; Health authorities from 38 states discuss infantile paralysis, Washington; mortar gun practice at Fort Totten, L. I.; Donald Pope on motorcycle defeats Domenjoz in aeroplane; Walter C. Hagen wins Western open golf championship at Milwaukee; Candidate Hughes at San Francisco.

THE FAIR FARE (Vitagraph), Aug. 28.—Frederick Hiller, who wrote and directed the scenario of this one-reel picture, has cleverly interwoven a number of educational views into the plot of his story. The hero, played by Mr. Heller, keeps an auto for hire and is tricked by his newly-wedded wife into taking her on a sight-seeing tour to the points of interest about Seattle. The picture is a novelty. Caroline Vaughn brings a pleasing personality and a bright smile to the part of the wife.

HAM IN THE DRUG STORE (Kalem), Aug. 29.—However bitter the dose the customers are forced to swallow, it is a pleasant concoction that Ham, Bud and Ethel hand over the counter in this one-reel comedy to "the man out in front." Inspired by the wonderful success of a patent medicine faker, Ham and Bud break into the drug store business, mix the villain a horrible compound and dispense sodas and laughs in equal proportions.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF WASHINGTON (Essanay), Aug. 30.—The motion drawings that artist Bailey has made of the many points of interest at the Capitol, are equal to his preceding work in point of skill. This fact, coupled with the scope of his subject, makes this number one of the most valuable of the series. Another installment of the interesting Essanay scenics is on the same reel.

THE TORMENTED HUSBAND (Vim), Aug. 30.—The domestic peace of the Newlyweds again gets a serious jolt in this number of the Vim Feature comedies, in which Harry C. Meyers and Rosemary Theby are now appearing. The picture keeps pace with the previous numbers of the series, both as to plot and the finished acting of the two stars.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 70, 1916 (Selig), Aug. 31.—Mrs. Walter Pierce flying at Mineola, L. I.; high Catholic dignitaries at American Federation of Catholic Societies, New York; archery tournament, Jersey City, N. J.; dressmakers contest, Chicago; public field day, Cambridge, Mass.; wounded soldiers from both sides, and shells to be used against German trenches, Herbecourt, France; British field artillery; Capt. Jack Wulf wins trap shooting championship, St. Louis; Candidate Hughes at Exposition, San Diego, Cal.

AN AERIAL JOY RIDE (Vim), Aug. 31.—Runt determines to present his wife with an automobile but finds he has only money enough to purchase a flivver. To make matters worse, he engages Plump as chauffeur, and that heavyweight loses control of the machine to such an extent that it refuses to stay upon the solid earth. The effect of the auto sailing through the air is cleverly handled. There are both excitement and amusement before the machine quits the earth.

TANGLED BY TELEPHONE (Kalem), Sept. 1.—A young dentist who neglects his patients in order to talk over the telephone to his newly-wedded wife, is the tangled-up party in this one-reel comedy. The complications are amusing. Ivy Close and Arthur Albertson head the cast. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Sept. 2, page 1531.

THE SECRET OF THE BOX CAR (No. 95 of "The Hazards of Helen"—Kalem), Sept. 2.—An up-to-standard "hazard," a review of this number of the railroad serial was printed in the issue of Sept. 2, page 1531.

LOVE AND FRONT (Vitagraph), Sept. 1.—This one-reel comedy has the merit of containing considerable new material. The hero's father is an ardent fisherman, and favors a young woman for a daughter-in-law who is skilled in the use of a hook and line. The girl is so ill-favored, however, that the hero refuses to be caught by her bait, and complicates matters by falling in love with a pretty young lady who never landed a fish in her life. The comedy is neat, and the outdoor scenes have been selected with an eye to pictorial effect. Shirley Mouer, Wm. Lytell, Jr., and Jessie Miller are worthy members of the cast.

FAITH'S REWARD (Knickerbocker), Aug. 25.—A three-reel star feature, this photoplay tells a clear story in which western mining life and existance in the large cities of the East are intermingled. The hero allows a sudden stroke of fortune to blind his eyes to the worth of the woman who has known and loved him in his poverty. He marries a society girl, loses his money and his wife and goes back West, to find true happiness with his old sweetheart. The plot is simple, but consistent, and the picture is acted satisfactorily by Harry King, Marguerite Nichols, Ida Van Tine, Mollie McConnell, Fred Whitman and Daniel Gilfether.

OUT OF THE MIST (Selig), Aug. 28.—Emma Bell is the author of this three-reel photoplay, which does not lack of dramatic material. The big situation comes when an aged roue is told by one of his victims that the girl he is trying to destroy is his own child. Several of the situations are rather strained, especially the one that gives the picture its title, but there is no denying the dramatic value of the story. Fritzi Brunette is an appealing and artistic heroine, and Wm. Scott, Guy Oliver, Gertrude Oakman, Frank Clark and Lillian Hayward complete a well balanced cast.

ENOCH ARDEN (Biograph), Aug. 29.—This Griffith reissue in two-reels has the reputation of being an extremely artistic picture. Wilfred Lucas has the title role, and Linda Arvidson, Alfred Paget, Bobby Harron and Florence LaBladie are important members of the cast. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Aug. 19, page 1235.

TIGERS UNCHAINED (No. 4 of "The Girl from Frisco" Serial—Kalem), Aug. 30.—There is plenty of excitement in this installment of Robert Welles Ritchie's western serial. A band of escaped convicts capture the girl from Frisco, and there is a fine exhibition of horsemanship before Barbara is rescued. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Sept. 2, page 1531.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

BEHIND THE LINES (Sept. 11).—A five-part military drama in which the story is laid in Mexico, and the story itself an adaptation of one by Mary Rider, treats of how a young woman, in order to save her sister from being thrown to the common herd of Mexicans, agrees to become associated with a spy. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

International Film Service, Inc.

Mutual Film Corporation

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 51 (Gaumont), Aug. 30.—Mauch Chunk, Pa., is the subject of this number. The numerous views given of the Pennsylvania mountain district are remarkably beautiful. Mt. Pisgah and Mt. Jefferson are among the mountains in that vicinity which are shown.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 87, Aug. 30.—This number includes some interesting scenes from the French trenches; also an open air school for tenement children at Boston, the opening of an aerial tramway at Niagara, a water carnival at Balboa, Cal., and other interesting items.

REEL LIFE, NO. 18 (Gaumont), Sept. 3.—Containing "A Day With the Yachtsmen," which shows an actual yacht race with the preliminary preparations for it; "Hydraulic Gold Mining in Southern Oregon," giving a fully detailed account of the mining of placer gold, and a sketch from Life in which a young husband, arriving home late in the evening, enters the wrong house and, believing that he sees his wife being kissed by another man, proceeds to knock the man down. The turning on of the light reveals his mistake. The latter is quite amusing.

MUSIKERS (Falstaff), Sept. 5.—Rather an amusing comedy in which

Oscar and Conrad, street musicians, quarrel and finally have a reunion on the strength of the old maxim, "misery likes company." Some amusing business has been introduced in the course of the comedy.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 52 (Gaumont), Sept. 6.—This number presents some beautiful scenic views taken along the Columbia river in Oregon. It begins with sunrise and closes with sunset. Many points of particular interest are shown, including numerous waterfalls, bridges and splendid automobile roads. The photography is very fine.

TALE OF A WHALE (Gaumont), Sept. 6.—A cartoon comic by Harry Palmer, on same reel with above. This pictures the adventures of a colored girl who hooks a whale with her fish line. The animated drawings are clever and amusing.

JERRY AND THE BANDITS (Cub), Sept. 5. George Ovey appears in this number as captain of a troop which invades Mexico. He and his sweetheart are made captives by the bandits, who demand ransom money for the girl's return. Jerry rescues the girl and then she turns him down for the lieutenant. The action in this is lively and it proves fairly humorous. It is well up to the average in plot.

THE GAMBLER'S LOST LOVE (Mustang), Sept. 1.—A two-reel Western number, by Karl Coolidge, featuring Jack Richardson, Queenie Rosson and others. This is the story of a gambler who neglects his wife, Helen. The latter gets a divorce and he marries a pretty widow. Helen then takes up with Tom, her former sweetheart. The finding of the note is a pretty feature, though there is some unnecessary repetition. The gambler's neglect of his second wife and her death at the birth of her child leads up to a human and pathetic situation. The development is natural and the production quite effective, though the settings are ordinary.

THE STOLEN BOOKING (Vogue), Sept. 3.—A two-reel knockabout comedy, by F. Palmer. Rube Miller and Ben Turpin appear as two would-be actors who steal the booking contract of two real performers. They go to the small town opera house and pretend to be the players. They appear in a burlesque melodrama, which is not explosively funny, but quite diverting. The real actors show up and start a rough house, which winds up with a fire. There is also considerable juggling of the cash box and its contents. This is fairly successful; the action is of the rapid fire sort.

ATONEMENT (American), Sept. 4.—A two-reel number, by Wm. Parker, featuring Alfred Vosburg and Vivian Rich. The story is not particularly original, but attractively presented. Dick, the son of a millionaire, hits a man with a bottle at college, and thinks he has killed him. He escapes to the wharf, where he is robbed, thrown into an open boat and allowed to drift out to sea. He is discovered by a fisher girl and brought to the small village, where he falls in love with the girl and works out his destiny. The action is good and the leading characters make a strong appeal.

A WALL STREET TRAGEDY (Mutual Masterpicture De Luxe), Aug. 14.—This is a five-part production featuring Nat C. Goodwin. The story takes the form of a heavy drama well suited to Goodwin's capabilities. It has been forcefully staged by Lawrence Marsten with the aid of an exceptionally fine cast. "A Wall Street Tragedy" will prove a strong drawing card for any theater.

THE DIAMOND RUNNERS (Mutual Star Production—Signal), Aug. 28.—The story of this five-reel feature is rather an absorbing one, despite various inconsistencies which occur in detail. It is clearly defined and the members of the cast do excellent work with an interesting characterization. A review of the production will be found elsewhere.

THE FORGOTTEN PRAYER (Mustang), Aug. 31.—A three-part number written by Kenneth Clarke. The cast includes Anna Little, Frank Borzage, Jack Richardson and Perry Banks. The story has some originality, principally in the part dealing with the search of the old desert wanderer for someone who can help him to remember the Lord's prayer. The human element of the picture is strong, and it is moderately enjoyable.

THE COUNT (Mutual-Chaplin), August.—This proves another success for Charles Chaplin. It is full of his inimitable humor from start to finish and will bring much laughter. He first appears as assistant to a lady's tailor, but loses his job. He then breaks into a reception where his former boss intends posing as a French count. Chaplin learns of the proposed deception and claims to be the count himself. The small business in this is handled with a rare appreciation of humorous values. The number is in many ways equal to anything Chaplin has done.

THE TRAP (Centaur), Sept. 2.—A two-part western production in which Crane Wilbur plays the masculine lead. The story is moderately entertaining and treats of certain happenings in a western town where the wife of the saloonkeeper who runs the roulette wheel and incidentally draws into her net a young tenderfoot. The incident reveals to the tenderfoot's partner, a recluse, that the woman is the same one who left him a year or so previously for another man. The trap which the recluse has set to catch animals acts unintentionally as a man trap also, and forms one of the main pivots of the story.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), Sept. 3.—"With the Fisherman of the Deep," the leading article in this number of Paramount's screen magazine, shows the methods used in taking fish from the Atlantic in large quantities. Another subject that savors of the sea goes under the head of "Lighthouses." Then there is a military camp for boys where they are taught to be efficient soldiers, and finally we have pictures of chewing gum in the making. Altogether a very fair issue.

GLIMPSES OF ENGLISH TOWN AND COUNTRY (Burton Holmes), Sept. 7.—This is the second of Burton Holmes' travel series dealing with English scenes. There is variety in abundance in the trip that includes Salisbury, Wells, Oxford and Cambridge and affords glimpses of the lives of the people met on the way.

BOBBY BUMPS AND THE STORK (Brady Studios), Sept. 7.—To save his dog from a premature death, Bobby Bumps devises a scheme to fool his father. It works very well, with a chicken disguised to impersonate a stork, acting as intermediary between the dog and his enemy. Earl Hurd is responsible for this amusing cartoon. The last part of the film is devoted to a Bruce subject, "The Orang's Kindergarten," being a study of young orangoutangs.

Universal Film Corporation

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 35 (Universal), Aug. 28.—An entertaining and diversified number containing many scenes of interest at home and abroad. A Texas hurrican, Chicago auto races, candidate Hughes enroute, American Industrial Commission in France, and a number of war sidelights are included.

THE CHANCE MARKET (Gold Seal), Aug. 29.—A three-reel number, written by King Baggot, who also plays a double role. He is assisted by Ireno Hunt, Jack Ridgway and Frank Smith. This is the story of a rich young man and a crook, who look exactly alike. The former shoots the latter, during a raid on his rooms, has the crook buried as himself and then goes into the underworld. Here he meets the crook's girl and falls in love with her. This is entertaining, in spite of the fact that changes of identity are frequent in stories, and bring up very much the same situations. Some of the comedy work is pleasing.

THE PINACLE (Imp), Sept. 8.—This three-reel number, by F. McGrew Willis, is happily cast, introducing Richard Stanton, Myrtle Gonzales, Hayward Mack, Calvert Irvine and Paul Scbail. The tragic and rather incomplete close will disappoint many observers, yet on the whole the production is a strong one. It pictures in an entertaining manner the life of a young lawyer, an artist and an old doctor in a tenement house. Love enters in the shape of a girl patron for the artist. He and the lawyer love her and she has still a third admirer in an unscrupulous financier. The young lawyer wins her. The story is quite dramatic and a strong one except for the closing scenes.

THE WHIRLPOOL OF DESTINY (Red Feather), Sept. 10.—A five-reel number, by Eugene B. Lewis and F. McGrew Willis, featuring Flora Parker De Haven, Chas. H. Malles, Jack Mulhall and others. The plot has a number of conventional situations and develops rather jerkily. It centers about a wild youth from the country and a city girl, whose father is a drunkard. The story gets hold of the interest, but never rises to any great dramatic heights. The number, as a whole, is of about average strength.

TILLIE'S TERRIBLE TRUBLES (L-KO), Sept. 12.—A three-reel burlesque comedy, featuring Alice Howell, Fatty Voss and others. The opening scenes have an element of humor, but are handled too deliberately. A number of laughs crop out at times, though the development is not strong. The burlesque hanging is quite well done. Two reels would have answered to carry this production.

BABY'S TOOFS (Victor), Sept. 14.—A three-reel light comedy number, featuring Harry C. Myers, Rosemary Theby and James Rosen. This is highly diverting in certain scenes, but is strung out too much. Two reels instead of three would have answered. The ornamental subtitles and settings are very pleasing. The plot is slight, but amusing, picturing the way in which a young married couple invite in their friends and relatives to celebrate the baby's new teeth. It develops that the baby merely has two white beans in its mouth.

AN ANGEL OF THE ATTIC (Imp), Sept. 15.—Violet Merserau and Harry Benham carry the leading roles in a simple story of considerable charm. The plot concerns the romance of a famous artist, who, to escape social obligations, lives in a poor quarter of the city where he meets his ideal in the person of a girl who makes artificial flowers. The picture is admirably staged and many of the scenes acted by Miss Merserau and Mr. Benham are delightful. Released in two reels.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

THE LUCKY LEAP (Victor), Aug. 29.—A knockabout comedy, featuring Ed Sedgwick as a fat country boy who goes to the city. He meets a girl and is mistaken for a pickpocket, then wins a big reward for capturing the real thief. This is unusually well photographed and strikes a good average in plot.

AS THE CANDLE BURNED (Imp), Sept. 10.—The story of an old man about to be sent to the poorhouse. He sits by the burning candle and reviews scenes from his early life, then dies at the close. This same idea has been carried out more strongly in other ways. The number lacks any special freshness or originality of treatment.

JANE'S CHOICE (Victor), Sept. 12.—The husband selected for a young woman is entirely too stout to suit her taste and she is advised to keep him on the jump until exercise reduces his weight. Scenes are laid at a summer resort where the girl temporarily disposes of her admirer by leaving him stranded on an uninhabited island. While the man is seriously perplexed, his fiancee is becoming acquainted with a handsome youth who approximates her ideal. Needless to say, the stout man is the loser in the three-cornered romance. Matt Moore and Jane Gail are the leading players in this picture, which is pleasing in a superficial way. Locations are very attractive.

FOR HER MOTHER'S SAKE (Big U), Sept. 14.—This story, by Frank Wilterwood, features Edward Brown, Vola Smith, G. Raymond Nye and Chas. Gunn. The old poet reads the story of the girl's mother's life, written in verse. The offering is strongly sentimental and has a pathetic close. It will probably have considerable appeal for a production of the type.

THE TIMBER WOLF (Big U), Sept. 15.—A story of the big timber country, by Helen Jonas, featuring Molly Malone, Jack Nelson, Helen Galvin and Burton C. Law. It tells of a city girl who longs to return to civilization, but falls in love and is content to remain in the woods. The plot is very simple. The settings are quite picturesque.

SPEEDING (Nestor), Sept. 15.—On his afternoon off, a soda fountain clerk takes a girl for an automobile ride and incurs her anger by attempting to kiss her. The irate young woman and her chum more than get even with the youth when they accompany him on another ride and make off with the machine while he is picking flowers by the roadside. His difficulties in getting back to town are numerous and quite amusing. A fair comedy number acted with spirit.

IN ONIONS THERE IS STRENGTH (Joker), Sept. 16.—At a meeting of the Anti-Sin League, it is decided to investigate a prison. The deacon enters the cell of a convict whose escape is being planned by a feminine confederate on the outside. The convict appropriates the deacon's clerical garb, walks out of jail and leaves the reformer in a sorry predicament. As a crowning insult, the deacon is arrested for assisting a prisoner to escape. The picture is filled with good hits of comedy business and the laughs are as wholesome as they are numerous.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

PHANTOM FORTUNE (Vitagraph), Sept. 4.—An excellent five-part comedy-drama featuring Barney Bernard of "Potash and Perlmutter" fame. This is undoubtedly one of the best comedy-dramas of the season, of which a full review will be found elsewhere.

World-Pictures.

THE VELVET PAW (Paragon—World)), Sept. 11.—A very well produced story of political life in Washington, produced by Maurice Tourneur with House Peters, Gail Kane, Ned Burton and Frank Goldsmith in the cast. Besides being convincingly acted, the picture profits by many appropriate backgrounds photographed in Washington. A review may be found elsewhere in this issue.

VIVIAN MARTIN STARTS ON NEW SUBJECT.

Vivian Martin, who has just made her debut on the Paramount program in the Oliver Morosco photoplay, "The Stronger Love," has commenced activities on a new vehicle to be released under the Pallas brand. "The Right Direction," a touching drama by Julia Crawford Ivers, is the title of the latest Vivian Martin subject in which the star appears as a waif of the tenements.

As Polly Eccles, Miss Martin will portray the "Little Mother" of the Slums of a big Eastern city who starts out to tramp to California where she expects to find a bright future for herself as well as for her baby brother Billy Boy. Many different difficulties and dangers are encountered on the way which lead up to a most surprising climax.

Playing opposite Miss Martin is Colin Chase, the handsome leading man who has just signed a long term contract with the Pallas Pictures, following his appearance in "David Garrick" and other Pallas productions. This is Mr. Chase's initial subject as leading man for Miss Martin. Other well-known players in the cast are Herbert Standing, Alfred Hollingsworth, Billy Mason and Baby Jack White. E. Mason Hopper, who also has just become affiliated with these producers, is chief director, while Homer Scott will supervise the photography.

"THE SEX LURE" NEXT IVAN PRODUCTION.

"Her Surrender" having been completed, the Ivan Film Productions are already preparing for the next production, "The Sex Lure," to be released in October. The new play which will be put into work is based on an original story especially conceived for the screen by L. V. Jefferson, one of our foremost dramatists. Because of the difficulty of its treatment and the wonderful possibilities it affords both the cast and the director, the scenario department of the Ivan Company has concentrated its entire efforts since last June to make the working script worthy of treatment by a master director.

There are six parts, each almost equally strong, and the Ivan Company has closed contracts with several stars and is at present negotiating with other stellar lights of both the silent and spoken stage to enact various roles in their next play. Immediately the cast is completed a further full announcement will be made.

Work will commence almost immediately, and "The Sex Lure" is expected to be completed early in October so that it may be the regular scheduled Ivan release for that month.

DISPATCH FILM CORPORATION.

Half a floor at 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, is now being put into shape for the quarters of a new film rental concern known as the Dispatch Film Corporation.

This concern has been incorporated for over two months, and during this time General Manager Walter Scheuer has busied himself preparing to make a bid for his share of the rental business of Greater New York and environs.

LENORE ULRICH AT HER BEST IN "THE INTRIGUE."

Closely following Lenore Ulrich's return to New York from the Pallas Pictures studios, Los Angeles, an advance print of her new photoplay, "The Intrigue," arrived at the New York offices of the company last Friday. Immediately upon its arrival the film was viewed by several New York film men who enthused over its exceptional qualities.

Presenting a gripping story of present international conditions, "The Intrigue" displays delicate treatment of a difficult subject. Partly staged in Europe and partly in the United States, it tells of a young American inventor and his perfected X-ray gun that would revolutionize modern warfare. Foreign powers are brought into the story, but handled in such a manner as not to offend even the most sensitive, a strong humane element giving the story great sympathetic appeal.

As the beautiful Countess Sonia Varnli, a secret service spy, Lenore Ulrich appears in the stellar role and evidences even more than in her other screen endeavors her natural screen talent and charm. Supporting her are Cecil Van Auker, Howard Davies, Herbert Standing, Florence Vidor and Paul Weigel. The production will be released on the Paramount Program, October 2.

"WAR BRIDES" WELL UNDER WAY.

Herbert Brenon has completed a sufficient number of consecutive scenes of "War Brides" to give a definite idea of the nature and power of the picture, and this week he invited Lewis J. Selznick, who controls the release, and Mitchell Mark, president of the Mark Strand Theater Company, to the projection room at the studio on Hudson Heights for a private view. Mr. Mark, as a disinterested spectator, was particularly impressed, and said:

"This is a superb production of a wonderful picture. I was thrilled as I have seldom been thrilled by a photoplay. It is simply a masterpiece. It reveals the combination of two unusual geniuses: Brenon, the director; Nazimova, the actress. It is difficult to decide which has contributed more to the results, the man who has reconstructed the drama from its original form or the tragedienne whose art shines out here with all the clearness that it has in her presentations of spoken drama."

"BEATRICE FAIRFAX" IN MANY NEW YORK THEATERS.

"The Missing Watchman," the first episode of "Beatrice Fairfax," the new photoplay of the International Film Service, Inc., was shown for the first time in New York yesterday (Monday), in more than two score theaters. Before the week is out it will be seen in 150 New York theaters and approximately 1,500 theaters throughout the United States.

The new series was most enthusiastically received. Harry Fox, famous as a Broadway comedian, makes his film debut in "Beatrice Fairfax" as "Jimmy Barton," a newspaper reporter. His work is of the highest order and there is every indication that he will achieve as great success on the screen as he has as a comedian.

Grace Darling, who appears in the title role, is smart and shows marked dramatic ability. The photography and lighting of the picture is exceptionally good.

EAGLE FILM CO. REORGANIZES.

Reorganization of the directorate of the Eagle Film Manufacturing & Producing Company, Chicago, bringing the control of the company into the hands of thoroughly practical men in the motion picture field, is announced by that company. At a meeting of stockholders held recently William J. Dunn, Frank Zambreno, J. J. Aman, Howard A. Brundage, J. Leitch, N. Salopoulos, Charles M. Rose, J. B. Enders, Frank G. McClure, Theodore Hochstetter and Thomas F. Fleming were chosen directors and given full power to direct the affairs of the company according to their ideas of the best interests of the stockholders.

Subsequently these directors chose Mr. Dunn, who was largely instrumental in the organization of the company and who has occupied the position of general manager and director from the first, president of the company.

Clawson from the novel written by Frederick S. Isham and produced by arrangement with the publishers, the Bobbs-Merrill Company. The picture was directed by Lloyd B. Carleton and scenarioized by Mrs. E. N. Engleton. In addition to the featured players, the cast includes Gretchen Lederer, Richard Morris, Mark Fenton, Virginia Southern and Wilfred Rogers.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has purchased the photoplay rights to Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe's novel, "The Pearl of Orr's Island." The scenario has been prepared by S. C. Spalding, a new name among photoplay writers.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE STORM" (Lasky).

Blanche Sweet will be seen in September in the Jesse L. Lasky production of "The Storm," a Paramount drama written especially for her by Leighton Osmun, and produced by Frank Reicher.

Miss Sweet has been seen in many roles, but in "The Storm" she appears as a half wild, fun-loving daughter of a retired professor who is so submerged in his studies that he permits his daughter to run at will in the Maine summer resort where they live.

The majority of the scenes in this thrilling drama were taken in the mountains near an unfrequented lake. The company was forced to go several hundred miles by train, nearly fifty miles by automobile and through part of the country they had to construct their own road. Here they camped for several weeks. Miss Sweet is surrounded by a cast of unusual excellence, including such well-known artists as Theodore Roberts and Thomas Meighan.

GLADYS HULETTE IN "PRUDENCE, THE PIRATE."

Gladys Hulette, the Thanhouser star, is soon to appear in "Prudence, the Pirate," a feature that will be released through the Pathe exchanges. The story is by Agnes C. Johnston, author of "The Shine Girl," in which Miss Hulette is making such a success. William Parke, who directed "The Shine Girl," is "Prudence's" director.

The story tells of a girl who has piratical ambitions and who is assisted in them by a party of tramps that she enlists. "Prudence" seizes a sailing vessel and attacks a house boat, bringing about dramatic situations and sparkling comedy. A fire on the ship furnishes one of the exciting scenes.

Much of the action takes place on a "windjammer" that cruised Long Island Sound with the company while the picture was being made. Miss Hulette makes an adorable pirate. She is supported by Flora Finch, Riley Chamberlin, Barnett Parker, A. J. Andrews, Eric Hudson, James Sullivan and Billy Brown.

Panthus, said to be the ugliest pup in the world, has an important part in the production.

WARWICK DISCOVERS A STAGE "FATHER."

For a long time World Film directors who had Robert Warwick in charge experienced great difficulty in finding a man to portray Mr. Warwick's father in a picture, and still bear some physical resemblance to the star. William A. Brady and Director Emile Chautard solved the problem recently when they met Clarence Harvey, a newspaper man and story writer.

So closely do photoplayer and literary man resemble each other that Mr. Warwick, together with his manager and director, have arranged with Mr. Harvey to appear in all future Warwick pictures where a character representing his father is called for.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 88 HAS WIDE RANGE OF SUBJECTS.

The war in Europe, manoeuvres on the Texas border, and the signing of the Army and Navy bills are the martial contributions of the week to Mutual Weekly No. 88. The Gaumont Company, which manufacturers and edits this reel, has secured from the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont some unusual views of a little-known phase of the war. This is the part Portugal is playing in the struggle. An American echo of the war is pictured in the gift of 4,500,000 pounds of flour by Canada to England. Lloyds of London recently gave a fleet of motor ambulances to France, and President Poincare is pictured as he accepts the gift on behalf of his country.

More peaceful scenes in this number of the Mutual Weekly show the water carnival at Waltham, Mass., the great searchlight recently built at Brooklyn, N. Y., and Charlie Chaplin endangering his life and salary by entering the bull ring during a fight at Venice, Cal. The sporting section of the reel shows the defeat of McLoughlin and Dawson by Johnston and Griffin in the National Tennis Championships at Forest Hills, L. I.

LASKY TO MAKE HOPKINSON SMITH STORY.

The Lasky company announces it has obtained the photoplay rights to the late F. Hopkinson Smith's famous novel of the Jersey coast, "The Tides of Barnegat." It will be placed in production soon with Blanche Sweet as the star. Miss Sweet will take the part of the older of two sisters who is called upon to risk her life to save the other.

In obtaining the rights to "The Tides of Barnegat" the Lasky company has captured a novel which has been eagerly sought by photoplay producers since its publication several years ago. It is one of the probabilities made possible by the consolidation of the Famous Players-Lasky studios that this production can be made on the locale the author intended.

"THE PONY EXPRESS RIDER" (Selig).

Exhibitors of motion pictures will be pleased to know of the forthcoming release of "The Pony Express Rider," written and directed by Tom Mix, the Selig cowboy star. Multiple reel dramas featuring Tom Mix are invariably found by exhibitors to be box-office winners, and are highly desirable during the hot weather months. This Selig two-reel drama will be released in regular service through General Film Company on Monday, September 11. In this production Tom Mix, the daring cowboy picture star, is supported by Victoria Forde and an all-star cast. There is an interesting plot and a series of stirring episodes which lead to a smashing climax. Mix performs an unusual number of his daring "stunts" and risks his life time and again in order to provide thrills for motion picture audiences. There is some wonderful riding in this subject and a wealth of beautiful scenic effects.

"THE WOMAN ALWAYS PAYS" (Essanay).

The outstanding characteristic of this picture, which is offered in three acts, is the fact that the two leading parts are played by heavies, masculine and feminine; and, further, that these two leads are among the most popular players in pictures in just such parts. They are well cast. Lillian Drew has another of the adventurous parts she plays so well, and the villain is ably portrayed by Sydney Ainsworth. It is a drama with intense situations throughout, one with a variation of the theme of how the man may recover his standing regardless of past deeds, while the woman always must pay. Well selected locations and beautiful photography mark the picture. The indicated moral is particularly good and should recommend it to any group of spectators.

"LESS THAN THE DUST" NEW PICKFORD PICTURE.

The first Pickford subject to be made by Artcraft Pictures Corporation is "Less Than the Dust," which is the name of the poem by Laurence Hope, to which the author of the play, Hector Turnbull, credits his inspiration for the plot. Miss Pickford will be seen as a little English girl whom misfortune places in an East Indian setting.

It is announced that "Less Than the Dust" will be presented by Artcraft early in October. Miss Pickford is giving the play an artistic and costly production, and has assembled a notable supporting company. John Emerson is in charge of the direction. When completed the picture will furnish a complete entertainment.

In view of the interest with which Miss Pickford's newest picture is awaited, the poem which inspired it is given herewith:

Less than the dust beneath thy chariot wheel,
Less than the rust that never stained thy sword,
Less than the trust thou hast in me, my Lord,
Even less than these!

Less than the weed that grows beside thy door,
Less than the speed of hours spent far from thee,
Less than the need thou hast in life for me,
Even less am I!

Since I, my Lord, am nothing unto thee,
See here my sword. I make it keen and bright,
Love's last reward—Death comes to me to-night,
Farewell, Zahirudin.

"THE DIAMOND RUNNERS" (Signal).

Most recent of the Mutual Star Productions featuring Helen Holmes, the Signal Film Corporation star, will be released August 28 under the title of "The Diamond Runners." In this production Miss Holmes for the first time in her long career as a star of the screen will assay an adventurous role, having been cast for the part of the leader of a band of notorious "diamond runners."

The scenes of this production, written and screened by Director General J. P. McGowan, are laid chiefly in the diamond fields of South Africa, and reveal the many methods pursued by the "runners" in smuggling raw diamonds into Europe and the United States.

Much of the story is founded on actual facts. Mr. McGowan, who fought through the Boer War, later serving as a member of the British Southern African constabulary, had frequently been called upon to aid in the suppression of the "runners."

Considerable of the action takes place on board a liner at sea, where various thrills have been injected into the production, among them a fight between one of the "runners" and a British secret service agent, which ends with the death of the former when he is thrown overboard.

In order to secure the proper atmosphere for the staging of various of the exteriors representing the South African coast, Miss Holmes, Director McGowan and the big company of players appearing in her support spent almost a month along the Hawaiian coast where these scenes were enacted.

"THE DAWN MAKER" (Kay Bee).

Those who admire the work of William S. Hart—and who of those who attend moving picture theaters do not—will welcome his appearance in "The Dawn Maker," a Triangle-Kay Bee feature, as one of the decided treats of the screen. In this new story Hart portrays the character of a half-breed Indian, Joe Elk. As a master of make-up, Hart has long been famous, but in this Indian character he outdoes even himself.

The story of the play gives Mr. Hart an opportunity to display his remarkable talents for interpretive acting to the utmost. That he has made a close study of the characteristics of the Indian is made clearly evident in the development of the story.

In filming "The Dawn Maker" a trip to the land of snow and ice was necessary, and the resulting effects on the screen are among the finest examples of what motion pictures can do that is denied the spoken stage in its exposition of the drama. The snow effects in the picture are truly remarkable.

An excellent company, headed by William Desmond, gives the popular Triangle star strong support in the development of the story and makes it one of the strongest and best told tales that has ever been screened. Blanche White, who appeared to such excellent advantage in "Honor Thy Name," has the chief feminine role in the picture and adds to the reputation she made for herself in that picture.

"MANHATTAN MADNESS" (Fine Arts).

It's a Fairbanks' picture. No other description really is needed of "Manhattan Madness" to insure its eager welcome by motion picture fans. In this new Fine Arts feature Douglas Fairbanks gives final demonstration, if it be needed, as to exactly why he is one of the most popular actors on the screen today. In the first place, it is brimming over with Fairbanks "stunts." Whenever a new feature starring the likable Triangle star is announced, the public expects to be treated to a series of thrills that leaves it gasping by the end of the picture, and "Manhattan Madness" will prove no disappointment in that respect.

The story is that of a young Westerner who comes back to the effete East he had left years before and in no time at all experiences all the boredom the cut-and-dried methods of living in the East gives to one accustomed to the free, easy and unconventional mannerisms of the West. He expresses himself freely to his friends at the club and at his hotel, and they, spurred on by a wager, plan to give this wild and untamed young son of the West at least one thrill here in the East. They go to elaborate pains to arrange a "plant," but he eventually turns the tables on them and, to cap the climax, carries off a charming young girl who finds it quite to her liking to accept the impetuous young man's proposal of marriage.

Scene from "Manhattan Madness" (Triangle).

The picture, which was directed by Allan Dwan, is further proof of that member of the Fine Arts directing staff's ability to send a picture galloping along to a whirlwind finish. The photography, too, is particularly good, and not a little ingenuity has been shown in preparing some of the sets, particularly those used during the scenes depicting the effort to catch the fiery young man from the West napping.

SECOND "FANTOMAS" IS "THE MAN IN BLACK."

The second release in the fascinating "Fantomas" series is called "The Man in Black." It will be released by Mutual September 14, as these three-reel episodes reach the screen at weekly intervals. The man in black is a mysterious law breaker who is in a desperate conflict with Juve. The man in black, who is in reality Fantomas, has allies everywhere, and his resourcefulness is infinite. One instance of it is when he is trapped in a restaurant. As he leaves the restaurant in charge of Juve and Faudor, the detective's newspaper assistant, he breaks away from his pursuers. They find to their chagrin that they have been holding rubber forms in the shape of arms while the criminal has had his own arms held tightly against his body.

Scene from "The Man in Black" (Gaumont).

Another feature in this release is the collision between a car running wild and the celebrated Simplon express. The most remarkable scene, however, shows the "dumb executioner" sent by Fantomas to kill the detective. This is a huge python that siezes the inexorable pursuer of Fantomas in its great coils. How the detective foils this scheme to do away with him is one of the most spectacular scenes of this episode. There is not a nerve that does not labor under the thrill.

In reviewing this episode, W. Stephen Bush, the noted reviewer said: "The acting of the principal characters is beyond all praise. The minor parts are rendered with every possible skill. There is throughout the painstaking attention to detail that characterizes most Gaumont productions. The settings are excellent; the photography is unexceptionable. This feature promises to achieve great popularity with exhibitors."

PETERS FAVORS TRUTHFUL STATEMENTS.

Speaking of the results thus far obtained through the advertising announcements of the Florida Feature Film Company, Thomas J. Peters, who is personally supervising the production of all the company's five-reel features, says: During the two weeks that the pictures of our company have been offered to the trade, through the advertising columns of the trade papers, two things have been proved to my complete satisfaction: One is that there is a good market for business-producing and money-making features, and the other is that 'truthful' advertising pays.

"The Florida Feature Film Company will continue to make plain and unadulterated statements of fact, and if those statements make an appeal to the buyer, if what we say we have is what he wants, we intend he shall come to know that he can buy on our given word. Such a reputation is worth thousands of dollars to any business concern, and we are going to gain the confidence of the trade to the extent that our reputation will be a real asset.

"All the buyers who have called for screen examinations of 'The Human Orchid,' our first production, in response to our advertisements, were not disappointed by seeing a feature that did not live up to what we claimed for it, and in consequence they are now more willing to take our word on future productions."

"IRON CLAW" MAKES PATHE RECORD.

The total collections on Pathe's serial "The Iron Claw," produced by Edward Jose from the scenario by George B. Seitz, have already exceeded those on "The Exploits of Elaine" which up to this time held the serial record.

This statement is of interest in view of the announcement that Pathe will release the Astra Film Corporation's production of Mr. Seitz, "The Shielding Shadow," on October 1, with full confidence that it in turn will prove of even greater drawing power than "The Iron Claw."

"THE SOCIAL BUCCANEER" (Universal).

J. Warren Kerrigan is soon to appear in "The Social Buccaneer," an Oriental drama produced by Jack Conway from the story by Frederic S. Isham, which was scenarioized by Fred Myton. Louise Lovely appears in support of Mr. Kerrigan, together with Haru Frijita, a Chinese girl actress of unusual ability, and by Frank Tokunaga, a Japanese actor whose work at Universal City already has attracted much attention. The cast also includes Harry Carter, Hayward Mack, Marc Robbins and Maud George.

Warren Kerrigan plays the role of "The Social Buccaneer" who robs the rich in order to endow a hospital. The buccaneer has some exciting adventures in the Orient, on shipboard and in San Francisco, where he poses as a gentleman of leisure.

Director Conway has introduced some rare old Chinese and Japanese furniture into his settings and has added materially to the strength of his story by using two Oriental actors who were able to give him some valuable pointers in his Chinese and Japanese scenes.

TOM MOORE SECURES "WAR'S WOMEN."

Tom Moore, of Washington, D. C., has secured for his Strand theater for an indefinite run, commencing the week of September 17, Thomas Ince's "War's Women," a most powerful and masterly treatment of the theme. The picture was shown at the National Press Club recently before a record and interested assembly of newspaper men, every one of whom stayed to the end. No picture shown to this critical membership this season has met with similar approval and favorable comment. The board of governors, through Jessie S. Cottrell, has conveyed its written approval and interest in the film to Samuel Cummins, of 1476 Broadway, New York, who controls the picture.

Mr. Cummins has purchased the state rights to "War's Women" for Washington, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina. His policy will be to play first-class theaters throughout the territory, and he is now preparing an elaborate advertising and publicity campaign. Mr. Cummins will open a special office in Washington for this picture.

"THE CHALICE OF SORROW" (Bluebird).

In the belief that the mission of a "program" is to diversify the subjects in an appeal to all preferences for amusement, Bluebird turns from its strictly dramatic trend for its Oct. 9 release. Where matters have proceeded with placid society plays, and scenic productions of an unusual nature, "The Chalice of Sorrow" will leaven the series with gripping tragedy.

The basic theme of this Bluebird has been applied frequently to both the speaking stage and grand opera, but Rex Ingram, who provided the scenario and directed the production of "The Chalice of Sorrow," has given the bent of tragedy a new twist, and has evolved what is practically an original scenario.

Cleo Madison makes her first appearance as a Bluebird principal in this release, assuming the role of an opera singer who makes a public conquest in Mexico, and garners a harvest of sorrow through her popularity. Charles Cummings and Wedgewood Nowell each have roles of supreme importance to the plot, and evidence the ability to do full justice to their opportunity. In the other characters John McDermott, Blanch White, Howard Crampton, Rhea Haines, and Albert McQuarrie have been happily cast.

Carrying the locale of the tragedy into Mexico, just at this time, is a particularly good stroke of showmanship, and the exhibitor will reap an added revenue from the trend of public sentiment in these turbid times when the border holds general attention throughout every community. The publicity department of Bluebird realizes that noteworthy subjects are not as common in photoplaying as everybody concerned might wish, but declares that in "The Chalice of Sorrow" a really exceptional Bluebird is at hand.

Pathe Announces "The Test"

A Notable Picture Play Adapted from an A. H. Woods Success—Jane Grey the Star and Fitzmaurice the Director.

"THE TEST," a play by Jules Eckert Goodman, the well-known dramatist, as produced by A. H. Woods, enjoyed marked success for two whole seasons from coast to coast. Blanche Walsh starred in it and through it added materially to a popularity already noteworthy.

George Fitzmaurice of the Astra, who produced for Pathe such sterling successes as "Via Wireless," "At Bay," and "New York," was entrusted with the direction of the motion picture adaptation of this famous play. No one who has seen it in its new form will deny that it was put into worthy hands. In selection of cast, in choice of settings and locations, in photography, in sustained interest, in climaxes—in everything that goes to make the very best quality of pictures, Mr. Fitzmaurice has lived up to the reputation which he has acquired of being one of the best directors of the day.

Jane Grey, the star, was a fortunate choice. Her emotional resources are extraordinary, and her classic beauty screens more than ordinarily well. She will be best remembered, perhaps, as the "Molly Hughes" of "Kick In," the A. H. Woods play, which has enjoyed such notable success. In "The Test" she has the part of "Mrs. Tretman," the young and lovable wife of a weak seoundrel, who stops at nothing to gain his own ends, and is willing to sacrifice his own wife in an attempt to evade the retribution of the law. The supporting cast is notable, including as it does Lumsden Hare, the English actor, Claude Fleming, Carl Harbaugh and Inez Buck.

Many of the scenes are laid upon a millionaire's estate on Long Island and the locations there are a delight to the eye, including as they do among others an indoor swimming pool that cost a large fortune.

Mr. Goodman, the author of "The Test," also wrote "Mother," "Treasure Island," "The Man Who Stood Still," and "The Man Who Came Back," the latter a new play about to be put on Broadway by Mr. Woods.

LIONEL BARRYMORE IN "THE BRAND OF COWARDICE."

Work begins this week on "The Brand of Cowardice," a Metro wonderplay in five acts dealing with conditions in Mexico and on the Mexican border at the present time. Lionel Barrymore is the star of the produetion, which John W. Noble will direct, with the assistance of Fred Sittenham.

Both star and director have just finished other important productions, but are turning with zest to the new work. Mr. Barrymore recently completed the five-part Rolfe photoplay, "The Upheaval," in which Marguerite Skirvin is featured in his support, and Mr. Noble has finished the direction of the stupendous screen version of "Romeo and Juliet," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne appear as the historic lovers. Mr. Noble took only a brief rest before beginning work on the new Barrymore production.

"The Brand of Cowardice" is from the pen of Lieutenant Charles Maigne, a retired army officer who was in the employ of the United States government during the Boxer uprising in China, and who served in the Cuban campaign during the Spanish-American war. Lieutenant Maigne has accepted a small part in the production.

Clara Whipple is Mr. Barrymore's leading feminine support in the new photoplay, and John Davidson has been engaged for an important part. Cameraman Carlton, who has been working with John H. Collins in the making of Metro wonderplays starring Viola Dana, returns to Mr. Noble with this production.

"THE UNATTAINABLE" (Universal).

Scenes of pastoral beauty are a feature of "The Unattainable," a Universal drama in which Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson play the principal roles and whieh is scheduled for release in the near future on the Universal regular program.

A visit was paid by Director Lloyd Carleton's company to a big sheep ranch near Los Angeles where the bucolic scene reproduced herewith was taken. Supporting Miss Davenport and Mr. Johnson in the leading roles are Richard Morris and Alfred Allen. The play was scenarioized by Eugene S. Lewis from the story by Elwood Hemming.

The play, in short, tells the story of an actress known as "The Unattainable" because of her reserve who is pursued by a rich idler. She finds relief from the persecutions of the latter by dropping off the train occupied by the traveling troupe of actors and settling down in a Western ranch town where she marries a handsome young sheep herder. Later, events bring her back to New York, where she falls into the clutches of her former wanton admirer. Her husband, fearing the worst, comes on from the West, and the play ends with some startling situations.

MRS. VERNON CASTLE SETS VOGUE.

Mrs. Vernon Castle, famous beauty and dancer, who is being screened in the great serial, "Patria," for the International Film Service, Inc., has designed the "Castle Preparedness Suit" in which she appears in several of the episodes.

"Patria," in addition to being the last word in artistic motion pictures, has preparedness as its keynote, and is declared to be the most inspiringly beautiful and intensely interesting serial ever presented. It is from the pen of Louis Joseph Vance.

The "Castle Preparedness Suit" is of tan cheviot. The skirt is perfectly plain and reaches the top of the boots, permitting free and graceful strides. The coat is of military cut and buttoned tight about the throat. There is a wide belt of tan leather and a strap of tan leather from the bust to the waist takes the place of buttons.

There is a jaunty military cap of the same material as the suit, while the boots are dark tan with light tan cheviot tops.

The dog that is shown with Mrs. Castle is the German police dog that recently killed Mrs. Castle's Japanese spaniel. It appears in several of the scenes of "Patria."

"THE PATH OF DARKNESS" (Unicorn).

Among the films booked for fall release on the new Unicorn multiple-reel program is "The Path of Darkness" in five reels, produced by the Norbig Film Company of Los Angeles. The features of the picture are the splendid characterization of a blind girl by Margaret Darwin, and the beautiful exterior settings.

The leading parts are played by Margaret Darwin, Charles Fuller, Harry T. DeVere and Josa Melville.

"SAINT, DEVIL AND WOMAN" (Thanhouser).

A tale of a girl of triple personality, "Saint, Devil and Woman," will be released by the Thanhouser Film Corporation through the Pathe exchanges on September 24. Florence LaBadie, the star, is supported by Wayne Arey, Hector Dion and Ethyle Cooke.

The story, by Philip Lonergan, is based upon Dr. Morton Prince's famous treatise, "The Dissociation of a Personality," whieh discusses the case of Sarah Beauchamp, the first person of changing personality to be carefully investigated by scientists. Investigations by Boris Sidis and Dr. Hugo Von Munsterberg also were used in making the play psychologically accurate.

Florence LaBadie shows splendid appreciation of the character of a simple girl who is changed into a fiend by a chain of startling circumstances. A railroad strike plays a big part in the story, and Director Frederic Sullivan has staged a thrilling battle between strikers and strikebreakers. The feature is of unusual timeliness because of the current conflicts between labor and capital all over the United States.

SERIAL FILM CO. BUSY ON A NEW SERIAL.

William Steiner, supervising director of the Serial Film Company, announces that his organization is already busily engaged in arranging for a serial to follow "The Yellow Menace," which is being distributed by the Unity Sales Corporation. The first release of "The Yellow Menace" is set for Labor Day, and the new serial will be completed in ample time to be ready when "The Yellow Menace" is completed.

The character and theme of the new serial is certain to be entirely different from that of "The Yellow Menace," so as to enable the exchanges and the exhibitors to present to the public something entirely new, up-to-date, and unique in serials. The success of "The Yellow Menace" has proved to both the Serial Film Company and the Unity Sales Corporation that there is a field for serials among the independent exchanges, and the officials of these companies believe that they can give these exchanges a succeeding serial that will be kept well up to the developments in the industry.

MARIE DORO TO APPEAR IN "THE LASH."

Under the direction of James Young, Miss Marie Doro, the Lasky player who recently appeared in "Common Ground," has begun an elaborate picturization of "The Lash," by Paul West. This will be Miss Doro's third Lasky picture.

Miss Doro will have a supporting cast of unusual prominence, including Elliott Dexter, Raymond Hatton, James Neill, James Delmar, Jane Wolfe, Veda McEvers and Josephine Rice.

Director John McDermott, of Universal City, is filming a three-reel drama entitled "A Modern Cain," written by himself. The principal roles are played by Edward Hearn and Ruth Clifford, with Geo. Beranger playing the heavy.

Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell are again appearing together in World pictures, "The New South," directed by Robert Thornby. Besides Miss Clayton and Mr. Blackwell, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Henry West, Louis Grisel, Jessie Lewis and the youngest World Film star, Madge Evans, are in the cast.

"The Man She Married" is the title of a drama now being filmed at the World studios under the direction of Travers Vale, with Gail Kane, Arthur Ashley, Montagu Love, Louise M. Bates and Muriel Ostriche.

Maritime Exchanges C. O. D. Now

Pay-in-Advance Policy in St. John, New Brunswick, After September 11—Same Reasons That Move Toronto Exchangemen Are Found Here—Expect Exhibitors to Approve of the Plan Finally.

By F. F. Sully, Box 1229, St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Following in the footsteps of Toronto and Montreal, the St. John moving picture exchanges have inaugurated the pay-in-advance film service, which is to become effective Sept. 11th. The local exchange men recently held a general meeting to discuss the proposition, and after a long session unanimously voted in favor of the new scheme, earnestly believing it was for the best interests of the service men and the exhibitor to place the transaction of film rental on a more business-like basis. This policy, too, the service men feel, has been made largely necessary by trespassing or irresponsible exhibitors, who have made a practice of securing films from the different exchanges and not paying for them. It is pointed out that every time one of these unscrupulous exhibitors secures service without paying for it he hurts the honest exhibitor. The cash in advance system will have a two-fold benefit—it will protect both the exhibitor and the exchange.

All films shipped from the St. John exchanges will be paid for in advance, or the shipment will be made C. O. D. The managers say that once a C. O. D. is sent out, under no consideration will it be lifted. If a check for service is received after the shipment has been made C. O. D., the check will be returned. It has been made plain that invoices will be sent a full week in advance, which they think, is ample time to make remittances.

The inauguration of this new policy has naturally evoked some complaint from exhibitors throughout the Maritime Provinces, but it is reasonably certain, the exchange men say, that the exhibitors will see in a very short time that it is a far more satisfactory way of doing business.

E. A. Langley, formerly St. John exchange manager for Pathe, now with the Metro service, with headquarters in Ontario and Quebec, is spending several weeks in the Maritime Provinces in the interests of the trade.

W. C. Ouimet, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Company, has returned to Montreal, after a several days' business trip in St. John and vicinity.

Carl M. Crawford, manager of the St. John Fox Film Corporation office, will leave in a few days for a business trip through the provinces.

W. Kerr, manager of the Mutual service in St. John, is on a tour of inspection through the Maritime Provinces.

Exhibitor Kelty to Build.

Yarmouth, N. S.—J. Kelty, proprietor and manager of the People's theater in Yarmouth, N. S., has just announced that on September 12 he will begin the work of tearing down the old structure, which is to be replaced by what Mr. Kelty claims will be the best moving picture house in the provinces. He has just finished a third engagement of "The Alien," and says he was obliged to close the doors of the theater at 7:15.

FILM BUSINESS RALLIES.

After a Two-Year Period of Depression the Past Summer Has Brought Back Prosperity.

St. John, N. B.—After undergoing a rather lethargic period that covered almost two years, or since the beginning of the war, the moving picture business in the provinces has rallied wonderfully during the past summer. Many American tourists, who were skeptical about coming into the Dominion last summer on account of the war, have returned again this year, and have formed the bulk of the patronage at the summer resort theaters. The cool weather has likewise helped the business. In St. John all of the theaters have been playing to capacity houses, while the exhibitors in cities in other parts of Canada have been obliged to close their doors on account of the intense heat. The outlook for the winter is exceptionally bright, and most of the managers are booking elaborate programs.

New Bijou Opens.

Wodstock, N. B.—The total of theaters showing moving pictures exclusively in the Maritime Provinces has now been placed very close to 100 by the opening at Woodstock, N. B., of the new Bijou. It is an entirely new structure, and will have a seating capacity of about 1,000. C. H. Seymour is the owner and manager. He has contracted for the Fox service. Mr. Seymour is highly pleased with the great increase in business during the last half year, especially with the province laboring under the burden of a great war.

St. John Notes and Personals.

J. H. Wolf, manager of the local branch of the Metro service, has just returned from a several days' trip through the province. He reports that all theaters are playing to capacity houses.

C. B. Price of Toronto, Canadian general manager of the General Mutual Film service, has been in St. John on a ten days' inspection trip. Mr. Price says that the general moving picture business in this section of the Dominion is far superior to that in the Western and Central provinces.

Woodstock's Vogue Sold.

Woodstock, N. B.—The Vogue theater at Woodstock, N. B., formerly owned by C. H. Seymour, proprietor of the new Bijou, has been sold to MaAfee, Cockwey and Camp, who have engaged "The Eternal City" as the opening feature.

Mrs. W. C. King Opens Show.

Mahonme Bay, N. S.—Mrs. M. C. King has joined the ranks of exhibitors in the provinces, and has opened a small house at Mahonme Bay, N. S., contracting for the Famous Players Service.

The Big Outing at Canobie Lake

Many Prominent New England Film Men Guests of Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association on the Annual Picnic—Automobiles Take Crowd to Resort—Those Who Were There.

By William M. Flynn, No. 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Scores of prominent motion picturo managers, exchange men, and theater managers enjoyed the first outing of the New England Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association, at Canobie Lake in Lowell this week. It was a day long to be remembered by the entire "cast." There was not a dull "act" during the whole day, and the showmen who provide all the motion picture and vaudeville amusement for New England certainly know how to enjoy themselves when they got out together.

Over 200 members of the association and friends attended. John Shea, the president, estimated that between $70,000,000 and $80,000,000 in amusements was represented in those present.

The trip to the lake from Boston to Salem, N. H., was made by automobile, and was greatly enjoyed by all except possibly, Harry Asher of the Paramount Film Corporation, who was compelled by a blow out to do a little "small time" at a "small town" garage en route. The party arrived at the park in time for an excellent dinner that had been provided, and the entire party took their bonnets off to Secretary Fraser and the committee of arrangements for the "big hit" eats.

Betwen the soup and nuts a wonderful entertainment, was given with "talent" that only real showmen could provide, and the "show" made most of the old-timers sit up and take notice. After dinner the party was photographed and retired to the ball park, where a five-inning baseball game was played by teams representing the managers and the agents; the agents winning by a score that sounded like a back lot league affair. "Comedy" incidents marked the game, and some of the "stunts" of members of both teams caused offers of immediate "bookings" by vaudevillists on the side lines.

At the finish of the ball game, field sports were scehduled, and fat men's races, 100-yard dashes, broad and high jumps, ladies' races, and other events occasioned much amusement. The 100-yard dash was a scream. Manager Thomas D. Soriero of the Park theater, Boston's popular moving picture house, would have won, but they run the race backwards. After the athletic sports the party adjourned to the swimming pool, where aquatic sports were participated in, the feature being an "impersonation" of the submarine Deutschland by the portly Jeff Davis that "brought down the house."

At 6 P. M. the "last call" was sounded, and the tired but happy vaudevillists and moving picture men and their lady guests returned to their homes. Their first outing was a huge success, and it promises to be an annual event.

Those Who Were There.

Among those to enjoy the outing were: Ernest H. Horsterman, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts; George A. Haley, Mrs. G. A. Haley, George C. Elliott, Mrs. R. E. Baltimore Censors Slash Tellegen Play

Eliminate 1,200 Feet from "The Victory of Conscience"—Manager De Hoff of New Theater Hustles to Find Whole Copy for Patrons.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Figuratively speaking, the Maryland Board of Censors took their scissors down from the rack last week, and cut a regular pattern out of the Paramount five-part feature, featuring Lou Tellegen, entitled "The Victory of Conscience." When this picture was screened at their headquarters on East Lexington street before the whole board, so much of it was condemned that Manager L. A. DeHoff of the New theater had to make a hurried change in the schedule for the entire week at this house. The board absolutely forbade him to use the picture as it stood, and it was ordered that unless the parts censored were struck out, which amount to about 1,200 feet, he would have to strike it from his program. Needless to say, Manager DeHoff changed his program and the August judgment of Mrs. T. B. Harrison, Charles E. Harper, and William F. Stone, the entire censor board, was obeyed.

Authorities Watching Theaters.

Baltimore, Md.—On Wednesday, August 23, the Board of Estimates, discussing the infantile paralysis situation, authorized Dr. John D. Blake, Health Commissioner of Baltimore, to employ two private detectives to prosecute proprietors of moving picture houses which persist in admitting children under thirteen years of age to their shows. It has been alleged that many proprietors have disregarded the new regulation which recently went into effect. Dancing at Municipal Band Concerts, the holding of church carnivals where large numbers of children congregate, and the attending of Sunday Schools have been banned by the Health Commissioner.

"Drys" to Use Street Screens.

Baltimore, Md.—The Board of Estimates has granted permission to J. H. Baker and Lloyd Wilkinson, who are managing the prohibition campaign in this city, to erect screens in the streets for the purpose of showing pictures without charge. John Hubert, president of the second branch of the City Council, stated that the board would be absolutely neutral in this fight, and would likewise grant the same privilege to the "wets." The locations for the screens, however, will be passed on by the Board so that traffic will not be interfered with.

Newark News Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent.

Ban May Soon Be Removed.

NEWARK, N. J.—In the opinion of Health Officer Charles V. Craster, of Newark, the poliomyelitis epidemic is nearing an end. He says in a published report that within a month, the ban placed on gatherings of children will in all probability be removed. The removal of the ban will witness the reopening of over a dozen moving picture houses which have been closed on account of the non-admittance of children. Especially have the houses in the "Hill" section of Newark suffered extremely, as they are dependent to a great degree on the support of the youngsters.

Objections in Montclair.

Montclair, N. J.—The public hearing on the question of granting another license for conducting a moving picture place in Montclair has been postponed until Sept. 29. So far only one local theater has secured a license, which was granted four years ago. The manager of the Montclair theater, H. H. Wellenbrink, asserts that the issue involved is whether or not it is possible to maintain the same high standard of pictures required by the exacting residents of Montclair with more than one theater in the town. As related recently in these columns, the latest applicant for a license is the McNally Securities Corporation of New York, which proposes erecting a large structure on Valley road, between Bellevue and Lorraine avenues. The proposed building, which would cost $140,000, would include the theater and ten store rooms.

Plague Ban is Closing Theaters

Pittsburgh Exhibitors and Exchangemen Meet to Discuss the Situation—A Committee Appointed to Confer with the Health Authorities of the City and One to Go to Harrisburg with Proposition to State Health Board.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The ban placed by the Pennsylvania State Health Department upon the admission of children under 16 years of age to moving picture theaters and other places of amusement is working inculculable hardship here and has already resulted in the closing of a number of houses in Pittsburgh and vicinity. No effort is being spared to have the quarantine modified and, in order to avert heavy financial loss, exhibitors are about to ask the authorities for a complete shut-down of the theaters if these efforts for relief are futile. The latest order of the Health Department extends the quarantine to October 2.

Immediately following the issuance last week of the sweeping order excluding children from theaters until September 18, the exhibitors and exchange men met to discuss the situation and take such steps as might be deemed expedient to safeguard the industry. The first conference was held in the General Film building, about fifty being present. A. J. Barthell, president of the local branch of the Exhibitors' League, acted as chairman. A committee was appointed, consisting of M. J. C. Kornblume, Matt Rahp, Al. W. Cross, M. Feitler and G. W. Sahner, to interview Dr. Burns, head of the Pittsburgh Department of Health, to ascertain how long the quarantine would remain in force and discuss any other matters in connection with the preventative methods instituted.

This committee acted at once and reported to a second meeting held Thursday. The exhibitors were assured that fair treatment would be accorded them by the health authorities and that children need only be excluded from theaters as long as the schools remain closed. Inspection of the houses was deemed unnecessary, on account of their generally good sanitary condition. The department instructed exhibitors, however, to exercise especial care in keeping premises clean and providing all the ventilation possible.

To seek relief through an amendment to the order of the State Health Department, a committee was appointed to go to Harrisburg, with alternative propositions to State Health Commissioner Dixon. The committee consists of Frederick J. Herrington, formerly national president of the Exhibitors' League; G. W. Sahner, president of the Pennsylvania State League; M. J. C. Kornblume, of the Rowland & Clark theaters; Al. W. Cross, of the Hudson Feature Film Co., and M. Feitler, of the Elmore theater.

The first proposal to be made is that children free from the disease be admitted to theaters on the presentation of a health certificate. If the commissioner does not see fit to adopt this amendment to the order, the committee will then recommend that the quarantine be extended so as to close all moving picture houses to adults as well as children. The committee left for Harrisburg at once. A complete report on the results of the petition to Commissioner Dixon will be made at the regular meeting of the Exhibitors' League on September 7, and final action will be taken at that time.

Nixon Theater Taken Over.

Tarentum, Pa.—F. J. Nalley and Jacob York, well known exhibitors of Carnegie, Pa., have taken over the Nixon theater at Tarentum, Pa., and will reopen it with moving pictures in the near future. The house seats about 800 and has been formerly operated with vaudeville. A number of improvements by the new owners are under way which will make the Nixon one of the best photoplay houses in its district. Mr. York conducts the Lyric theater at Carnegie and has an interest with Mr. Nalley in the Arcadia, both houses being conducted along very successful lines.

William Lampropolis Visits.

Latrobe, Pa.—William Lampropolis, owner of the beautiful new Paramount theater, Latrobe, Pa., accompanied by his manager, Elmer E. Rutter, and Mrs. Rutter, visited in Pittsburgh several days ago and looked over the feature market. Mr. Lampropolis stated that the Paramount, which was opened two months ago, is doing a big business. Triangle and Paramount films are shown with changes daily, and the addition of other feature programs is contemplated. The Paramount is to be improved in the near future with a handsome marquise, extending the entire width of the theater.

Buys Comique and Variety.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Comique theater and the Variety theater, located on Beaver avenue, Northside, Pittsburgh, Pa., have been purchased by Harry M. Rooney and A. Spencer, who have formed a partnership to conduct the houses. Mr. Rooney formerly held half interest in the Imperial theater, Beltzhoover, while Mr. Spencer continues to operate the Grand theater at Etna. The Variety has been running stock shows during the summer, but will be reopened in the near future under the policy of pictures exclusively. Both theaters have been remodeled and much improved in equipment and appearance recently.

Swings Release Date Ahead.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—On account of the order of the State Board of Health excluding children under 16 years of age from moving picture theaters, the Quality Film Company has issued an announcement that the first episode of "The Yellow Menace" will be released September 11 instead of September 4 as previously announced. While several important bookings of the subject had to be canceled, the exhibitors saw the advantage of the deferred date and readily agreed to the change. "The Yellow Menace" is booking rapidly and gives every promise of being one of the most successful serials ever handled here.

Adarry Theater Property Sold.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Adarry theater property, at Penn avenue and Mathilda street, East End, Pittsburgh, Pa., has been purchased by B. Bothwell through the C. L. Saxton Company, for a consideration of $50,000. In addition to an up-to-date moving picture theater, the building consists of two store rooms and measures 50 by 100 feet. The new owner is having plans prepared for remodeling.

Personal Notes of Interest.

During the absence of Harry F. Grelle, head of the Supreme Service, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, who is opening a branch office at St. Louis for handling the film, "Where Are My Children?" the Quaker City office has been taken charge of by Miss Goode, of the Pittsburgh office, while E. B. Kelly is in charge here.

James B. Clark, head of the Rowland & Clark theaters, Pittsburgh, has just returned with Mrs. Clark and family from a two weeks' vaction at Atlantic City, N. J.

Things Expected of Film Men

Much Is Expected at All Times—Charity Is Expected and Often Not of Means Only, but of Forbearance—Help in Time of Trouble Is Expected and Gladly Given—Now and Then the Public Should Consider.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth St., N.E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—For some time past the exchange men of Washington have been playing Santa Claus and donating the use of films for the motion picture exhibitions given at the United States Pension Office to secure funds for the support of needy families of the men with the National Guard of the District of Columbia now on active duty. Secretary of the Interior Lane is sponsor of the undertaking and it is said that these exhibitions have been netting between $30 and $40 each evening.

There have been several weeks of these shows and nothing has been said as to when they will be discontinued, or when the exchange managers will cease this free service. It is very commendable all around to try and help the poor, but there is a Congress now in session with several bills before it looking to the appropriation of public funds for this very same purpose. The exhibitors are too patriotic to complain, but some of them are facing a part of the loss which represents the Pension Office gains.

Looking the proposition squarely in the face, it is an imposition that should not be allowed to continue. It is too much like the government, using one of its own buildings and government electricity, going out and begging the use of a few films that it may raise money to support dependent relatives of its soldiers—second-hand charity. It would not be so bad, some of the exhibitors are murmuring, if it were not for the fact that Congress has already heaped upon them a war tax and is putting through other legislation for the support of the army, and then to compete with them with free films in their very own game. And the exchange managers themselves should take the initiative and call a halt to their donations of films.

Hyman & Payette Attractions Co. Formed

Arthur S. Hyman and John J. Payette Have Taken Offices in 303-304 Barristers' Building for the New Film Concern.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There has been a split among the members of the Hy Art Master Plays Company, which has offices in the Barristers' building, on F street, northwest, resulting in the formation of a new company to be known as Hyman & Payette Attractions Company. Arthur S. Hyman, who was the general manager of the first-named, heads the new company, with John J. Payette, who was his assistant, as the junior member. He is to have charge of the office while Mr. Hyman goes on the road booking the features they intend to market on state rights propositions.

They have taken rooms 303 and 304 in the Barristers' building and have decorated the former in much the same manner as the Hy Art offices, to be used as the booking office. The other room will be used as a stock room. At the present time Maurice Eiseman is acting as booker, but he will shortly join E. A. Sherwood and Julian Eiseman, now so employed, as an engaging manager. The new concern is now booking "Pavlowa" and "The End of the World" in this territory and is negotiating for a number of other large features. Mr. Hyman retains his financial interest in the Hy Art concern.

At the Hy Art Master Plays Co.

The withdrawal of Messrs. Hyman and Payette naturally caused a considerable shake-up in the Hy Art offices. George R. Mayo is now the secretary and general manager, and his son, G. Morrow Mayo, who has been traveling through the South booking their attractions, becomes assistant general manager, and will give personal attention to the business in West Virginia and South Carolina, as well as spending some time in the office. Lieutenant Nevillo C. Salamander, late of the British Royal Artillery, who was discharged from the army by reason of disability, will handle Virginia and North Carolina with their war pictures. And it may be said that he is meeting with fine success, despite the fact that his films depict the German side of the controversy. His talk is a very interesting one, devoid of any showing of ill feeling, evidencing the fact that there is less animosity among the men in the trenches representing the opposing nations than is to be seen and heard in our own country on the part of the sympathizers of the contenders.

A third man, Harry M. Brown, is to cover parts of South Carolina and Florida.

The other officers of the concern are: Gibbs L. Baker, president; Edmund K. Fox, vice-president, and Barry Bulkley, treasurer.

With the change comes a new policy, that of making their attractions strictly 25-cent propositions, and for motion picture houses only. This means that they will sidestep exhibitions in legitimate houses, especially on the elaborate scale they have heretofore followed.

J. A. Lavalle Heads Local U.

Washington, D. C.—J. A. Lavalle, formerly handling the Bluebird and Red Feather features and Universal service as manager of the Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and of the Clarksburg, W. Va., office, is now holding down the managerial chair at the local offices, operating as the Washington Film Exchange, Ninth street, northwest. Mr. Lavalle has recently come from West Virginia to take charge of the Washington office during the absence of J. Leo Yates, who is still seriously ill from an attack of neuritis. He leaves his former charge with Sol Burka, who has been with him for some time.

George Mann Takes the Leader.

Washington, D. C.—George Mann, manager of the local Paramount, has secured control of the Leader theater on Ninth street near E street, northwest, from Miller Bros., is the report current here, and will hereafter operate it as a Paramount picture house. The management of the theater will be in the hands of Corbin Shields, formerly manager of the Strand theater in Richmond, Va., who is very well known in this locality and is an old-time exhibitor. This house was formerly operated by Miller Bros. of Baltimore, Md.

Virginia News of Interest

Strand at Lexington Opens.

LEXINGTON, Va.—The old opera house in this place, which has been out of use for a year or more, has been remodeled into a modern photoplay theater with a seating capacity of 500, and has been renamed the Strand. It will open the first of September as a feature house, showing the V-L-S-E productions exclusively. Arthur Finburg is owner of the theater, and he will personally look after its management. He has been out of the film business for about two years, but he was formerly associated with the Wells interests in Atlanta, Ga. There is one other motion picture theater here, the Lyric, owned by W. W. Preston.

The Crossman Again Closes.

Norfolk, Va.—The Crossman theater has again been closed and a "For Rent" sign placed before its doors. This house has had three different tenants within the past six months and none have made good, despite its good location. It is thought that perhaps its small seating capacity is responsible for lack of success.

E. G. Evans Now Heads Local Mutual Office

Former Manager, B. C. Cunningham, Presented with a Loving Cup as He Leaves to Head Mary Pickford Office in Philadelphia.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—B. C. Cunningham, formerly manager of the local office of the Mutual, but who is now the manager of the Mary Pickford exchange in Philadelphia, is the possessor of a handsome loving cup, a remembrance from the employes here over whom he served as manager for many years. In his place at the head of the Washington office is E. G. Evans, who, although new as manager of the exchange, needs no introduction to the exhibitors of this territory because for three and a half years he has been traveling among them as a Mutual man.

Mr. Evans is a very pleasant man to do business with, and in all likelihood he will do equally as well as chief of the office as he has in the past as road man, as manager of the master picture department and as head of the Baltimore depot. His many friends in this section are extremely glad that the Mutual followed its usual practice and appointed him to his present position, for the company always promotes from the ranks, and so it is also that O. D. Weems, at one time manager of the Blue Mouse theater and of the Picture Garden in Baltimore, who was connected with the serial department and later transferred to the program division, succeeds Mr. Evans at the Baltimore office, and his friends in the Monumental City are also rejoicing.

Mr. Evans will also have associated with him Victor Abbey in the serial department, and B. R. Tolmas, who formerly traveled out of the Mutual's New York office, and Clarence Eiseman, who for some time was employed by the Hy Art Master Plays Company of this city. Mr. Hazlett, formerly traveling in this section, has returned to New York.

The new manager starts out in the company's new quarters located at 419 Ninth street, northwest, for the whole outfit has just been moved from the old location across the street. The front section of the floor is utilized by the manager's office and by the cashier's, bookkeeper's and booker's departments. The adjoining space contains the exhibitors' counter. On one side of this is the serial department, while on the other is the continuation of the poster room which, with the shipping, film and examining departments, occupies a large amount of space at the rear of the establishment. In the film room are fireproof safes and all modern equipment for the cleaning of films. There are twenty-one employes in the exchange, the motto of which is "Service Above All Things." These quarters were formerly occupied by the Universal Film Company, and following their removal to a new location further down the street the place was renovated and redecorated throughout.

Norfolk, Va.—The Ghent theater, Norfolk's only residential photoplay house, has been reopened under the management of Mr. and Mrs. H. Trent, formerly of Florence, S. C. Mrs. Trent has a very good voice and helps to entertain the patrons of the theater on certain nights of the week, and it is needless to say that these nights find the house crowded to capacity.

New Union Agreement in Detroit

Theater Managers' and Operators' New Working Contract Now in Effect—Union Agrees to Pay for Film Destroyed by Fire While Union Is in Charge of Operating Room—Other Features of Interest.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, Mich.—A new agreement has been effected between the motion picture theaters of Detroit and the Detroit Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 199, I. A. T. S. E., and M. P. M. O. of the U. S. and Canada. The agreement, which went into effect September 1, calls for a wage increase of three dollars per week for downtown and outskirts operators. With few exceptions, Detroit exhibitors employing union operators have granted the increase.

Unusual Features of the Contract.

There are a number of unusual and rather unique features to the new contract. One is that the operator is to get 75 cents per hour for all overtime. The union agrees to pay for any film destroyed by fire while the projection equipment is in charge of a member of the union, but no damages will be paid on film that is sixty days old. Age of film is to be figured from release dates printed in trade magazines. And no damage will be paid unless operating room is equipped according to printed rules furnished by the union. Film from one to ten days old will be paid on the basis of 5 cents per foot; ten to twenty days old, 4 cents per foot; twenty to thirty days old, 3 cents per foot; thirty to sixty days old, 2 cents per foot. Any disputes of the new contract must be settled by a board of arbitration consisting of three members. Either side can cancel contract by two weeks' notice.

Other Provisions.

The union insists that the following rules must govern the operating room:

No smoking permitted; no liquor permitted; rewind must be in approved metal box; no motors allowed on rewind, motor-driven machines must be of standard approved type; motors must be of approved type for motion picture machines; near the top of the booth shall be an opening at least 12 inches in diameter for ventilation, with pipe leading to the outer air; this pipe must be provided with an exhaust fan independent of all other circuits in theater; a film box to contain film not in use must be so constructed that each reel of film will be in a separate compartment and with an additional cover for each reel, and constructed with a hook or band so that it is impossible to leave open when film is in compartment.

All fuse blocks and switches must be enclosed; switch box and speed control for suction fan in ventilation pipe must be outside of operating room. The union will not be responsible for damage to film by fire or otherwise when operators are instructed to project pictures at a speed faster than twelve minutes to one thousand feet of film; no film shall be kept or stored in booth that is not being used as regular attraction advertised and exhibited to the public.

Musicians, Too, Want Raise.

The Detroit Musicians' Union is also demanding a wage increase of approximately three dollars per man for theaters, but up to this writing the motion picture theaters have not granted same. Most of the theater musicians are engaged in downtown houses, the bulk of the outskirts houses using organs, hence are not affected by the musicians' demands.

Beautiful Ferry Field Theater Opens

Manager Smith Promises That the Slogan of Detroit's New Picture House Will Be "Nothing Too Good."

DETROIT, MICH.—This city's newest and what is declared to be one of the most beautiful theaters in the city, the Ferry Field, at Grand River avenue and the Grand boulevard, opened Thursday, August 31, with Mary Miles Minter in "Youth's Endearing Charm."

The Ferry Field is a modern fireproof house seating 1,600. An orchestra, pipe organ, soloists and other features will make a bid for patronage. The decorations are of the Spanish renaissance type, and most of the seats are on the main floor. The Ferry Field was originally the conception of the late Arthur Caille. It is controlled by a corporation, most of the stockholders being residents in the vicinity of the theater. The Ferry Field is in a choice location—one that is developing very fast in population; and with the right kind of entertainment its success is assured. The people in that section will gladly patronize such a beautiful playhouse. Manager Smith says the slogan of the Ferry Field will be "Nothing Too Good."

Detroit Business Notes.

Detroit, Mich.—John H. Kunsky has signed a contract with the Paramount Pictures Corporation which will give the Washington theater the choice of the two releases each week. Both pictures will be privately screened for Mr. Kunsky each week, and the one he likes the best will receive its first Detroit presentation at the Washington. This means that the Liberty theater, Bates and Farmer streets, will hereafter do "open" booking.

The Strand theater, Grand River and Fourteenth streets, celebrated its first anniversary the week of September 3. DeWitt C. Shook is manager of the Strand. The first twelve months have been very successful—more so than was anticipated.

R. Von der Goltz, formerly assistant to Manager McGee of the Majestic theater, and for many months since as road representative for the Pathe exchange, has resigned to travel in Michigan for the International Film service. He assumed his new position on Labor Day.

L. E. Davis, manager of the International Film Service for Michigan, with headquarters in the Campau building, Detroit, reports that the first week of his campaign for business on the "Beatrice Fairfax" serial he signed up thirty exhibitors for Detroit. He also reports that "The Mysteries of Myra" serial is going very well, and he is anxiously looking forward to the coming International big features.

Mr. Mandelbaum, who is building the new theater on Euclid avenue, Cleveland, adjoining the Hotel Statler, was in Detroit last week, inspecting some of our leading theaters for ideas. Mr. Mandelbaum is one of the leading exhibitors in Cleveland as well as one of the best known in the country.

Cleveland Exhibitors Mark Time

Stand Firm on Their Declaration That Conditions Do Not Warrant Wage Increase—Operators Won't Recede from the Increase They Have Demanded—Grievance Committee of Federation Takes Up Matter.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Building, Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—The wage dispute between members of the Cleveland Moving Picture Exhibitors' League and the moving picture machine operators is temporarily in the hands of the grievance committee of the Cleveland Federation of Labor. A special committee of the exhibitors appeared before this grievance committee August 29 and September 1 to make plain the attitude of the exhibitors. The operators have refused to recede from their demand for an increase of $3.50 per week and the exhibitors stand firm on their declaration that conditions do not warrant any wage increase, but say they are willing to refer the dispute to an arbitration committee.

The matter is practically certain to go to arbitration, as there does not appear to be any chance for a compromise.

Exhibitors have been notified by their officials that because of the demand for arbitration there is no chance for a strike.

The method of arbitration and the possible selection of arbitrators was discussed by the exhibitors at their last meeting.

H. H. Lichtig Heads Stillman Theater.

Cleveland, O.—Harry H. Lichtig, a Cleveland man by birth and until recently studio manager for the World Film, at Fort Lee, N. J., is to be treasurer and house manager of the new Stillman moving picture theater. This announcement has just been made by Emil Mandelbaum, owner of the new theater. The house is to open in a few weeks.

East End Theaters Raise Prices.

Cleveland, O.—Three East End picture houses, the Knickerbocker, Alhambra and Metropolitan, have just announced that their prices hereafter will be from fifteen to twenty-five cents instead of from ten to twenty cents as formerly.

The increased cost of feature films is given as the cause of the price increase. Downtown houses increased their prices several weeks ago.

The managers say it is the choice of continuing at the old price, with inferior pictures, or securing the best and raising the admission fee.

The opening show will be "Broadway After Dark." Mr. Wise is widely known and liked and will be a splendid acquisition to Atlanta's theater manager colony. Atlanta, Ga.—The management of the Grand theater donated the use of the theater on a recent Sunday to the Woman's Study Club of Atlanta. MINNEAPOLIS FILM MATTERS.

By John L. Johnston, 814 Produce Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

A New Exchange Manager.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Outside of the fact that "Civilization" continued to draw big crowds at the Shubert and that a new exchange manager arrived in town there was little really new hereabouts during the past week. The weather, which has been fairly cool, has helped business at the theaters a trifle and if it continues cool for another week the bumper fall season will be well on the way. The new exchange manager in the city is W. K. Howard, of Chicago. Mr. Howard succeeds Charles W. Sawin, who opened the Minneapolis V-L-S-E exchange and was transferred during the week to the Atlantic office, from which he came.

Mr. Sawin was one of the most popular exchangemen in this territory, having traveled over each of his travelling men's territories for the purpose of meeting all of the exhibitors. During the last quarter Mr. Sawin's exchange showed a record increase in business and Mr. Howard states that having found everything in such good shape he is sure he can bring the "Big Four" exchange to the top. Mr. Sawin went to New York City from Minneapolis and will join his family in the southern metropolis early next week.

New Palace Theater Nearly Done.

St. Paul, Minn.—Work on the New Palace theater at Seventh and Wabasha streets is fast nearing completion and Messrs. The Empress theater, at Ninth and Wabasha, recently purchased by Messrs. Elliott and Sherman, of Minneapolis, has been renamed The Hippodrome.

A. J. Mentz Joins V-L-S-E.

Minneapolis, Minn.—A. J. Mentz, of Cincinnati, has succeeded E. S. Flynn as Dakota and Montana roadman for the Minneapolis V-L-S-E exchange. It is said that Mr. Flynn will go on the road as manager of one of the Supreme Features' "Where Are My Children?" shows.

Parade to Advertise "Liberty."

Minneapolis, Minn.—A noonhour parade in which thirty-one Minneapolis theaters were represented was staged last Friday by the Minneapolis Universal exchange to advertise its big serial "Liberty." Fred S. Meyer planned the parade and D. G. Rodgers acted as marshal. Universal employees impersonated Uncle Sam.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Jerome Abrams, special representative of the Bluebird headquarters, New York, was a visitor at the Minneapolis Bluebird offices last week. From Minneapolis, Mr. Abrams went to Des Moines, Iowa, and on August 29 will be married to Miss Marie Benjamin of Oklahoma City, Okla.

Milnor, N. D.—The Shubert theater here is to be reconstructed and made into a moving picture theater shortly.

Crosby, N. D.—A. A. Ashley has purchased the Photoplay theater here from R. W. Sellars.

Local Business Notes.

Minneapolis, Minn.—District Manager Fleckles of the Universal was scheduled to arrive in Minneapolis last Wednesday from Chicago to spend several days looking over the books of the local exchange.

R. Dick's road attraction; W. P. Crosby, who opens the new opera house at Willmar, Minn., Sept. 18, and H. A. Holbiecki, of the New Strand, at Winona.

New Palace at Superior, Wis.

Duluth, Minn.—We have received from Frank N. Phelps, manager of New Grand Theater Co. of Duluth, Minn., the following communication: Contracts for construction of the Palace theater at Tower avenue and Eleventh street, Superior, Wis., by the Cook Amusement company, have been let. The amount of the contract was withheld by the amusement company incorporators, the Cook Brothers and Frank Phelps of the New Grand theater. Furnishings for the house, heating, ventilating and lighting will be contracted for later.

Work on the theater building will begin Monday and it is hoped to have it completed by January 1. The house will be 50 x 140 feet, constructed of reinforced concrete, brick and terra cotta. It will be fireproof and will have a seating capacity of 1,200 on two floors.

Politicians Pay Attention Now

Indiana Picture Men and Patrons Not Ignored in Election Year—Candidates Make Overtures to Exhibitors on the Question of Censorship—No Favors Are Asked for or Wanted, but Merely Fair Play.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—With a campaign just getting under way which will include the election of representatives and senators to the state legislature as well as congressmen, politicians throughout the state and particularly those in close touch at the State Capital are beginning to get together with the seven hundred Indiana motion picture theater owners and with the various organizations maintained by them. It is the first time that the motion picture men have had a place in the consideration of the big politicians, in so far as their likes and dislikes are concerned and the fact that the politicians are making overtures is brilliant testimony of the strength of the Indiana exhibitors.

Censorship, of course, is the principal topic which these politicians are interested in. It became known to them not long ago that the exhibitors were prepared to fight anything in the way of useless censorship of the films and the compact organization of the motion picture men naturally awakened them to the need of watching out for the interests of these men.

The motion picture exhibitors have made it plain to those seeking favors that they are not looking for favors. They want a square deal, these politicians have been told. The exhibitors have pointed out that there is now no censorship except the laws of common decency, and that they are not being violated. They have been made to understand that censorship is not needed in Indiana.

Other legislatures have attempted to regulate the showing of films and have failed. The prospects are now, after considerable jockeying, that few, if any such attempts will be made in the next legislature.

Dunkirk Sunday Arrest.

Dunkirk, Ind.—Herbert Dwyer, proprietor of a moving picture theater of this city, was arrested and placed under bond of $100 in circuit court recently on the charge of desecrating the Sabbath. It is alleged that he operated his theater on Sunday. The charge against Dwyer was filed by a member of the city council. The case will be heard in September.

New Theaters and Changes.

Richmond, Ind.—The New Washington Theater Company has incorporated with a capital stock of $1,000 and it is planned to open a new theater within a few weeks. The directors of the new company are James C. Reed, Pearl Sample and Ida Reed.

Elkhart, Ind.—Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Welsch, who have been operating the Star here, sold their interests to an Elkhart business man and have returned to their former home at Bluffton.

Lafayette, Ind.—Moving picture theaters have been closed because of an infantile paralysis scare.

Plymouth, Ind.—J. W. Crabb, of Culver, has purchased the Bourbon theater.

Woodburn, Ind.—The Harmony Company, of Woodburn, has filed articles of incorporation and will open a moving picture theater as soon as suitable quarters can be provided. The company will erect a new building. The directors of the company are L. F. Fuelling, Andrew Fuelling and Christ Koch.

Newcastle, Ind.—Manager Sipe of the Starette has finished placing two hundred new seats in his theater. An increase in business demanded an increase in seating capacity. Sipe has a popular house.

Decides Important Nuisance Case

Tennessee Court Won't Enjoin Sunday Baseball in Nashville—Decision Expected to Be of Value to Motion Picture Theaters in Their Sabbath Opening Discussion.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Bldg. Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Circuit Judge Thos. E. Matthews on August 26th handed down a decision of importance, which will very probably prove of ultimate benefit to all amusement owners of Tennessee. Application for an injunction was made to restrain the playing of Sunday ball in Nashville. After Judge Matthews had attended a Sunday game in person with counsel for each side, he decided that the Sunday pastime could not be construed as a public nuisance, and in his opinion stated, in part, as follows:

"Counsel for the state say that although there is no statute forbidding Sunday baseball, yet the common law forbids it; that it is an indictable misdemeanor at common law, and cites the recent case of Graham vs. State, 7 Thompson, 285, decided in 1915. Graham was indicted and convicted and his conviction was affirmed by the Supreme Court, for operating a moving picture show on Sunday on the main street of Chattanooga. The Supreme Court said in deciding the Graham case that 'The holding in State ex rel. vs. Baseball Club, 19 Cates, 310, when properly understood is not in conflict with any of the cases' cited to sustain the ruling in the Graham case. The 19 Cates case decided in 1912 was not overruled nor criticized. I attended with counsel. I saw no drunkenness, no profanity, no insults, and no fights. The noise was no greater than I have frequently heard at theaters, and it did not seem to me that any residents were annoyed or disturbed. I therefore decline to issue a preliminary injunction. MATTHEWS, Judge."

Certainly if Judge Matthews could find no objection to the noise of a baseball game with 3,500 people in attendance, it does not appear consistent that the operation of moving picture theaters on Sunday, where there is a pronounced absence of cheering and boisterous conduct, and where both players and audience are silent, could be termed as a public nuisance. In upholding the lawfulness of the ball games, it was specifically pointed out by the court that the noise was no greater than frequently heard at theaters. This being true, how then could the "noise" incident to a photoplay exhibition be considered objectionable?

Fire at Dreamland Theater.

Nashville, Tenn.—Fire which broke out in the operating room of Dreamland theater on August 23d, destroyed several reels of film and badly damaged the theater. Prompt action by several fire companies prevented total destruction of the building, which is a wooden structure. Manager Vester rushed the necessary repairs, and the house is again in operation.

Speaking of Enterprise.

Nashville, Tenn.—When Exhibitor W. H. Wassman made a trip to Atlanta a few days ago, the picture people learned of the fact beforehand. On arrival at the station Mr. Wassman was confronted with the difficult task of choosing a conveyance for the uptown ride. Difficult? Difficult is right—there were eleven film men with nine automobiles waiting to carry the popular Tennesseean to the hotel.

Plans to Reopen Lincoln.

Nashville, Tenn.—If negotiations, which are now under way, are carried out, the colored populace of Nashville will again enjoy a first class vaudeville and picture program this winter, through the reopening of the Lincoln theater. H. I. Banks, a negro theater man of Alabama, spent several days in the city last week looking over the prospects for the coming season, and expects to formulate definite plans within a few days. Banks is interested in the picture business in Huntsville and Decatur, Ala., and is president of the Twin City Amusement Company. The Lincoln is a splendid house, located in the heart of the negro business district, and it is believed proper handling will make it a winner for the coming season.

"Nation" Opens Vendome Season.

Nashville, Tenn.—Upon his return from a New York trip, Manager W. A. Sheetz announced to the Nashville public that the Vendome theater, the largest playhouse in the city, would forego the usual minstrel show opening date, ushering in the season instead with a week's return engagement of "The Birth of a Nation." Owing to the fact that the opening week, September 18-23, covers the same period in which the Tennessee State Fair will be held, indications point to another record-breaking run of the big feature. Thousands of visitors from over the South are annually in attendance at the agricultural and stock display, a large part of whom have not had an opportunity to witness the picture, and Mr. Sheetz is making every arrangement to handle the big crowds with the highest degree of efficiency.

Youngstown Operators Ask Increase

Demand $6 More a Week—Some of the Larger Houses Said to Favor Giving In to Save Loss in Business.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, O.

YOUNGTOWN, O. — Exhibitors in Youngstown have before them a demand by operators for an increase of $6 a week in wages and a meeting is to be held to determine what shall be done about the matter. Most of the larger houses are understood to be in favor of granting the increase, as an alternative to possible trouble resulting in the interruption of business; but others feel that the additional burden would be unjust, many of the smaller houses having lost money recently, according to their proprietors. Some adjustment of the matter may be arrived at by a compromise based on the size of the theaters, and no serious trouble is therefore anticipated, as both sides are inclined to discuss the question amicably.

Ohioans See "Fall of a Nation."

Youngstown, O.—Local audiences are having an opportunity to see "The Fall of a Nation," the film made from the Thomas Dixon novel of that name, and in a way a sequel to his famous film, "The Birth of a Nation," which has been repeatedly barred from Ohio. The former was shown first in Cleveland, and Youngstown is the second city in the state to see it. The Hippodrome booked the film for a week's run, and met with decided success, as there was deep interest in the subject. The objections which barred "The Birth of a Nation" were to the treatment of some phases of the negro question from a Southern angle, but nothing of this sort occurs in "The Fall of a Nation," and Ohio people are consequently to be allowed to see it, with its strong appeal to the widespread sentiment in favor of preparedness.

Orpheum at Urbana Sold.

Urbana, O.—The Orpheum, which is the oldest moving picture house in Urbana, has been disposed of, Mrs. Frank Reifsnider, who has owned the house for some years, having sold it to Mrs. J. A. Schultz. The house has been popular and profitable and the new owner expects to keep it running in a way to merit a continuation of this record.

Manager Clark Young Weds.

Bowling Green, O.—Clark Young, the popular manager of the Lyric theater, and Miss Hazel Keeler, of Haskins, have announced their marriage, which took place on August 18. In celebration of the occasion Mr. Young declared the public his guests at the Lyric on the evening following the announcement and gave his patrons a full program free of charge.

J. F. Richardson Buys the Clifton.

Cincinnati, O.—The common pleas court of Hamilton county authorized the sale of the Clifton Amusement Co., following the opening of sealed bids submitted for the purpose. Both the real estate and the various personal property connected with the operation of the theater were submitted for sale, but bids were received only for the whole, as a going concern.

The highest of the six bidders was James S. Richardson, who offered $18,000 for the property, and he will accordingly become the legal owner of the Clifton. For the purpose of the sale the property was appraised at $15,000, and it could have been sold for considerably less than this, so that it can be seen that its value as a revenue-producing business was highly appreciated. The company was incorporated for $25,000, and receivership proceedings were brought several months ago by creditors and stockholders, on the ground that various causes had prevented the company from making money.

But Few Plague Cases Here.

Cincinnati, O.—The fact that there have been a few cases of infantile paralysis discovered in this city, and at least one death from the disease at the general hospital, has occasioned some alarm, not only among parents of children, but among moving-picture exhibitors, in view of the ravages of the epidemic elsewhere. In Toledo an order was issued by the health department a few days ago barring all children under the age of ten years from moving-picture shows, on account of the prevalence of the disease. However, the precautions taken by local authorities have so far made the number of cases in Cincinnati negligible, and unless more of them appear it is not probable that any restrictions of the sort referred to will be necessary.

Sidney, Ill.—G. C. Allen has sold the moving picture theater here to James Bozard.

Mendon, Ill.—Robert Haisting has purchased the Electric theater.

Champaign, Ill.—The Nell theater, 315 North Nell street, closed after three years of operation. It was under the management of Verne and Glen Corley.

Danville, Ill.—Manager Jarodski has finished the remodeling and redecorating of the Colonial theater. The stage has been torn out, making it an exclusive moving picture house. This increased the seating capacity to 400 and gives twenty per cent. more room in the auditorium.

Rutland, Ill.—The Opera House reopened as a moving picture theater September 2 with a Pramount feature, "The Heart of Jennifer."

Oak Park, Ill.—The Oak Park theater found it profitable to play Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter" again.

Waukegan, Ill.—The Barrison theater, which reopened September 2 under the management of Sid Heyman, has been remodeled and equipped with moving picture apparatus. It was redecorated with a five-tone color scheme.

Brookport, Ill.—A. E. Herman is the owner of the new moving picture theater opened here. The performances were inaugurated with a serial, "The Diamond from the Sky."

Waukegan, Ill.—Mr. and Mrs. Carl Muller, of the Elite theater, who gave a performance to 800 children, as mentioned in last week's WORLD, followed this up with another performance for the mothers of the children. William S. Hart in "The Apostle of Vengeance" was shown.

IN MICHIGAN.

Children Barred from Kalamazoo Shows.

KALAMAZOO, Mich.—The notice of the fifth case of infantile paralysis led Dr. R. L. Leland, city health officer, to notify all exhibitors in Kalamazoo to bar from their shows children under fifteen years of age. Warning is given that any violation of this order will be met by closing the theater.

Will Build New Muskegon Theater.

Muskegon, Mich.—Paul J. Schlossman, of the Schlossman Amusement Company, has announced that he will erect, beginning April 1, 1917, a $30,000 motion picture theater seating 800 persons. Plans are being prepared by Howard Crane, architect, Detroit. The site selected includes the lobby of the present Majestic theater, but the Majestic will remain in operation as long as possible. The auditorium of the new theater will be 44 by 90 feet. Two hundred of the seats will be on the mezzanine floor. A big pipe organ will be one of the features. Another novelty will be that the auto loges will run down the center of the main floor. It is hoped to have the house in operation about August 1.

Battle Creek, Mich.—The People's theater, 38 East Main street, formerly under the management of Miss Kathryn Caldwell, has been opened under the management of J. C. Miller.

Manager Smith Got Film to Music Hall

Word Came That Feature Had Not Arrived—Exchange Man Starts His Own Express Service and Picture Gets There in Time.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—In justifying the Mutual Film Corporation's slogan, "Service Beyond Films," Percy L. Smith, manager of the organization's local office, was recently forced to virtually establish an individual express line to get a certain feature to Shelbyville, Ky., in time for the matinee performance at Music Hall.

It seems that the film was booked at the Victoria theater, of New Albany, Ind., with instructions that the film be carried over to the hotel, and there picked up by the express company. The express company failed to pick up the film, and the next morning a telephone call from Shelbyville put Manager Smith "hep" to the fact that something had gone wrong.

Investigation proved that the express company had picked up the film that morning instead of on the previous night, and that the film was somewhere between New Albany and the express depot. A taxicab was summoned and a hunt started for the wagon. It was finally located about two miles from nowhere, and sauntering along at a walk. The film was taken out of the express driver's hands and a quick run made to the interurban station, where it was found the express car had made its last trip and the passenger car had left just a few minutes before. There was no chance to head the express car, but the taxi driver agreed to catch the passenger coach if Smith would pay his fine in case of arrest.

As the interurban car had to make a detour to get out of the city and the taxi took a direct course, the passenger car was finally headed a few miles from the city, but the conductor refused to take an express package, it being against the rules of the company. Manager Smith dismissed the taxi, boarded the car with the films which he delivered at the theater in time for the matinee, the hall already being filled with people waiting for the opening of the show.

After figuring up the expense of the trip it was found that it had cost $15 to deliver a $25 subject, but Manager Smith had justified the corporation's claim concerning service.

May Close Second Story Theaters.

Shelbyville, Ky.—From present indications it looks very much as though Brown's theater, formerly operated by the late R. M. Brown, will shortly be closed. Following the recent death of Mr. Brown the executors, who had announced that the theater would be sold at public auction, leased the theater to Ivory Ethington for one year, with the privilege of seven additional years. At a meeting of the city council a few nights later a committee composed of City Attorney Barrickman and Councilmen B. A. Logan and W. A. McGrath, was appointed to prepare an ordinance which shall prevent the establishment or operation of moving picture theaters excepting on the first floor. The Brown theater is on the second floor and may have to take up quarters elsewhere.

C. E. Sullivan Buys the Park.

The Park theater, at Highland Park, a suburb of Louisville, has been taken over by C. E. Sullivan, who has reopened his house with some good film material.

Looked Their Booths Over.

Louisville, Ky.—Following a recent report from Hamilton, O., to the effect that an operator had been electrocuted while at work in his booth, Louisville operators looked over their wiring and mechanical equipment in order to be sure that there were no non-insulated wires or other dangerous parts. Since August 1 the operators in the larger theaters have been working under the Workmen's Compansation Law, enacted last spring and effective on August 1. The larger exhibitors quickly agreed to the provisions of the law, and put their men under its regulations. The Star, Alamo, Majestic, Casino and all of the houses operated by the Broadway Amusement Company have accepted the act.

Louisville Film News Notes.

The Rex theater has been booked by the Mutual Film Corporation for the first run on the new Baumont-Mutual "Fantamos Series." Business with the Rex is reported to have picked up with cooler weather and the five-cent admission.

A recent visitor to Louisville was C. M. Brown, manager of the Memphis, Tenn., office of the Mutual. Mr. Brown was called to Louisville on account of illness of relatives residing in this city. On the return trip he stopped off in Nashville for a day or two.

J. J. Barry of New Haven, Ky., who operates "The Movie," was recently in the city for the purpose of booking films with which to reopen the house, which was closed during the hot weather.

One of the best drawing cards booked at the Alamo theater this summer was the Mutual "Soul Mates," featuring William Russell. Manager Fred Dolle reported an excellent run of two days.

Walter Van Walker, representing the General Film out of Indianapolis, Ind., was recently in Louisville calling on the exhibitors.

Charles Wilson of the Cincinnati office of the Standard Film was recently in Louisville, where he booked "The Yellow Menace," at the Star and several other theaters. J. Johnson Musselman, manager of the Star, reported that this was the first serial he had ever booked for that theater.

The Gayety theater, which at various times has played pictures, vaudeville, burlesque, etc., opened the season on Sunday, August 26, with "While the City Sleeps," and will show International shows this year at popular prices. Forty-two shows have been booked for this season, according to Manager Wall, and include dramas, comedies, farces and melodramas. Matinees will be given on Sunday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. The Buckingham, the burlesque house, has been open a few days.

Woodland Park, formerly Lion Garden, which has been operated as an airdome for the past two years or more, has been doing an excellent business this summer under the management of Alf Oldham. On August 30 a big picnic was booked at the park during the afternoon and evening by the congregation of St. Phillip Neri's Church.

A. C. Farrel, manager of the Louisville offices of the Central Film Co., has done exceptionally well on booking the new forty-reel picture "Liberty."

Kentucky News Notes.

Lexington, Ky.—Charles H. Berryman, who is connected with the Lexington, Ky., Opera House, and the Ben Ali theater, was named chairman of the reception committee of the Republican state campaign committee, to take charge of things at the opening of the campaign in Lexington on September 5.

Campbellsville, Ky.—The front of the new Alhambra moving picture theater has nearly been completed, and the show house will be ready to open shortly.

Dover, Ky.—The Airdome theater has discontinued regular shows and is now showing on Saturday nights only.

Move Against Suggestive Ads.

Kansas City Advertising Club Voted Disapproval of Certain Demoralizing Advertisements—The Films in Question Were Harmless, but the Paper Was in Bad Taste and Invited Hostilities—Poor Business.

From Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Kansas City Advertising Club on August 29 voted its disapproval of the tone of several advertisements of moving pictures; and made plans for correcting that tone, which it was stated appealed to the baser passions, and was therefore demoralizing. Technically, the club will attack this particular kind of advertising because it seems to promise salacious pictures, and doesn't deliver the goods.

The subject was presented to the club by Otto Barth, who told of investigations that had been made by the vigilance committee; and later the chairman of the vigilance committee (the names of members are not public property) endorsed his statements.

"Listen to these," said Mr. Barth, and read lines from several display advertisements of moving pictures. The lines were in general as follows:

"Marriage for money is less sinful than a childless union."

"Patronage of children not solicited."

"Children admitted only when accompanied by parents."

And many similar ones.

"Now these pictures are perfectly all right—the police allow them to be shown, so there cannot possibly be any danger in them. As a matter of fact the fault of the appeal to passions is not the fault of the manufacturers of the pictures or the exhibitors. These provide what the public wants, and of a character that is good. The fault is with the men who write the advertisements. They are palpably trying to draw trade by making certain classes think they will see off-color pictures.

"The advertisements put into the minds of the young people—and the old ones perhaps—the only evil thoughts that are aroused by the pictures. And the people who go expecting to see something off-color are disappointed. The evil is still in their minds, however, unsatisfied—unless it has been driven away by the moral qualities of the show."

Bad Business.

"Such advertising is wrong. It is bad business in the first place, because it offers something that the exhibitors can't deliver, and do not give. And permanent business can't be built up on deception. I have no doubt that the evil of such advertising can be corrected through the honest advertising law, though prosecutions will not be necessary, I believe. However, I have no doubt that a trial would reveal the variance between the advertising and the pictures sufficiently to bring convictions.

"But this can be reached by appeal to the advertising men themselves, on the ground of good business, and the advantage of advertising that which is offered, and giving the exhibitor a chance to make good. Honesty pays in advertising of other commodities—why not in moving pictures?"

An allustration of the character of such sense-appeal advertising was given, of the news-butcher on the train, who sold sealed envelopes—the victim had no grounds for complaint, because he expected to get something he had no right to have. So with moving picture shows: The patron who responded to the innuendos of the salacious advertising, and went expecting to see a questionable show, has no grounds for a complaint when he finds the picture perfectly proper. The only statement he could make is that he was led to believe he would see a show that should be condemned—and didn't see it—that he hoped the law would be violated, but it wasn't.

Invite Open Hostility.

Other speakers added words to the argument—all on one side; that most of the manufacturers and exhibitors were doing their part towards giving the moving picture business a high standing, but that the writers of the advertising were laying the foundation for open and organized hostility of church and other organizations.

Manager Kubach Recovering.

Abilene, Kan.—G. A. Kubach, proprietor of the Lyric theater, Abilene, Kan., one of the handsomest theaters in the state of Kansas, has been sick all summer, and is only now growing able to attend to business. But the theater has had one of its most prosperous seasons. The reason is that when Mr. Kubach was taken ill, his wife pitched in, took charge, and has run the house most efficiently. The Lyric seats 500, and 5 and 10 cents are the charges. Features are run every night.

Didn't Lose an Airdome Night.

Russell, Kan.—R. E. Sturtevant, proprietor of the Crystal and the Airdome at Russell, Kan., beat this year his record of last year with his airdome. He has not lost a night with it. The weather has of course been ideal for airdomes—a long drouth. In 1915 there was an excess of rain, but he lost only 2 days. Mr. Sturtevant reports better business in summer with his Airdome than in winter with the theater.

Kansas Film Men Hope for End of Censors

Recent Convention at State Capital Disclosed Interest of Many State Officials in Anti-Censorship—An Appeal to the People.

TOPEKA, KAN.—Optimism for the fight against the censorship pervades the moving picture men of Kansas just now, and they are starting on their campaign energetically. It seems that the Topeka convention was planned with far-seeing wisdom. The film men invaded the state capital, even the state house; and they laid their cards on the table. They said openly to state officials, to city officials, to organizations, and to the public, that they were out to repeal censorship because it was injurious to the proper improvement of the quality of pictures, and unfair to the industry and to the public. And they found so many officials and leading citizens taking the same view that the task of killing censorship really looked easy.

One of the most interesting developments of the convention was the conclusion that the public hasn't heretofore taken much interest in the controversy as to censorship. It's all been between the film men and the censorship board—and the appeal board itself deprecates the necessity of occasionally killing a picture! The newspapers have found such good reading in the fight, however, that the appearance has been given of a widespread interest, with the inference that the opinion of the public is about equally divided. But the public has just been looking on.

Henceforth, however, the public is to be brought into the campaign, and aroused to its interest in the elimination of state censorship. The extraordinary demonstration, at the parade and the ball, was sufficient encouragement to the exhibitors that the people probably will be on the side of free pictures.

The Association to Boost Sunday Shows

Amusement Association of Kansas to Give Aid for Open Sabbath Theaters Only Where There Is a Sentiment Favoring Them.

TOPEKA, KAN.—The Amusement Association of Kansas will probably stimulate interest in the various towns of the state in the subject of Sunday theaters. The policy of the association has been made plain, that it will help to Sunday opening only in towns where the public sentiment is clear for Sunday shows, and encourages Sunday closing where there is no strong demand. Some of the largest towns of the state have Sunday shows, including Kansas City, Kan., Leavenworth, and others in the eastern end of the state. Topeka theaters are closed on Sunday. Wichita will know in a few days whether theaters are to be open there on Sunday or not. The police and authorities of any Kansas town can close theaters and other lines of business on Sunday if they please, under old laws.

Policewoman Compliments Omaha Shows

Mrs. C. H. Cox, City's Special Policewoman, Has Always Found Show Managers Ready to Cooperate—Has Never Had to Make an Arrest.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

OMAHA, Neb.—"I think Omaha moving picture houses are conducted along first-class lines," said Mrs. C. H. Cox, special policewoman around Omaha theaters for the last two years. The co-operation of the managers has been splendid, she says. Incidentally it has never been necessary for her to exercise her power to make arrests. Mrs. Cox made the statement, praising Omaha exhibitors, prior to leaving for the Pacific coast to see what policewomen there are accomplishing.

About Live Nebraska Exhibitors.

Omaha, Neb.—The Boulevard theater, Thirty-third and Leavenworth streets, is now under the management of its owner, Mr. McCaffery.

Omaha, Neb.—The management of Ma-nawa Park decided to finish the outdoor amusement season by giving feature moving pictures, changing the program nightly.

IN IOWA.

An Exhibitor with Some Good Pep.

Clear Lake, Ia.—The arrest of C. E. Carragher, a local exhibitor, for operating his moving picture show on Sunday started something.

Carragher regarded his business as having as much right to stay open as others, and filed informations with the courts against forty other concerns which he believed violated the law just as much as he did. The list included druggists, confectioners, garages, restaurant keepers and even the band which had been hired to give Sunday concerts.

Sabbath Fine in Knoxville.

Knoxville, Ia.—S. L. Elder, an exhibitor here, was fined $10 and costs in a justice's court for keeping his moving picture theater open on Sunday.

What Omaha's "Movie Inn" Looks Like.

Omaha, Neb.—"Fourth floor! lawn mowers, sport shirts, kitchen ware, 'Screen Club.'" This may be the direction of elevator boys to patrons of the Brandeis' stores in Omaha, Neb., which has just opened a cozy little dining room to be known as the "Movie Inn."

The Screen Club of Omaha already has made the place its headquarters. The idea originated with R. C. Phelps, who is manager and proprietor of the blue room, green room, Pompeian room, candy store and soda counter in the same store. In working out his plan he had the aid of the World, Mutual and Fox and other film corporations, with the result that the walls are covered with pictures of the leading photoplayers. The Inn promises to be a popular retreat for the women patrons of the theaters. Manager Phelps plans to have a series of afternoon teas, as soon as colder weather begins. In recognition of his efforts to help the business of the exhibitors in the city the Screen Club decided to make it the future meeting place for the association.

St. Louis Fall Openings Begin

Picture Lovers See Prospects Good for Fine Winter Crop of Films—World Representative Finds Downtown Theaters Reopening with Crowds Coming Back—Prosperity Seems a Pretty Sure Thing.

By A. H. Giebler, 236 Vanol Building, St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—St Louis is in the betwixt and between season just now. For the last week the weather has been so cool that people in the al fresco places no longer look longingly at the scenes laid in the Klondyke, and other snow and ice stuff, and about half the time the nice little creepy feeling that starts out to be a thrill at the big moment of the play changes itself into a chill. The seats and benches of the airdomes are ornamented with more dead leaves than patrons, and to quote the poet of Film Row, whose name will be sent for a properly addressed and stamped envelope:

"The melancholy days are come,"
The husky door-man cried.
"'Tain't hot enough for airdomes,
And too blamed hot inside."

But it's an ill wind that blows nobody patrons, and the people with roofs over their places are rubbing their hands in joy and sloshing paint and soap suds all over the place in their preparations for the fall opening.

We took a trip down town and found things humming away in great shape, and signs out announcing openings for the first of September at theaters that have been closed all summer.

Strand's Autumn Opening.

The Columbia, home of Orpheum vaudeville, which took care of the Strand audiences during the hot weather while the Strand was being regilded and repainted and treated to a new ten thousand dollar pipe organ, closed up on the 28th, and the Strand opened the next day and blocked the sidewalk up and down Sixth street all afternoon and evening with its first-of-the-season crowd.

Triangle features and "Gloria's Romance" are on at the Strand, and the place looks very fine and brave with its beautiful interior decorations, and Charlie Vollmer, who showed us around, is as proud of the place as a girl with a new fall hat.

Royal Opened Sunday.

The Royal, under the management of Mrs. Rose Cornelius, is getting ready to open on Sunday, the 3rd of September, with Paramount features, and at the Lyric, the other downtown house controlled by the same management, which is scientifically cooled and ventilated, and did not close all summer, the effect of the cool weather is already being felt in the crowds that fill the lobby waiting for seats every night.

Gem Under New Management.

The Gem, a house of much history and proud record in the past, will reopen about the first of September under new management, and a gang of cleaners are busy flopping up the sidewalk and making Sol Oppenheimer and Oscare Dane, the booking agents who have their offices on the second floor step high like a school girl crossing a creek, every time they step out of the building.

Not Ready Yet.

The Hippodrome, of which there have been rumors of opening with mixed bill of pictures and vaudeville, is still dark, and looks as if it might remain so, notwithstanding the rumors.

There are two houses on St. Charles street that are for rent, the St. Charles and the Broadway, diagonally across the street from each other, but no doubt as soon as the season is fully opened and things get to going good, they will open their doors. We hope so, for we are proud of our record of "No closed houses in town," which has been our boast heretofore.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Central's Good Business.

The Central, at Sixth and Market, which has just closed a successful run with the revival of Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country," was filled to the doors with "The Folly of Sin," and Sweeney says things are picking up with good indications of a fine fall and winter business.

A Buzz Around the Broadway.

Around the corner on Broadway we found the Astor, buzzing along under its new manager, John Angelich, and Charles Wagner, the assistant manager, who has been on the job steadily for nine years. This place has not been closed for a single day since its initial performance except once four years ago, when a fire necessitated closing for a month while it was rebuilt, and Mr. Wagner spoke very feelingly of the days when the program was one and a half reels, and contrasted that day with the nine and ten reels that form the show now.

Newly Named Variety.

Half a block farther on is the erstwhile Dixie, which passed under the management of Fineschriber and Ansell a short time ago. The new management has changed the name of the place to the Variety, and has added a fifteen hundred dollar mechanical orchestra to the house. Business is good at the Variety, and Mr. Ansell reports handling thirteen hundred people on the Sunday just passed.

Rainbow Prosperous.

The Rainbow was found to be prosperous, as usual. George Angelich, a brother to John, who has just acquired the Astor, is the manager of the Rainbow, and he was entertaining a nice crowd with a Biograph reissue showing Blanche Sweet in "A Temporary Truce," and Mary Fuller in "The Trail of Chance." The soda machine in the lobby of the Rainbow was out of order, but it was too cold for soda anyway, so we were not disappointed, and moved on up the street to the Famous, which is on the frontier of the downtown district.

Doing Famously.

Miss Tillie Schwartz presides at the Famous and has managed to keep the place humming along gall summer, but she talks very strongly of making a roof garden on top of the house next season.

Coasts' Cool Summer Makes Good Business

California Exchangemen Say That Business Has Flourished This Summer and Is Now Above the Average.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, California.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—Leading film exchange men of this city advise that business during the summer now coming to a close has been the best in many years. Country trade has held up especially well and fewer houses in the interior valleys have closed than is usually the case. The cool summer that has been experienced is given as one reason for the very satisfactory conditions that have been prevailing, and another is that modern houses have supplanted many of the old-time store theaters, and that these have been equipped with cooling and ventilating systems, making them superior even to airdomes. Last year everyone who could get away made a visit to the Exposition at San Francisco during the summer, and this year most of them are remaining at home, the ideal weather that has prevailed throughout the state having rendered trips to the cool coast cities unnecessary. The few theaters that did close for the summer are commencing to reopen again, and within a few weeks all will be in operation.

Locally business is above the average for this season of the year, despite labor troubles in many lines. It is well above that of last year, and the satisfactory condition of affairs is reflected in the number of new houses being opened and the changes being made in others. Work is under way on three fine theaters in the downtown district, and several in the residence sections will be opened at an early date.

New Exchange for Film Row.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Western Feature Film Company has opened offices at Leavenworth street and Golden Gate avenue and plans to sell and rent films and handle theater supplies of all kinds. D. S. Markowitz, for a few weeks manager of the local office of the General Film Company, Inc., is associated with this concern, which already has a large stock of films at its command.

Coast Managers of General Meet.

San Francisco, Cal.—The managers of the Pacific coast branches of the General Film Company, Inc., met a short time ago at the fine new headquarters of this concern on Golden Gate avenue and conferred with Fred Aiken, who has charge of the territory west of Chicago. Those present were H. H. Hicks, who is once again manager of the local office; W. H. Cree, manager of the Los Angeles branch; A. L. Todd, of the Portland office, and Frank L. Hudson, manager of the Seattle branch. From here Mr. Aiken will go to Los Angeles and will then return and look over the Northwest.

Former Exhibitor Sells Theaters.

San Francisco, Cal.—Fred Frisk, formerly well known as an exhibitor both here and in the Northwest, is now at the head of the United Theater Exchange, Pacific building, and has handled a number of important transfers of late. His experience as an exhibitor, and the fact that he is enabled to assist purchasers in getting started in the business, has assisted materially in building up the trade the firm enjoys. Among the recent sales made through the medium of this office has been the transfer of the Napa house of David Solari to A. Fischer of San Francisco, who plans to make a number of improvements; the sale of the Empire theater at San Jose to C. F. Morse, who purchased it from G. G. McLachlan; the transfer of the Regent theater on Fillmore street, San Francisco, from J. F. Hughes to Leroy Blanchard and L. F. Salbach, and the sale of the Fairyland theater on Devisadero street, San Francisco, to A. O. Smith, formerly of Seattle, Wash.

Gets Clara Kimball Young Pictures.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sol L. Lesser, of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has returned from a hurried business trip to New York, bringing back with him the California rights to the Clara Kimball Young productions. A heavy business is expected on these as soon as bookings commence, as exhibitors have filed many inquiries as to where the productions could be had.

E. Auger Visits Coast.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. Auger, a special representative of the Mutual Film Corporation, spent several days here recently looking over the local exchange. He has since left for Los Angeles for a brief stay.

Cohen Now with Charles Klopot.

San Francisco, Cal.—I. N. Cohen, well known in local film exchange circles, is now with Charles Klopot, who conducts the California Comedy & Feature Film Company, 120 Golden Gate avenue. He will have charge of this office when Mr. Klopot goes to Texas shortly to open a branch exchange.

International's Big Business.

San Francisco, Cal.—The International Film Service, Inc., is meeting with great success with its new serial, "Beatrice Fairfax," more than sixty bookings having been made in this territory, and the first week's run at the Rialto has not been concluded. Manager H. L. Knappen is delighted. The arrival of assistant manager J. K. Burger on the Pacific coast is expected at an early date.

Bluebird Bulletin Out.

San Francisco, Cal.—A neat house organ known as the Bluebird Bulletin is being issued from the local Bluebird office by manager Charles I. Luntz and is now eagerly looked forward to by many California exhibitors. It lists all past Bluebird releases, tells the story of the current production, and gives advance information regarding coming attractions. Mr. Luntz has succeeded in booking several productions at Idora Park, Oakland, since the policy of showing feature attractions was inaugurated there, and has had a flood of applications for bookings as a result of the national advertising campaign in the Saturday Evening Post, combined with other Bluebird publicity.

George Metcalfe on Two Months' Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—George Metcalfe, head of the supply house bearing his name, left recently for Seattle, where a branch is maintained, and from there will make a series of trips through the entire Pacific Northwest to meet dealers and exhibitors. He will be gone for at least two months and during his absence the San Francisco office will be in charge of W. L. Stern.

Back From Long South American Trip

S. Blumenthal Tells of Opportunities to Sell Film South of the Canal—Charlie Chaplin in Spanish Speaking Cities.

San Francisco, Cal.—S. Blumenthal, who is known in film exchange circles throughout this country and South America, was here recently making arrangements to handle the stocks of films of local independent exchanges in the new film exchange to be opened by himself and two brothers, G. Blumenthal and E. Blumenthal, at El Paso, Tex., early in September. Quarters have been secured in the Trust building and business will be carried on under the name of the Peerless Feature Film Exchange, with a stock valued at about $40,000. From here it is planned to serve the states of Texas, New Mexico and Arizona, and a specialty will be made of feature attractions. Arrangements have been made to handle among other lines the films of the Peerless Film Service, Inc., of this city, of which E. H Emmick is manager, and those of the Morgan Film Company of Seattle, Wash.

Mr. Blumenthal returned recently from a business trip of nine months through the countries of South America, from the Isthmus of Panama to the Argentine Republic, with a stock of American-made films and has a fund of information in regard to the wants of exhibitors there. He declares that the mistake made by exporters in this country is in not making a more careful study of the market before sending films. Many films are taken into the South American countries with the titles in English, he says, and these are about as useful there as films with Spanish titles would be in this country. Spanish is the language spoken there, and the patrons of moving picture houses prefer films with Spanish actors. However, American films are coming to the front, through their superior quality, particularly in the large cities of South America, and it is believed that in time the Southern republics would prove a splendid outlet for the plants of this country. Mr. Blumenthal found that Charlie Chaplin was becoming popular with theatergoers there and that the small boys of the Spanish-speaking countries were commencing to imitate his famous walk. He advises all who may be planning to take films to South America to secure Spanish titles for their productions, to secure posters in Spanish and to be prepared to pay high rates of duty on both film and advertising matter.

Singelow Visits San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—A. Singelow, manager of the Morgan Film Company of Seattle, was a visitor here this week on business for his firm. In addition to being a well versed film exchange man, Mr. Singelow enjoys a wide reputation as a camera man, having taken many pictures for Pathe.

Pantages Books "Yellow Menace."

San Francisco, Cal.—So well pleased has the management of Pantages theater been with serial film productions as a drawing card for its circuit of vaudeville houses that it has booked "The Yellow Menace" to succeed "The Iron Claw." In view of the manner in which the Asiatic question has been pushed to the front on the Pacific coast, and the popular feeling on this subject, it is believed that the production will meet with great favor. Manager Robert Drady of the local house is enthusiastic over the merits of serial films as an attraction for vaudeville houses, expressing the opinion that when properly selected they have a splendid drawing power, and the splendid business enjoyed by this house during the past year serves to bear out his convictions.

San Francisco Briefs.

The Poppy theater on Valencia street, which has been conducted as a 5-cent house, has gone to 10 cents, and has instituted World Film service.

Seattle's Alhambra Back to Vaudeville

Jensen and Von Herberg Theater to Be Reopened with Orpheum Big Time Vaudeville—Has Had Varied Career.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Washington.

SEATTLE, Wash.—The Alhambra, one of the big downtown moving picture theaters owned and operated by Jensen & Von Herberg, is to be opened with Orpheum big time vaudeville on September 24. Carl Reiter, for seven years the manager of the Orpheum here, and last year manager at Portland, will be the local executive in charge. Vice-President L. C. Brown and Secretary S. Lansing, of the Orpheum Theater Company, San Francisco, have been here several days negotiating. The lease covers a long period of years, and The Alhambra will be refinished outside and in. Two performances will be given daily.

The Wilkes Stock Company has retained the lease on the old Orpheum theater and will continue there through the winter.

This is by no means the first change that the Alhambra has seen. It was first opened in 1909 under Schubert management. Since then it has run the gamut of uses to which a theatrical building may be put. From legitimate to vaudeville, then a combination of vaudeville and pictures, then, as the first theater acquired by Jensen & Von Herberg, recognized as one of the finest and best motion picture theaters in town. Early last spring its bill was changed again to one of vaudeville and pictures and now comes this last change.

"Hulda from Holland" at Coliseum.

Seattle, Wash.—When Mary Pickford was booked for the Coliseum in "Hulda from Holland," it was decided to put the play on in appropriate fashion. Manager C. S. Jensen therefore clothed his eighteen pretty usher girls in the garb of The Netherlands, while his house men all donned Dutch blue and wooden shoes.

Coliseum Ready for "Hulda."

The effect was the creation of a striking Holland atmosphere the moment the theater was entered, even before the box-office was passed, in point of fact, for the big, "practical" windmill above the main entrance was an effective Dutch herald in itself.

Miss Pickford played at The Coliseum to the record business of the house.

Eugene Roth Likes Liberty.

Seattle, Wash.—Eugene Roth, of the Portola, in San Francisco, was here recently looking over the theaters to get some ideas for his new San Francisco house. After he had left it was understood that the new San Francisco theater would undoubtedly be patterned after the Liberty theater here.

Demands of Portland Labor Union

Labor Council Submits Proposed Wage Schedule and Union Rules to Theater Men —All Branches of Union Labor in Theaters Affected—Object to Compel Theaters to Use More Men.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Oregon.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The affiliated labor unions of the city have submitted to the theaters a proposed schedule of union wages and regulations under which they intend to work after September 1. The document in the hands of the theater managers is a lengthy affair and they say if all the provisions in it are accepted by employers of union labor in theaters it will mean that those theaters must about double their salary expense. The unions have, however, invited a committee from the theater managers to discuss the matter before the proposed schedule goes into effect.

It is evident from the proposition made by the unions that it is their purpose to compel the theaters to employ more union labor. In the case of the musicians a wage scale is proposed that compels a theater employing but one man in its pit to pay him part of the wages a second man would get if employed, and if a house employs more than one man the wages decrease conversely with the number of men.

It is proposed that union operators cannot do any other electrical work about the theater. At several theaters the operators now care for the motors and other electrical apparatus about the house during their spare time at added salary. Neither can stage men handle any electrical apparatus under the proposed union rules nor can union workers, except bill posters, handle the theater's display, and a rate of four cents a sheet is proposed for hanging paper where no regular bill poster is employed.

Picture men who run an occasional vaudeville act are vitally affected by the proposed schedule and some of them say that the union demands violate an agreement made with the theatrical association a year ago.

New Mutual Office.

Portland, Ore.—The Mutual Film Corporation exchange at Portland, Ore., recently moved into a building erected for it at Ninth and Davis streets, adjoining the new Universal exchange. The new Mutual quarters occupy 50 by 100, and every bit of the space is utilized. Manager G. A. Reed has his office near the entrance of the building where he can greet the exhibitors as they come in.

Mutual Film Portland Office.

Light offices with glass partitions are provided for the road men and booking clerks. The poster room, shipping and inspecting departments are all separated from the main office by substantial walls.

Worthy of special mention is the Mutual projection room, which is without doubt the classiest in town. It is supplied with comfortable upholstered seats, decorated with potted palms, and the ventilation is perfect.

Manager Reed has succeeded in making Portland's Mutual office real homelike, and upstate exhibitors make it their headquarters when they are in the city.

Tom North Talks Entertainingly.

Portland, Ore.—Tom North, Pacific Northwest manager for V-L-S-E, made a hurried trip from Seattle to visit the Portland boys August 23. Mr. North always has many things to talk about, and this time he told the boys about his ideas on the open booking system and the workings of the V-L-S-E office besides expatiating on the bright future for the film industry generally in this territory.

Mr. North says six out of eight large theaters in Spokane are using the open booking system, and in Seattle all the big houses use it for part of their service. Hardly a week passes, says Mr. North, but that two big houses in Seattle are using Big Four pictures simultaneously. Mr. North has his entire office staff view the new releases and comment on them. The local price of the pictures is determined from the comments, taking into consideration the local conditions. An example of the workings of the plan cited by Mr. North is a recent Edna May release. This actress is very little known on the Pacific Coast, and were the price fixed by the eastern office it would undoubtedly be more than western exhibitors could afford to pay.

Every Monday night the Big Four staff meets to discuss ways and means and the salesmen send in their letters giving their ideas. Mr. North is strong for co-operation and every man is his own boss in the department in which he works.

Mr. North says he has signed the new Jensen & Von Herberg house, in Butte, for the opening show, and for three months' service. This house expects to open on Thanksgiving.

Mr. and Mrs. North motored down from Seattle, making the trip in ten hours.

INTERESTING SPOKANE NOTES.

By S. Clark Patchin, 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, Wash.—Leading attractions at the Liberty theater during the last week included pictures of the work of forest rangers throughout the west and the Keystone comedy, "The Surf Girls." Seating and standing capacity was taxed at times. With these a special Triangle feature, "Honor Thy Name," presenting Frank Keenan, also Charles Chaplin in "One A. M." were shown.

The Chaplin feature was the first of the Mutual Chaplins to be shown in the Liberty. Manager Ruffner also arranged to show Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law," having booked it in Seattle, where he went to witness trial runs of the above pictures. The last was booked from M. Rosenberg, northwestern representative of the De Luxe Feature Film.

Are Suburban Theaters Losing Ground?

Some of Portland, Oregon, Film Men Hold Outskirt Houses Are Passing—What Unity Theater's Manager, L. Michel, Believes.

Portland, Ore. — Several prominent film men here, including S. Morton Cohen, have indicated that the suburban theater has seen its day. They say that with the progress of the moving picture art, the progress of theater construction, management and operation has advanced to a point where super-excellent equipment is necessary to maintain the ever rising standard and that as the advance of the art continues the cost of meeting the competition with downtown houses becomes prohibitive to the suburban theaters. Each center of population in Portland has its motion picture theater, but in many cases where there were two or three theaters there is now only one.

L. Michel, manager of the Unity theater in the southeastern part of the city, believes that if the suburban theater manager progresses as the motion picture art progresses the suburban theater will remain a community institution just as the grocery store. Mr. Michel opened the Unity a few months ago and to-day has a patronage that crowds his house nearly every night. Twenty-two separate managements had been in the theater prior to the time Mr. Michel took it over. He puts on the newest pictures, uses an occasional act of local talent vaudeville and above all is a community booster.

"Yellow Menace" Shown.

Portland, Ore.—"The Yellow Menace" had its premiere showing here August 24 when three chapters were screened for the inspection of the exhibitors and censors at the Heilig theater. There was a good crowd present and the picture was well put over.

Manager F. M. Simonton, of the Standard Feature Film Company, which is handling the serial, has started an extensive publicity campaign on it.

"Kirk" a Camper, Too.

Portland, Ore.—We left the name of A. S. Kirkpatrick off the roster of the gay film fraternity encamped on the shores of Sucker Lake at Oswego. We did it unwittingly; we did not know he was there. We have recent information, however, that "Kirk" is the baritone of the Oswego quartette, composed of Messrs Myrick, Simonton, Fleishman and Kirkpatrick.

Heilig Closes to Pictures.

Portland, Ore.—The Heilig theater has been selected to house Orpheum vaudeville for the coming season and will close to pictures October 1. Just where the Orpheum would locate was a matter of conjecture on Film Row for some time. Orpheum attractions will show four days a week and road shows the balance. The Heilig showed pictures only during the summer.

With the above announcement it was also stated that the Alhambra would close to pictures in favor of Orpheum shows. The Alhambra was heretofore a picture house, managed by Jensen & Von Herberg.

Heard on Film Row.

Portland, Ore.—The American theater, over in Albina, opened recently, took in 60 cents and closed for the summer.

Portland, Ore.—L. A. Todd, manager of the local G. F. exchange, has gone to San Francisco to attend the conference of the G. F. coast managers.

Centralia, Wash.—The Rose theater has closed. H. Downey recently opened this house with splendid equipment.

Portland, Ore.—Norman K. Whisler, of the Los Angeles Hippodrome, passed through Portland recently on an automobile tour. He left for Eastern Oregon, Idaho and Nevada by way of the Columbia Highway.

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Aubrey Kennedy on Vacation.

Winnipeg, Man.—Aubrey M. Kennedy, the man who was the first manager of Universal City, and who has held many other important positions in the film world, is now in Winnipeg, his home town, enjoying a vacation. Mr. Kennedy has just finished the production of the Unity Film Corporation's serial, "The Yellow Menace," which is being handled in Canada by the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd.

Sam Whitehead Coming.

Vancouver, B. C.—Advices just received from Sam W. Whitehead, handling the second Canadian transcontinental tour of "The Spoilers," state that he will arrive in Vancouver the latter part of September, with a new copy of the big picture. The business done by "The Spoilers" in Vancouver will probably stand as a record for a long time to come, and the new era of leniency in the censor's department dates from the time when after his rejection of this film, the matter was carried to the attorney-general of the province, and the censor's decision was reversed. George L. Broy, Mr. Whitehead's partner, is now in California.

J. J. MacDonald at the Globe.

Vancouver, B. C.—J. J. Macdonald, booker for the National Amusement Company's houses, is now at the Globe theater, the firm's leading local house, having been placed in charge at the front of the house.

Notes of Special Interest.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Gaiety theater has fallen in line with the prevailing tendency toward longer runs, and will hereafter put on but two shows each week, showing a Fox feature for the first three days, and a Metro production the last half of the week.

Prince Rupert, B. C.—Mr. Stilwell, formerly a musician at both the Westholm Opera House, and the Majestic theater, is now manager of the Majestic, which has been dark for the past two months, and has opened up with Paramount service. Good business is reported.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Famous Players' new publicity medium is still without a name. So many good suggestions were sent in that it was found impossible to make a choice, so the latest number contains a coupon on which a vote for any one of the names suggested may be cast. The prize of $25.00 will be awarded to the one who suggested the name which receives the most votes.

Should Favor Liberal Candidate

British Columbia's Coming Election Gives Liberal Minded Citizens a Chance to Stamp on Autocratic and Irresponsible Censorship—The Liberal Leader, Mr. Brewster, Favors Fairer Handling of Film.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—On September 14 the general elections will be held in British Columbia. Seldom has a change in government meant more in real dollars and cents to those engaged in any industry as this one does to the exhibitors of moving pictures, as well as to all others in the trade. If the Bowser government is defeated at this election a new censor will be appointed, and to most of those who have had any dealings with the present incumbent, this will come as a decided relief.

The Liberal leader has gone on record as being in favor of treating the moving picture business as legitimate industry, and not as a political plaything with which to curry favor with certain factions, as was instanced more than once in the suppression of such pictures as a George Ade fable in slang, because it "ridiculed the temperance movement."

Mr. Brewster has stated that he is in favor of the establishment of an appeal board to review rejected films. So also is the Bowser government, but Mr. Bowser states that "of course" the censor would be the chairman of the appeal board. He would have the deciding vote in passing on his own decisions!

In 1915 untold thousands of cuts were made by the British Columbia censor in films submitted to him, and in addition to this, eight hundred full reels were rejected. And Mr. Bowser stated in the House, "I may say that I agree with the censor, and encourage him in his stand for a higher moral standard."

While comparatively few rejections are being made at present, it is pointed out that the old censorship regulations are still in effect, but are simply not being enforced; and it is the general opinion that the old conditions of a few months ago will be brought back if the Bowser government is again elected. During the recent discussion in the Legislature relative to the amendment to the Moving Pictures Act the Liberals attempted to bring about changes in the censorship matter, but the Conservatives, led by Premier Bowser, successfully blocked the attempt.

Plague Touches Vancouver.

Vancouver, B. C.—On account of the discovery of a single case of infantile paralysis in this city, there is a possibility that an order will be issued prohibiting the attendance of children at local theatres. Mayor McBeath held a consultation with the Vancouver exhibitors on a recent morning, and the matter was gone into thoroughly.

The mayor stated that the authorities did not wish to work any unnecessary hardship on the exhibitors, but that in view of the serious consequences which might result, extreme care was necessary, and theatres should at this time be particularly well ventilated. It was finally decided that, pending developments, the order barring children would not be issued at present.

It is probable that the fall opening of the schools will be postponed for two weeks on account of fear of a spread of the disease.

Herbert Lubin Calls on Us.

Vancouver, B. C.—Herbert Lubin, representing the Standard Film Service, Limited, controlling the distribution of the Metro program in Canada, has arrived in Vancouver, and has already made many friends among local exhibitors. The WORLD man recently had a chat with him regarding Metro's plans and prospects in British Columbia, having been forwarded a letter of introduction by Sam W. Whitehead, owner with George L. Broy of the Canadian rights for "The Spoilers." (Hello, Sam. Many thanks for them kind words.)

Mr. Lubin brought copies of several of the Metro productions with him, and trade showings have been given at the Dominion and Colonial theaters. At this writing it is thought that the program will have been definitely booked at a Granville street theater within the next day or two, and Mr. Lubin will then inaugurate a very extensive publicity campaign with the object of getting the local house off to a good start.

Mr. Lubin is now looking about for suitable exchange quarters, and states that Metro has come to Western Canada to stay.

Welcome to our city.

Will Spend Much on Improvements.

Vancouver, B. C.—A great deal of money is about to be spent by the National Amusement Company in renovating several of the houses controlled by the corporation, and the work planned will be undertaken immediately. W. P. Nichols, managing director, recently outlined to the World correspondent the improvements which are contemplated.

The Globe theater in this city will be greatly changed and improved. A glass marquise will be built over the sidewalk, and the interior of the house will be very materially altered. The present two aisles will be replaced by three, the two side ones being thrown over nearer to the walls. The boxes at the rear of the auditorium will be lowered to a height of about eighteen inches above the floor, and new loges will be installed around the front of the balcony. The seating capacity of the balcony will be increased by extending this part of the auditorium through to the front of the building, and doing away with the rooms which at present occupy this space. During these alterations business will be carried on as usual.

In Victoria, the company's Columbia theater is being renovated, and new seats installed, while at Nanaimo, the fine opera chairs now in the Opera House will be transferred to the Bijou theater, the Bijou seats going to the Opera House. The music at the Bijou will hereafter be furnished by an orchestra exclusively, the pipe organ being taken out and transferred to the Broadway theater in Vancouver. This beautiful new house will be opened about September 15.

"The Strange Case of Mary Page" will start immediately at the Columbia theater in Vancouver, alternating each half-week with "Peg o' the Ring." It is stated that E. H. Benson, manager of this house, will leave in the near future.

Note: James Pilling, manager of the Orpheum theater, who assisted the World man in securing this batch of news from Mr. Nichols, insisted on having his name mentioned in connection with the items. Mr. Pilling is the well-known raconteur of serious men who achieved fame in the fall of '63 by driving a swarm of bees from Omaha to Baker City, Oregon, without the loss of a single bee.

North Vancouver, B. C.—The moving picture as an incentive to crime is in trouble again. Following the robbery of the vault in the City Hall recently, it was discovered that a hole had been bored in a wall opposite the door of the vault, and it was decided that the thief learned the combination of the safe by secretly watching some authorized person open it.

The police remembered that in a serial picture recently shown at the Empire theater just such a method of learning a safe combination was used by one of the characters, and they promptly pointed their accusing fingers at the long-suffering pictures.

As old Imro Fox used to say, "Mahvelous! Everyt'ing I do is mahvelous."

Toronto's Regent Theater Opens

City's Newest Theater Is Its Finest—On August 25 Many Invited Guests Admire the Beauty and Splendid Appointments of the New Regent—Leon Brick Is Manager and E. L. Ruddy Is President of the Company.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E., Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—Toronto's finest of the fine, the new Regent theater, Adelaide street near Yonge, was formally opened on Friday night, August 25, when an invited audience completely filled the house. The guests were pleased. Famous Players and Pathe furnished the films for the first show and the selected feature was Marguerite Clark's "Little Lady Eileen," a fanciful romance. A comedy number was "Sis Hopkins' Double Elopement," the first Sis Hopkins' release to be screened in Toronto, while a news reel, the British Topical, was also included in the opening show. The fourth subject was a Pathe scenic release, The Matsushima Islands, projected in natural colors.

An unfortunate part of the opening was that the house was not quite finished. The $11,000 Cassavant organ was not ready for use while several features of the handsome structure required finishing touches. There was sufficient in evidence, however, to arouse the unqualified admiration of the gathering. It was something entirely new for a Toronto audience to find itself able to roam through promenades, reading, reception and rest rooms—all richly furnished and well aired.

The admitted cost of the new photoplay house is half a million dollars. The old theater on the site of the Regent is said to have cost half of this sum and it was merely torn out to make room for the beautiful new building, the seating capacity of which is 1,500, with 960 on the ground floor.

One of the different features of the Regent consists of the lighting system which permits of changing tints to conform with the screen subject. The aisles and stairs of the house are covered with a rich red carpet, while the general decorations are of the so-called Adam's period, gold and blue in color.

The symphony orchestra consists of fourteen pieces and is placed on the stage itself, the screen being forty feet from the first row of seats. Frederick Edgerton of the Woodstock Conservatory of Music has been engaged as organist.

E. L. Ruddy, president of the Regent Theatre Company, and Manager Leon Brick have arranged with the Famous Players, the Metro and Pathe for film service and there will be changes in the programme three times each week.

Thomas W. Lamb, the New York theater architect, designed the Toronto Regent.

Exchangemen Ask Express Companies to Aid

Cash-Basis Plan Needs Quicker Accounting on C. O. D. Collections and Adjustments on Lost Shipments.

TORONTO, ONT.—In connection with the decision of the managers of Toronto exchanges to maintain a cash-in-advance business policy starting September 4, it has been found necessary to enlist the cooperation of the three express companies having offices in Toronto. According to information given to your correspondent, the express companies have been taking as long as two months' time before credit has been given to a consignor of films for a C. O. D. shipment. There will be many C. O. D. packages when the new business basis is established, it is believed, and the Toronto exchange managers have decided to draw the attention of the express companies to the delay in which collections are turned over. This tardiness will be the only troublesome feature of the new trade arrangement unless the express companies will adopt a better plan.

The suggestion of J. Travis, manager of the Specialty Film Import Company, which distributes Pathe releases, is that the express companies make combined payments weekly of all collections on parcels of film. This arrangement would save bookkeeping work, it is thought.

The attention of the express companies is also being drawn to the fact that adjustments on lost or mis-sent shipments of film are frequently not made for six to nine months after a mistake or loss has occurred. A speeding-up of the adjustment department is asked for.

The three companies which are said to be at fault are the Dominion, Canadian and Canadian Northern express companies.

Toronto film exchanges have taken steps for the closing out of all old accounts with "clients" so that each exhibitor using a service from one of the exchanges will be starting with a clean financial sheet in September. The Canadian Universal has notified its exhibitors by letter that all film bills must be paid up completely by September 2nd and that all orders for films for the week starting September 4th must be accompanied by check, otherwise the reels will be shipped C. O. D.

Changes in Blue Bird Offices.

Toronto, Ont.—Changes having an important bearing on activities in the Canadian nests of the Blue Bird have just been made, according to announcement.

Harry Price, formerly of the Famous Players Film Service, has been appointed special representative for both the Blue Bird and Universal services in the Canadian West.

R. J. McKinney, formerly a road man for the Universal with routes running out from Toronto, has been appointed Toronto manager of the Blue Bird in succession to W. A. Campbell, who has gone to Cleveland. Mr. McKinney will look after Blue Bird distribution throughout Ontario.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

G. E. Bernard at Auditorium's Helm.

London, Ont.—The Auditorium, which has been operated as a moving picture theater under the direction of the London Y. M. C. A., was reopened for the fall and winter season under the personal management of G. E. Bernard. A previous announcement contained the information that the theater would be reopened with F. Brick, son of Manager Leon Brick of the new Toronto Regent, as managing director.

Star the Only Burned Theater.

Toronto, Ont.—The fire holocaust in northern Ontario which resulted in the loss of more than 200 lives, wiped out only one moving picture theater, according to the official analysis of the destruction of properties. This was the Star theater at Cochrane, Ontario, operated by W. H. Warke, which was totally destroyed along with the entire village. The future plans of Mr. Warke have not yet been announced.

Montreal News Letter

The Imperial's Fall Program Popular.

MONTREAL, QUE.—The Imperial, Montreal's pride, is again playing to capacity houses. With the welcome drop in the temperature last Saturday and Sunday, which has broken the continued hot spell, the public responded readily to the high-class program which is being offered at this theater under the management of H. W. Conover.

Mr. Conover is the dean of exhibitors in Canada, having represented the Keith and Albee interests for a great many years, and his initiative ability, reinforced by his wide experience, has enabled him to carry his theater sueeessfully through the hot months.

The fall program of the Imperial consists of one Famous selected from the two weekly releases, one Metro and one V-L-S-E. In addition to these excellent drawing cards, Mr. Conover has seeured the Fadettes of Boston to furnish his music, and the support of this twenty-piece orchestra will add greatly to the Imperial's attractions. Mr. Conover stated that his record house was attained at the showing of Madam Petrova in "The Eternal Question."

Crowds Fill the St. Denis.

Montreal, Que.—The beautiful St. Denis theater, under the highly effieient management of E. L. Perry, is now enjoying one of the most prosperous periods of its eareer. Mr. Perry is a Keith man and received his degree in the liberal art of advertising while connected with the Mastbaum interests of Philadelphia, and let it be said to his credit that Mr. Perry has introduced in behalf of his new theater some of the most modern and unique advertising schemes ever placed before the Montreal public and under his scientific "treatment" the St. Denis is playing to standing-room-only houses.

Manager Teel a Visitor.

Sherbrooke, Que.—Manager E. H. Teel of His Majesty's theater, Sherbrooke, Que., was a visitor in Montreal this week for the purpose of completing plans for his fall program. His Majesty's will feature Metros, Worlds and the V-L-S-E releases.

Theaters Respond in Sailors Behalf.

Montreal, Que.—The liberality and patriotism of the managers of the leading theaters in Montreal has been clearly demonstrated by their free-handed cooperation with the committee in charge of the Sailors' Relief Fund, which is engaged in raising money to assist the sailors and their families who are in need as a result of the European War. Practically every leading theater responded heartily to the eall and on September 5th, 25 per cent of the gross receipts accruing to these houses will go into the treasury of this fund. The eommittee, in turn, with the co-operation of the local public press, has given much pubilicty to the houses which share their receipts on that date.

Many Autos Help Film Business.

Montreal, Que. — Montreal exchange managers are rapidly coming to the point of securing automobiles to be used in calling on the trade and in the delivery of rush order films. This is practieally a new departure in this city. A. H. Sawyer, president and general manager of the Standard, is the latest recruit in the ranks of auto owners, but with the progress that is being made here in the film business there is no doubt but that every one of the dozen exchanges in operation will use automobile service of their own at an early date.

Stories of the Films

VITAGRAPH.

THE FAIR FARE (Aug. 28).—Written and produced by Fred Hiller.

Mrs. Henry Moon, whose husband is a chauffeur specializing in sight-seeing tours, yearns to see the scenery around Seattle and other points in Washington, but hubby tells her that he cannot afford the trip. She covers her face with a heavy veil and, meeting him at his auto, asks to be taken on an all-day trip. The $20 expenses, she says, is a mere trifle. They start off and before the trip is finished, all the wonders of that section of Washington have been revealed to her admiring eyes (and those of the audience). Among the things she sees are the Snoqualmie Falls with its wonderful mist enshrouding its base; Mount Rainier in all its majestic glory, ice topped and towering over all surrounding country and Mirror Lake; at the foot of Rainer, as still and clear as a mirror, reflecting the beauty of the great mountain. After the trip they return to their starting place, where hubby requests his fare, but receives a shock when wifey removes her veil and tells him to go fish for it.

IT'S A BEAR (Sept. 4).—The cast: Daisy (Mary Anderson); Tommy (Archie Warren); The Janitor (George Knakel); The Butcher Boy (Ralph MacComas). Written by Mark Swan. Directed by Dave Smith.

Tommy brings a puppy home to his wife. Their steam doesn't warm up, so they call up the husky, hasty-tempered janitor. Tommy's tirade angers the janitor, and when he spies the pup he informs them flatly that dogs are not allowed. A cigar soothes him, but he turns nasty again, and all the smokes Tommy has are exhausted. Then the janitor reiterates his demand. Later, after tanking up a bit, the Janitor returns for more trouble, and takes the dog away, finally returning, by dumbwaiter route, several sausages—the remains. Tommy goes off, and enters into a raffle for a beautiful bear skin (rug optional).

Meanwhile Olga, a trance medium, has called on Tommy's wife, Daisy. The medium hears the sad news and says she will go into a trance and seek the pup. When she comes to she says she will take Daisy out and locate the dog. Tommy wins the rug, or skin, and starts for home to show Daisy. Daisy and the medium go out, but the latter has a poor clue, for the dog isn't found. Olga says she'll try to materialize him. Tommy, home, finds them gone, and so decides to take a bath. While he is taking a bath the janitor, outside his bathroom window cleaning it, looks in, sees him and his clothes on a chair near the window. The janitor takes the clothes. Before Tommy can get out to seek more, Olga and Daisy return. The medium goes into a trance. She feels that spirits are near, while Tommy, terrified, reaches out from the bathroom to get the only refuge he has—the bear skin. Daisy sees the package disappear and faints. Tommy comes out in the skin; Olga comes to and phones the janitor, who, having tanked up to celebrate his victory, comes in. He flees to the dumbwaiter, is pulled up by Tommy, the bottom drops from the car, Tommy catches the janitor and as Daisy has grasped the deception she makes the janitor promise better ways. Then, to disclose the deception the janitor yanks Tommy's bear skin. He is near portieres and grabs them.

A VILLAINOUS VILLAIN (Sept. 8).—The cast: Sherlock Oomph (Hughey Mack); Ida Dukkets (Patsy DeForest); The Villain (Harry Hammill); Old Man Dukkets (William Shea); Gentleman Joe (Ed Dunn). Authors, Lawrence Semon and Graham Baker. Produced by Lawrence Semon.

The master crook steals the sweetheart of Sherlock, a great detective. Sherlock undertakes to recover her. The crooks make futile attempts on his life and then to lure him to their den, they drag the girl at the end of a rope tied to an automobile. Sherlock chases it, catches the girl, and while she is trying to untie the rope, he holds the auto by strength. The auto and he pull and the rope parts in the middle. Sherlock falls over while the auto plunges over the end of a pier. It sinks to the bottom where the crooks strip the tires off, and, using them as life preservers, come to the top, just as the master crook pushes the girl into the water. Sherlock blows his police whistle and the motorboat cops start up. Sherlock, in casting off the rope that ties the boat to the dock, gets tangled in it and is dragged through the water after the boat. The crooks and the girl flee in a rowboat. The motorboat cuts through the frail craft, throwing the crooks and the girl into the water. As Sherlock flies by at the end of his rope, he grabs the girl and they climb into the motorboat and are saved. They leave the crooks struggling in the water.

BIOGRAPH.

MAN'S ENEMY (Reissue—Three Parts—Sept. 6).—Cast: Grace Lisle (Lillian Gish); Sarah Banks (Vivian Prescott); Tom Warriner (known as Tom Drake) (Franklin Ritchie); Fred Lisle (William Jeherson); Harry Stanton (David Swait); Count Ivan Lanski (Hector V. Sarno).

Warwickshire, England. Warriner and his neighbor, Sir Arthur Stanton, become bitter enemies. Warriner goes on a hunting trip and in climbing over the fence dividing the two homes his gun accidentally goes off and he is killed. Despite the fact that the shooting was proved accidental, Tom Warriner believes his father was murdered by Sir Arthur and swears to avenge his death.

Years later, in London, on the occasion of Harry Stanton's twenty-first birthday, Sir Arthur warns Harry that drink was the besetting sin of the Stantons, and Harry promises to be guided by his advice. Grace Lisle is Sir Arthur's ward and prospective daughter-in-law, and her brother, Fred, is Harry's pal.

Tom Warriner, now known as Tom Drake, is proprietor of a London gambling house. He is assisted in his work by Sarah Banks, an adventuress, who poses as his sister. Fred becomes infatuated with Sarah and when she pleads with him for a loan of money he gives her lodge funds intrusted to his care.

Harry locates Fred's haunt, and becomes deeply infatuated with Sarah. As time goes on Harry takes Sarah as his wife. He is now a heavy drinker, and his degredation has been helped by Tom. Fred informs Sir Arthur of his loan to Sarah who refuses to give the money back to him. While Fred and Sir Arthur are questioning Sarah why she refuses to give up the money, Harry comes in in an intoxicated condition. Sir Arthur learns that Sarah is his son's wife and the shock is so great that he has to be assisted home by Fred.

Years later Fred Lisle, now a clergyman, and Grace persuades Sir Arthur, who has steadily fallen in his health as the result of his son's act, to go to the Riviera for a rest. On the Riviera, Harry, Count Lanski, Tom and Ikey (a bookmaker) spend their time gambling until Harry loses all his money, the Count being the winner. Sarah, anxious for more money, starts a flirtation with the Count. She upbraids Harry for not having any money for her and he is about to seek solace in drink when he meets Grace for the first time since he left home. She begs him to stop drinking. The Count and Tom see her consoling Harry. He promises Grace not to drink.

Worried over the money he owes the Count, Tom resorts to trickery in wiping out his indebtedness. He informs Harry that Sarah is going to elope with the Count. Words follow between Harry and the Count with the result a duel is fought between them. Harry loads only one pistol, and arranges that the Count should pick the empty one. The Count is killed and Tom reveals his identity to Harry, telling him that he will swear he (Harry) killed the Count.

Ikey, who has witnessed the shooting, forces Tom to inform the crowd that the Count committed suicide.

In London Sir Arthur learns that Harry is in the city and a search is made for him. Polly and Adolph, formerly servants in Drake's gambling house, are now married and conduct a public house. Mrs. Sanders quarrels with her husband, Bill, for spending money for liquor instead of caring for the children. Bill is stopped in his abuse of his wife by Grace and Lisle. In the crowd that has gathered are Sarah and Tom. Lisle questions them as to Harry's whereabouts but they plead ignorance. Harry is working as a night watchman in an effort to rehabilitate himself. Tom and Sarah bribe Sanders to get Harry to drink. They succeed in getting him to drink again. Ikey discovers where Harry is working and notifies Grace.

Harry is discharged for intoxication and Sanders takes his place. Sarah learns that Grace is coming to take Harry home. She bargains with Sanders to spoil Grace's beauty by throwing vitriol in her face. Grace finds Sanders (who has fallen asleep) in Harry's place and is about to awaken him when she is prevented by Sanders' child, who volunteers to lead Grace to the overseer for Harry's new address. Sarah is furious that her fiendish plot has failed and shakes Sanders, who wakes up bewildered and throws the vitriol in her face by mistake.

Ikey takes Harry to Polly and Adolph's lodging house. Tom, disguised, follows Harry. The police arrest Sanders. Harry, crazed with drink, starts raving. He attacks Tom and after a violent fight throws him out of a window. Some time elapses and we find Mrs. Sanders taking care of Harry at his father's home. Sir Arthur forgives Harry. Harry asks Grace to marry him when he is divorced, but Grace and her brother point out to him that it is his duty to save his wife from further sin. Lisle has found Sarah, whose face is horribly disfigured, and Tom, who is recovering from a broken arm, living in a miserable garret.

Ikey, meanwhile, has struck it rich and when approached by Tom for a loan he gives him money to take him to America. Tom decides to desert Sarah. Sarah discovers his motive and pleads with him not to leave her. She grabs the money and they have a fearful fight and Tom kills her. He is arrested and later dies in prison. Harry and Grace are married.

FOR THE SON OF THE HOUSE (Reissue—Sept. 11).—The cast: The maid (Mae Marsh); the son (Charles H. West); the minister (Charles H. Mailes).

In this story we are shown the sins of society against the girl who struggles for her existence. More sinned against than sinning, she at length reaches an easier way, only to make a sacrifice of self in her secret love and gratitude for her benefactor. At the beginning of the picture she is working in a sweatshop where hundreds of other girls are employed. She attracts the attention of the owner, but upon her refusal to accept the easy path which he offers, he discharges her.

At the end of her resources, she seeks employment. The want ads yield nothing. Two white slavers are about to lure her away with their false promises when a minister happens along. He rescues the girl from her predicament, and, believing the girl's story, realizes that she is a victim of circumstances and resolves to help her. A few days later she visits his mission in the settlement as she promised, and there meets a lady of means who is interested in philanthropic work. This woman agrees to take the girl home and give her a chance as a maid and companion. The woman herself, however, is not without her own troubles. She has indulged her son to the breaking point so that now he is little else than a weakling and a gambler. The girl, however, is pleased with his kindly interest in her.

Later, the son loses all the money he borrowed from his mother. He had none to pay his gambling debts. To him there is only one way open. That night he returns. The girl hears him, and coming down into the hallway she finds him opening his mother's safe. He takes out her necklace and puts it in his pocket. He stumbles against a chair, the girl dodges behind a curtain, which fell between the door leading into the next room. The butler and the mother appear. The police are summoned. On their arrival they demand that a search of the house be made. The son denies all knowledge of the crime. It is then that the girl steps forward. In her secret love and gratitude for the young man she refuses to incriminate him and, going to the flower pot where he deposited the necklace, she takes it and assumes the guilt herself. It is then that the young man's manhood asserts itself. He calls back the officers and confesses his own guilt. The mother withdraws the charge and the affair is closed.

Several months later a letter arrives from the West. It is to the mother and it ends something like this: "and I find your son one of my most trusted employees." The woman kisses the little maid upon the cheek, gives her the letter and goes out of the room. The little maid is honored at the kiss. She reads the letter, but is very sad. Why?

A BLOT IN THE 'SCUTCHEON (Reissue—Two Parts—Sept. 12).—The cast: Mildred (Dorothy Bernard); Thorold, her brother (Charles H. Mailes); Henry, her lover (Edwin August); Mildred's companion (Claire McDowell); servant (William J. Butler).

Thorold, Earl Tresham, proud of his ancestral escutcheon, which he claims, shows no tarnish, welcomes the proposal of Henry, Earl Mertoun, for his sister Mildred's hand, as it will mean the uniting of two noble houses, he not knowing that Mildred and Henry, who are both young, ignorant, and unguarded, have already met, sinned and now attempt a reparation. He learns from one of his servants that an unknown visitor, who is none other than Henry himself, was seen leaving his sister's chamber, and in a fury of rage, sets out to right the wrong as he believes to be the only way.

VIM.

STRANDED (Sept. 14).—The cast: Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); Millionaire Slocum (Frank Hanson); his daughters (Ray Godfrey and Florence McLaughlin); Ray's sweetheart (Robin Williamson).

Tired of business worries and an endless round of social activities, Plump and Runt board their speed boat, the Scum, and sail for the wilds. At sea their attention attracted by a strange object, they make a close examination and then—Crash! Bang! Oblivion. Consciousness returned, their boat in splinters and themselves all but dead, the conclusion slowly forces itself on them that they landed on a target at the very moment the artillery let loose.

After a long swim they crawl ashore and fall asleep. Time passes and millionaire Slocum and friends choose the same spot for their camp. The men abduct her. Meanwhile a detachment of militia in charge of John Wallace, Barbara's admirer, is pursuing the escaped convicts. They come upon Ace Brent searching for his daughter Barbara, and then the terrible truth dawns upon them. Barbara determines on strategy, and plays on Benny's better feelings, gradually enlisting his aid. When the pursuit grows too dangerous, "Red Shirt" scratches a warning on a board: "The first one what shoots I kill the girl."

At the next stop "Red Shirt" forces his attentions on Barbara, but she succeeds in getting hold of his gun and keeping him at bay until Benny comes to her aid. "Help me to escape, Benny," she says, "and I will help you." Benny empties all the cartridges from all the guns so as to delay pursuit, mounts the only horse in camp and, as he sweeps by, pulls Barbara into the saddle behind him. They have scarcely escaped when the militia descend upon the gang. Grabbing their guns, the convicts take refuge in a farmhouse, and a pitched battle is soon on. But "Red Shirt," burning for vengeance, has sneaked off alone in pursuit of Barbara and Benny. Wallace and Brent have also taken up this search.

"Red Shirt" comes up with the pair just as Barbara is sending Benny away to secure safety for himself. A shot from Gordon's gun throws Benny from his horse and he lays apparently dead. "Red Shirt" pounces on Barbara; her revolver is knocked from her hand, and a struggle follows. A few moments later Wallace and Brent come upon Barbara.

Fearing rightly that a warning has been sent down the line, they secrete their loot in a box car, and, after noting its number, alight and seek cover until after the pursuit has cooled. Later, when they plan to resume their journey, they are seen by the telegrapher, but a struggle follows in which they overcome him. Boarding an unguarded automobile, they speed down the track towards Lone Point. The telegrapher, recovering, sends a warning ahead to Helen. The car, No. 11165, had been placed on a siding at Lono Point but is now being taken up by the freight engine. Helen, giving chase, succeeds in boarding the caboose and warning the train crew.

Meanwhile, the crooks, abandoning their auto by the roadside, have boarded car No. 11165, and are about to get away with their loot when the train crew, headed by Helen, comes upon them. There is a struggle, but Gentleman Joe escapes and runs across the tops of the cars, carrying the loot. The mail train is roaring along on the adjoining track as Helen comes upon Gentleman Joe from behind and deals him a blow that momentarily stuns him. Directed by James W. Horne.

Because of his ill health, Ace Brent consents to allow his daughter, Barbara, to handle the trouble that has cropped up at his Golconda Mine through the heavy thefts of a gang of "high graders." The advice of Wallace, her admirer, against the adventure is in vain. Arrived on the ground, Barbara decides that the only method of breaking up the work of the high graders is to go into the mine in disguise herself, as spies in the past have either been bought off or scared away. She dons overalls and effectually disguises herself, securing a job as a car boy.

Underground, she befriends Andy, a car boy who has been the unwilling tool of Miller, leader of the high graders, and from him gains the information she needs. But Miller and his gang come upon them and, as he starts to beat Barbara, her cap comes off, disclosing her wealth of hair. Miller decides on a vengeance that will forever silence the pair. They are carried to an abandoned shaft of the mine and placed in a water-flooded pit. Bound hand and foot, with the outlet pipe flooded, the water mounts rapidly, and it seems but a matter of minutes before both will meet a terrible death.

Wallace, grown anxious regarding Barbara, arrives in Goleonda just as the superintendent has set a search on foot. At first it is in vain, but the clue of the choked up outlet pipe on the surface sends them scurrying below to the abandoned shaft in time to save Barbara and Andy. Miller and his gang are brought to trial after Wallace has forced the cowardly sheriff and justice to action. On the day of the trial, after the jury has gone out, Wallace is arrested on a trumped-up charge by the sheriff and lodged in the little jail. The cry of "lynching" is in the air as a means of intimidating the jury. Barbara mounts her horse and speeds over to the next town where a detachment of militia is in camp. Before she returns, however, the jail has been stormed, and Wallace and his lone defender, Ace Breut, are in the hands of the mob. Their fate seems sealed when the militia burst in on the town and a rapid-fire battle ensues. The victory of the militia stiffens the backbone of the jury and Miller and his gang get their deserts.

The whale is shot with a harpoon gun, and then the final blow, an explosive shell, is fired. The whale is then dragged on shore and stripped of its blubber. This is very interesting, as the men get into the carcass with bare feet and shovel out the oil. After the fat has been rendered the residue is baked and dried for fertilizer.

One day when Mother is shopping the baby gets unruly and the nurse gives it some beans to play with. When Mother gets home she at once telephones her hubby that the baby has two teeth—toofs, she calls them. Father at once tells the whole office and then sets out to see the toofs for himself. Just about this time a little doggie takes a notion to wander in the neighborhood, and Alice thinks that it would be of more service as a dead dog than as a live one. So she takes a gun and fires at the mut. But just at this time her hubby happens to come in and falls down when he hears the shot. Alice thinks that she has killed her man, and is horrified to find a few minutes later that the body has disappeared.

The police arrive and accuse her of the crime. They find an old shoe in the stove, and this leads them to believe that Alice has killed the man and then burned up the body. In jail Alice bemoans her fate. But the situation is made much brighter when the friendly neighbor comes and offers to help her to escape. He changes places with her and she escapes in the uniform of a policeman.

But a copper on the corner sees her and thinks that she does not swing her club at the professional angle, and so gives chase. Over roofs and barns they go until at last Alice is cornered on a flag pole. But the pole breaks and the two of them are thrown down and land in the execution room just as they are on the point of hanging the friend because the real culprit is not handy. Of course, when Alice arrives they take her instead, but this breaks the heart of the neighbor, who really loves Alice. But at this moment Fat, who is still pickled, forcibly breaks into the death house and the proceedings have to be stopped as the murdered man has come to life. Then follows a general rough-house, which ends as Alice takes her husband and drives him out into the street.

RED FEATHER.

THE WHIRLPOOL OF DESTINY (Five Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: William Martin (Bertram Grassby); Polly, his daughter (Flora Parker De Haven); Mother Giles (Nanine Wright); Thomas Bell (Charles Malles); George, his son (Jack Mulhall); Tom Scott (Jack Lott); Davidson (Ed Hearn); "Babe" Morris (Marjorie Bilin). Scenario by F. McGrew Willis. Produced by Otis Turner.

In Paradise Valley, Cal., Thomas Bell lives with his son, George. The boy is wild and the climax is reached when one day he sells his father's favorite horse to go on a spree. George is told to get out of the house forever. In St. Louis live Polly and her father, William Martin, an habitual drunkard. Martin has not always been a structural iron worker, but was once a prosperous business man, only to have his life ruined by the drink habit.

He is discharged for intoxication. In a saloon row he is hurt and when Polly leaves her work in a store to come to him, she loses her job. This so enrages the old man that he tries to thrash the girl. Polly, terrified, pushes a chair in front of him and he falls unconscious to the floor. Polly thinks that she has killed him and tells the matron of the Salvation Army that she has murdered her father. Upon investigation it is found that the man is alive. He is somewhat sobered and gets his job back, but the liquor has left his nerves shattered and he falls to his death from a high building. Polly then enlists in the Army.

George happens to come to the same city. He rescues Polly from a drunken loafer, and an interest between the two is thus engendered. In Paradise Valley there is a drought and old Bell is hit hard, as he has a great many cattle and no feed. George goes into the hay business, and sells his product to his father at an enormous profit. Then he asks Polly to marry him, but she refuses, although she loves him. She has found out that he drinks and says that she will not marry him until he can cure himself of the habit. When a call for nurses comes from Paradise Valley she answers it.

When Polly arrives out West there is a commotion at the station, for Bell has fallen from his horse and has broken his leg. A nurse is needed and Polly takes the position. As the sick man recovers he grows fond of Polly and finally gets her to stay permanently. In the city George has repented of his ways and asks the matron of the Army to tell him where Polly has gone. George has to take the pledge before she tells him, and then he leaves for his father's ranch.

At Bell's ranch the foreman has fallen in love with Polly and tries on several occasions to make advances to her. Bell notices this and discharges the man; but the ex-foreman again advances to Polly when the old man leaves for town. But just at this moment George arrives and is astounded when he finds that it is the Polly he has saved. Then old Bell comes home and when he learns of the love between the young people he gives his consent to the match and greatly enjoys the joke when he finds that it was George who sold him the hay at high prices. They all settle down to a life of peace.

THE ANGEL OF THE ATTIC (Two Parts—Sept. 15).—The cast: Betty Kane (Violet Mersereau); Gerald Gray (Harry Benham). Written by Catherine Carr. Directed by Francis J. Grandon.

Gerald Gray is a well known artist who is tired of his fashionable existence and longs for real life. He takes a studio in a poor section of the city and poses as a struggling young artist. It so happens that he rents the room next to that occupied by a young girl who is all alone in the world and who is forced to make paper flowers for a bare existence. In the course of time Gerald meets Betty and is struck by her beauty.

About a week later Gerald, while descending the rickety old staircase, falls and seriously hurts his ankle. He is forced to stay in bed for a few weeks and all this time Betty nurses him. When he has recovered he paints her picture for the salon. At last the portrait is finished and Gerald, to celebrate, invites the girl to a spree at a Bohemian restaurant. She agrees, although she is rather doubtful as to whether or not she will look well enough in her poor clothes. That night she dresses herself in some old family heirlooms and goes out to meet Gerald. She looks the picture of the modern fashion in her old costume of the seventies, with a hoop skirt, and she quite wins Gerald's love.

At the restaurant Gerald is seen by some of his wealthy friends who have come to the place to get a taste of Bohemian life. The girls in the party are crazy to meet him, so he is called over to their table. While he is gone some drunken men try to flirt with Betty and are repulsed by Gerald. A fight ensues, but Gerald is not hurt. When they get home that night Gerald realizes that he loves Betty, and asks her to be his wife. But she refuses, as she thinks that she will be a drag on him and a drawback to his artistic success. So he goes away and leaves a note under the door, saying that he is really the famous Gerald Gray and that he will wait for her to come to him.

But the next day he finds that life without the girl is impossible. He goes to her and she at last realizes that he loves her well enough to sacrifice his social position to marry her, so she cannot very well refuse him, especially as she loves him. As the picture fades out the two are seen in a fond embrace.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

HIRED AND FIRED ("Timothy Dobbs, That's Me"—Episode No. 5, "Hired and Fired"—Two Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: Timothy Dobbs (Carter De Haven); Jeff (Robert Milash); Mary (Vola Smith); leading lady (Mina Cunard). Written by Bess Meredyth. Produced by Walter Beery.

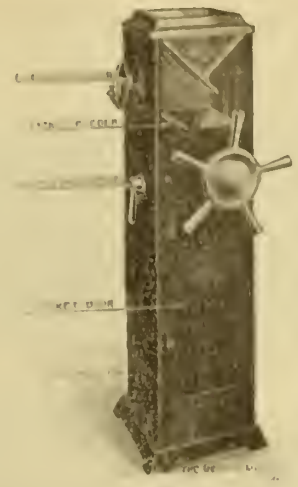
As Timothy is standing in front of a theater, dead broke, a couple of swell girls come along and go in. He has not the price to enter himself, but he waits until they come out and then speaks to them. The girls are happy when they learn that he is a real movie actor. He says that he would take them to lunch were it not for the fact that his car is broken, and is almost taken off his feet when the girls say that they will take him any place he wants to go.

So after stalling a few times he at last has to go to a swell cafe and order a dinner with wine. During the meal he makes the mistake of calling one of the most prominent of the directors a doctor, but manages to get out of the scrape. But the shock comes when the bill arrives. Timothy has nothing in his pocket but a collar button, and it is quite a task to pay a twelve-dollar check with a collar button. But our hero is not at all daunted. An idea comes to him and he throws a fit to get out of paying the bill.

The next day he manages to get in the studio, and whom should he meet but his friends of the preceding day. And it so happens that they just need a man of Timothy's size to take a part, and Timothy gets a job. As a cowboy he nearly drives the directors to drink. But having started the picture with him they cannot change, and so it happens that Timothy at last sees his name in big type in front of a theater. He loses no time in calling up his friends, and they are delighted to go to see the picture with one of the actors who produced it.

Outside the theater he bribes the usher to come in and call out that Mr. Dobbs is wanted on the 'phone. This he does and the audience applauds when the actor rises. But the picture is the limit, and soon all the people come out before it is over. Timothy is now as chagrined as he was elated before, and sees the man take down the poster with his name on it. And to cap the climax the waiter whom he cheated out of the bill sees him and comes to arrest him with a policeman. But the intrepid Jeff once more rushes off with our hero, and so saves him from the ignominy of an arrest.

LIBERTY (Episode No. 5—"Love and War"—Two Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: Liberty (Marie Walcamp); Manuel (Bertram Grassby); Lopez (G. Raymond Nye); Theresa (Maude Emory); Major (Neal Hart); Rutledge (Jack Holt); Jose (L. M. Wells). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.



Liberty finally makes Manuel understand that she will be his wife in name only, and as he leaves her, Theresa begs him to treat her fairly, but he repulses the Mexican girl. Lopez, having failed once to secure Liberty's money, determines to make another attempt. Liberty orders the horses saddled, as she is convinced that the best thing is to leave for the border. At Lopez's orders, Theresa, Pedro and Liberty are taken prisoners, as is Jose.

Captain Rutledge and his men, meantime, have been attacked and are fighting valiantly, but are just about captured when Colonel Dalton and the cavalry arrive and turn the tables. Lopez has determined to gain Liberty's money and gives Manuel the alternative of either getting money and men with military training or lose his life; Manuel consents to get the money but insists that Jose be freed as well as himself. Manuel tries to see Liberty but the guard will not permit this.

Liberty and Theresa in their prison but hear the voice of Manuel outside; Liberty knocks on the door and when the guard appears puts up a fight for her liberty. While they are thus engaged Theresa makes her escape.

THE CARAVAN (Two Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: Chons (J Belasco); Hathor (Clair McDowell); Saia (Lena Baskette); Zuthor (C. G. Briden); Tum (Malcolm Blevins). Written and produced by Raymond Wells.

Zuthor is put in charge of a caravan crossing the desert. Chons is the water man, and Tum the overseer of the animals. Hathor, the wife of Chons, is a very beautiful and attractive woman, and the desire to own her takes possession of Tum. Zuthor is kept entertained by the dancing girls, who have been brought along, and Saia, Chon's daughter, is left pretty much to herself. She helps her father bring water to the slaves, and so gains their friendship.

Tum tries every possible way to awaken Hathor's interest in himself, but she remains faithful to her husband. At last she repulses him and threatens to tell her husband. Tum swears vengeance and awaits his opportunity to get even with her. One day Tum finds Chons absent from his post. He sees his chance to get revenge and, opening the water vessels, allows the water to run into the thirsty desert. The shortage is soon found, and at the first the priest declares Chons must be sacrificed on the sacred altar to appease the gods.

On second thought the penalty is changed, for strong men will be needed, and Zuthor commands the first born of the man to be sacrificed instead. Saia is the first born, and plans are made for the ceremony. Tum calls Hathor and tells her that if she will go with him, he will swear to the guilt of one of the slaves, and thus save the girl, but she haughtily refuses his bargain.

But a slave has seen Tum's act, and when he accuses Tum, the latter beats him and then drags him out on the desert. Here Saia finds him and nurses him back to life. Just as the sacrifice is about to be made the slave staggers in and tells the truth. Saia is saved and the family is happy once more.

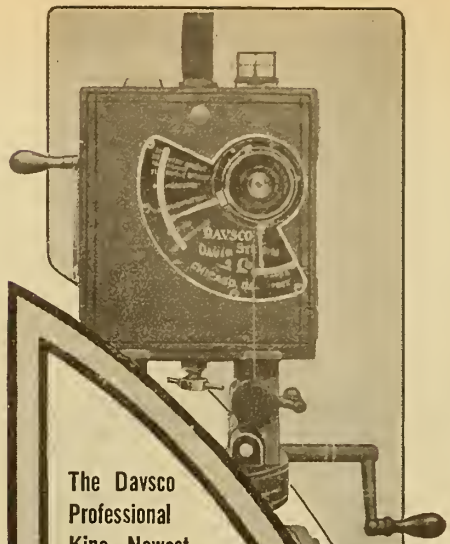
ROLLING TO RUIN (Two Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: Storekeeper (Paddy McGuire); His Officious Wife (Margaret Templeton); Cashier (Gypsy Abbott); The Clerk (Arthur Moon). Directed by Henry Kernan.

The play opens in a beach grocery store run by Paddy. He is engaged in waiting on customers and passes odd moments in making love to the girls who enter. His wife sees him, and that is the beginning of the end.



The clerk in the store stands talking to the cashier, and both are knocked into a box. Paddy rescues them and leads the cashier into the store. There he makes ardent love and is seen by the clerk, who calls Paddy's wife. She discharges the cashier and forces Paddy to scrub the floor. The clerk enters and robs the cash register. He goes out and meets the cashier and both go to a beach resort. Paddy discovers he is robbed and starts out in search of the two. He discovers them and picks the clerk's pocket, recovering his stolen money. The cashier sees him with the big roll of bills and immediately falls for him again.

Together the two go to a roller rink, where skating in bathing suits is the rage. The clerk discovers them and telephones Paddy's wife. She and the clerk rush into the skating rink where they create excitement galore. Paddy and the cashier escape to a roller coaster. The clerk is a close second to them and as they leap into one of the cars he follows. A fierce fight starts and continues while the car is going at lightning speed. The wife and police run to the beach and watch them. The car goes up and up and around and around. Suddenly it crashes from the rails and tumbles with its occupants 250 feet into the ocean below.

Paddy, the cashier and the clerk struggle from the surf, only to be met by the wife and the police. Paddy knocks them to one side and still holding the cashier's hand skates down the boardwalk. The two skate through the rear door of the store, coming up against the pillars with such a force that roof, walls and shelving fall in, burying them and the rest of its occupants beneath.

FALSTAFF.

THE SWISS SEA DOG (Aug. 27).—The girl was the only support of her widowed mother. At this point the villain made his appearance. He learned of her wealth and called in the guise of an admiral of the Swiss Navy. She and her fiance quarreled about the Swiss sea dog. The girl had a chair, presented to her late father by his grateful shipmates, and the villain decides to surprise her with a picture of it. While the girl was out horseback riding the villain slipped into her home and took a snapshot of the famous chair. Unfortunately, the fiance arrived and there was a fight. The girl's mother helped the trouble along by sending the camera and its contents to be developed. The messenger took the same car as the villain. A few blocks further on, two pretty girls got aboard. The car gave a jolt. One girl sat on the villain's lap; the other sat on the bulb of the camera. The picture showed the Swiss sea dog seated in father's chair, with a handsome young woman on his lap. The villain tried to explain, but the girl drove him from her.

A BOOMERANG GOLD BRICK (Sept. 6).—The cast: Si Green (Orral Humphrey); Mandy His Wife (Jo Taylor); Hugh R. Dunn, Bunco Man (Joe Massey); Ima Deville, His Partner (Margaret McKenna); Ben Zene, Crook Taxi Driver (John Gough); Bill Ketchum, Hotel Detective (Chas. Newton). Scenario by Harold Hoadley; directed by Orral Humphrey.

Armed with a couple of powerful bank rolls, Si Green and his wife come to the big city. They soon fall in with a pair of slickers who believe that a rube and his rubles are easily separated, especially as Si makes a flash of a big roll in paying off the taxi driver. This he does with a hundred-dollar bill, and gets his right change back in confederate money. They see the sights, something scandalous after this, and when the beautiful Ima Deville casts an eye on Si he turns a somersault. On the pretense of going to put his roll into the bank, Si escapes from the protecting wing of Mandy and is soon basking in the sunshine of Ima's smiles.

She conducts him to a place which she designates as her home. Just as they reach a most interesting stage of the proceedings, U. R. Dunn, Ima's supposed father, arrives on the scene, greatly depressed for ready cash. To cut a long story short, Si buys a gold brick, and as it turns out soon discovers the fact. The hotel clerk also discovers that Si's money was confederate, and a hunt starts for him, ending up in the police court.

Mandy also has been having her successes. She met the gentleman who owned the Park, and in return for the bugle in her stocking she received a clear deed to the city domain with the swans and fish thrown in for good measure. On the way to the police station Si sees Ima Deville rambling along with a satchel toward the railroad. He has her pumped out at the police station, where he gets his roll back. Later on, the gold brick does good service in tapping the nut of U. R. Dunn; Si gets all his wife's money back, and Dunn goes to the dungeon.

MATCHIN' JIM (Two Parts—Sept. 8).—The cast: Matchin' Jim (Frank Borzage); Murphy (Chick Morrison); Phyllis (Anna Little); Ellings (Dick La Reno); Hawkins (Harvey Clark); Marg (Queenie Rosson). Directed by Frank Borzage.

Matchin' Jim comes to the "Flying A" ranch and is employed as one of its cowboys. His name is well justified, as he has a mania for matching coins. Not far from the ranch lives Ellings, an old placer miner. He has a daughter, Phyllis, whose sole delight in life seems to be in caring for a puny rose bush that she has planted at the side of her father's cabin. By diligent nursing she has managed to bring it to such a stage that it produces a single blossom. As Matchin' Jim is wandering near the cabin one day, hunting, a wild shot from his gun narrowly misses Phyllis and cuts from the rose bush its one lone flower. She calls to Jim, and when he comes to her she points out the damage that he has done. But Jim only grins and tells her that he'll match her to see whether she is going to be mad at him or not. This forces Phyllis to relent in a way, and she accepts his proposition. He shows her the art of matching coins and in the gamble that follows she loses and Jim tells her that she can't be angry with him any more. By the time another rose has bloomed they are the best of friends.

An alluring description of an imitation diamond ring in a mail order catalog attracts Jim so that he sends for the article. There comes to the "Flying A" Hawkins, a gambler, who claims to be in ill health and is seeking to recuperate. He, too, meets Phyllis and Jim learns that he has a rival. Phyllis cares nothing for Hawkins, but actions lead Jim to believe that she has switched her affections. Thinking that his only chance is to get Hawkins out of the way, Jim makes him a proposition. He tells him that he will match him to see which one shall court Phyllis exclusively. Hawkins takes a chance and wins.

Phyllis cannot understand Jim's attitude following this, and to arouse his jealousy she flirts with Hawkins. This more than ever convinces Jim that he has lost out, and the imitation diamond ring arriving, he presents it to Hawkins, with the remark that he guesses that he hasn't any further use for it himself.

Then Jim packs up his belongings and leaves. A day of traveling brings him to an old shack, where he stops and asks for a bite to eat. The place is inhabited by a young woman and a new born baby. She cooks food for him. From her he learns that she has been deserted, and he suspects Hawkins as the miscreant husband. Returning to the "Flying A" he forces Hawkins to accompany him back to the shack. They enter, and Hawkins finds that a child has been born to him. He begs forgiveness of his wife and Jim gets his ring back from the gambler.

Appearing at Phyllis' cabin, Jim knocks at the door. She is away, but her father is present. Jim tells him that he only wants permission to propose to his daughter. In reply the father knocks Jim down, and throws him from the house. Jim re-enters the cabin. He tells the father that he'll match him to see whether he can propose or not. The men remain silent for a time. Hearing someone outside, Jim goes out of the cabin. Ellings gets up and goes to the door. The door opening outside, he appears in the doorway. Jim looks up at him with a grin and says, "I'm only matchin' her for a kiss." They match and Jim wins. Then the old man takes a step down and stands in between them. Both Phyllis and Jim are non-plussed, but when a faint smile appears on the old man's face, it is evident that he has been won over.

THE COUNT (Chaplin Picture—Fifth Release—Two Parts). The cast: Helper (Charles Chaplin); Proprietor (Eric Campbell); Heiress (Edna Purviance); Her Mother (Charlotte Mineau); The Count (Leo White).

Charles first appears as a bushelman in a small clothes pressing establishment conducted by Campbell. His attempts to handle a tailor's goose are full of mirth, and will bring joy to the hearts of all who have sworn vehemently at their tailors for not having delivered their clothes at the promised time. Among the customers is Leo White, a fortune hunting count, who leaves an invitation to a reception and dinner at Edna's home in a suit he wants pressed. Campbell finds the invitation and decides to impersonate the count.

It develops that Charles's sweetheart is the cook in Edna's house, but he has a rival in the policeman on that "beat." While Charles is making a call his rival enters and he is forced to hide in the dumbwaiter, which carries him to the floor above. As he peers out, he sees his boss present the invitation. He jumps out and is received and introduced as the real count. Charles presents Campbell as his secretary, and while at dinner is lionized by the hostess and her guests.

After the dinner all go to the hall room where Charles outdoes Vernon Castle as an exponent of terpsichore. His antics in the hall room scene are excruciatingly funny and show him as an eccentric dancer par excellence, while the battle of wits between Campbell and Charles constitute the best farcical situations ever found in a motion picture comedy.

To further complicate the proceedings, Leo White, the genuine count, decides at the last moment to accept the invitation and turns up at the reception where he is branded as an imposter because it is asserted that The Count is already in the house. White summons the police and the reception is broken up at the intrusion of the officers, who chase Campbell and Charles all over the premises, followed by the frantic guests. Campbell is captured but Charles escapes to enjoy in retrospect his day in high society.

THE LIGHT (American—Five Parts—Sept. 7).—The cast: Abdul Prince Zarak (Franklin Ritchie); Lucile Cartier (Helene Rosson); Cyril Edwards (George Webb); Zonia (Eugenie Forde).

Cyril Edwards, an artist, loves Lucile Cartier. Among Cyril's acquaintances is Prince Zarak. Zarak falls in love with Lucile, and in the privacy of his luxurious apartment he resorts to occult arts, to bring harm and misfortune to Cyril. His efforts fail. After the marriage, he continues his visit to the studio. Securing her portrait, he hangs it in his room and burns incense before it at night. His strange power effects Lucile in a weird, telephatic way.

Later Zarak exhibits an odd lamp which he tells them belonged to one of his fire-worshipping ancestors. At Zarak's suggestion, Lucile repeats an incantation which he recites. All are astonished to see a clear bright flame issue from the lamp. With the assistance of an accomplice, Zonia, Zarak succeeds in placing Cyril in compromising positions with Zonia. These witnessed by Lucile, her faith in Cyril is shocked. Lucile leaves Cyril and goes to Zarak's apartment. Before departing she writes a note explaining where she has gone.

Cyril misses Lucile. He rushes off to Zarak. Meantime Zonia discovers that Zarak has transferred his attention to Lucile. She is made prisoner and cast into a closet. Cyril notices that the flame, burning fitfully, leaves the lamp, flutters like a living thing along the wall, and finally reaches the waste basket. Cyril thus discovers that his wife is with Zarak. He finds Zonia bound and gagged. Releasing her, he learns from her that Zarak has fled, taking Lucile. Cyril starts to rescue Lucile, but Zonia precedes him. Cyril finds Zarak stabbed to death and Zonia standing over him, dagger in hand.

Cheaper Light

The carbons of an alternating-current arc burn at about the same rate while in a direct-current arc one burns much slower. The direct-current arc therefore requires less carbons than the alternating current—one-fourth to one-third less. The direct-current arc also uses less current than the alternating current to produce the same amount of light.

A direct-current arc, therefore, costs less for power and for carbons, while giving the same amount of light. If your service is only alternating current a

YOUTH'S ENDEARING CHARM (Ameritau Six Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: Mary Wade (Mary Miles Minter); Harry Disbrow (Wallace MacDonald); John Disbrow (Harry Von Meter); Mrs. Disbrow (Gertrude Le Brandt), Joe Jenkins (Alfred Ferguson); Mrs. Jenkins (Bessie Banks), George Horton (Harvey Clark); Maud Horton (Margaret Nichols). Directed by William Dowlan.

Little Mary Wade is a ward of the Jenkins family, placed with them for two years for her bed and board. Her "keep" is well earned, for she does the washing, sets the table, helps to cook, milks, feeds the pigs, mends, minds the baby and dresses the older children, besides submitting to the undisguised attention of Farmer Jenkins and the unbridled tongue of his better half. One ray of sunlight has penetrated to her darkened existence in the faithful affection of "Zippy," an ignoble but sprightly cur, who shares her confidence as well as her woes.

After an aggravation more irritating than usual, she is threatened with the horsewhip and followed by the faithful "Zippy," slips away determined never to return. She cuddles down in the hay in the end of the farm wagon, with "Zippy" following faithfully behind. Discovered, she tells the driver a fairy tale of the rich relatives she is going to visit in the city. Arriving at the station, she finds the Bells with a crying baby waiting to get to the city. Her little heart goes out to the baby, which she stills so successfully that the Bells pay her fare to the city.

Seeing a beggar successfully playing "blind," she conceives the idea of imitating the stunt, and is doing well when the regular mendicant claims the "location," and a policeman takes her to the station as a vagrant. While in a cell awaiting disposition by the morning court, Harry Disbrow, a dissipated though manly young fellow, is brought in. In the morning he secures her release, and takes her home. Mrs. Disbrow, his mother, is a lady of fine instincts, and at Harry's suggestion agrees to keep Mary and the dog for the day. Mary is later installed in the kitchen as an extra servant. Harry's father, John Disbrow, is president of a trust company. George Horton is his partner. Horton has been systematically robbing the institution, and hopes by marrying daughter Maud to Disbrow's son Harry that the shortage will be forgiven and forgotten.

A ball is given in honor of Maud. Mary cannot withstand the temptation to don a dress of Maud's. Embarrasment reigns, and to cover up the incident Harry's mother introduces Mary as her niece. Horton abstracts from the safe a bundle of securities. To prevent a run on their bank, Disbrow decides to sell the securities, but finds they are gone. He is desperately in need of money. Jones, a clerk, confesses to Disbrow that Horton took the securities.

While Harry and Mrs. Disbrow are at the theater Horton calls. Dishrow demands the securities. As Horton rises to go, the packet of securities drops out of his overcoat pocket. In the midst of the struggle, Mary, seizing a vase, dashes it down on Horton's skull, picks up the package and hands it to Disbrow. Mr. Disbrow takes Mary to his heart. When Harry returns with his mother from the theater and the story is told, Harry folds her to his breast.

CHRISTIE

IT is always gratifying to know that one's efforts are appreciated. I realized that Christie Comedies and the people in them were popular, but never before have I heard of such an enthusiastic response as met my announcement of last week that Christie Comedies would be released on the open market.

OUR mail has been the heaviest we have ever had and numbers of exhibitors and exchangemen throughout the United States and Canada, realizing the importance of being first, have wired for territory or bookings. The reception accorded my announcement has thoroughly convinced me as to the desirability of this form of distribution for my comedies.

THIS appreciation will surely spur myself and my associates on to even greater efforts to amuse your audiences.

YOU can depend upon it that we will not only keep Christie Comedies up to the well established Christie standard, but we will make the past standard the low water mark in Christie productions.

DON'T think because you haven't received an answer to your wire or letter that we don't appreciate it. We do, and you will receive a personal answer in a few days, but—frankly—we are swamped by the response to our announcement and will have to add to our clerical force before we can catch up.

REMEMBER, we promise you a consistent quality of laugh-getting comedies—better than those we have ever made.

Rev. Ab. Bergold. It is to this island that the boat containing Dick drifts. The fishermen pick his unconscious form up. No clew to his identity is on his body. He is removed to the pastor's home. A week later Dick recovers consciousness. When asked for his name he recalls the fight in the dressing room. Fearing he is being hunted for murder he pretends to have lost his memory. In a short time a love interest develops between Dick and Undine. Dick, his conscience heavy with his crime, cannot bring himself to ask Undine for her hand. Among debris cast up from a passing steamer Undine finds a newspaper. This paper contains the news that the country-wide search is on for Dick Stanton, heir to his father's fortune and that Dick is believed to be in hiding because he thought he murdered a man. It appears the man was only injured. Dick has become interested in church work. Realizing he can never ask this innocent maid to become the wife of a murderer, Dick resolves to leave the island secretly at night. Undine, afraid to tell Dick the truth for fear he will leave her, keeps secret the newspaper. Dick is stealthily leaving the house at night when Undine sees him. She begs him to remain. He tells her he loves her, but there is a reason why he cannot ask her hand in marriage. Convinced Dick really loves her, Undine produces the newspaper. Undine consents to marry Dick and go to the city if her father may accompany them. This is agreed. The aged pastor calls a meeting of his flock at the little church. So affected is he by their grief at his leaving that he refuses to go. Undine, through love for her father, declares she must remain with him. That night, as a good night and a good-bye prayer is being said at the Bergold home Dick, who is to leave on the morrow, receives a call to take up the work of the aged clergyman. An epilogue shows the beautiful church erected by Dick in memory of his late father and as atonement for the actions which broke his father's heart.

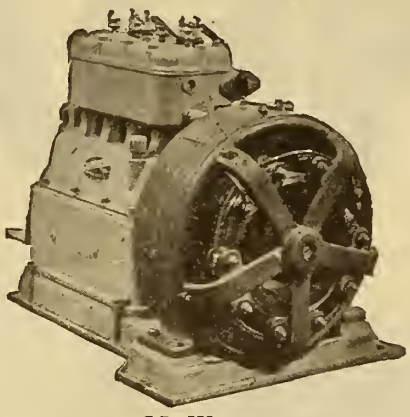
TANGLED HEARTS (Two Parts—Sept. 16). The cast: Margaret Gilbert (Margaret Gibson); Al Drake (Alva D. Blake); Nan (Nan Christy); William Clifton (William Clifford).

Margaret Gilbert, a student at a seminary, is more devoted to love story novels and clandestine meetings with Al Drake than to her studies. Her many capers at school bring forth protests from the president of the institution and the climax comes when Margaret is caught in the act of eloping with Al and expelled from school. Nan, Margaret's older sister, is devoted to her father, and the promised bride of William Clifton. Nan exerts herself at great length to develop the good in her sister, she having taken the place of her mother who passed away while Margaret was but a youngster.

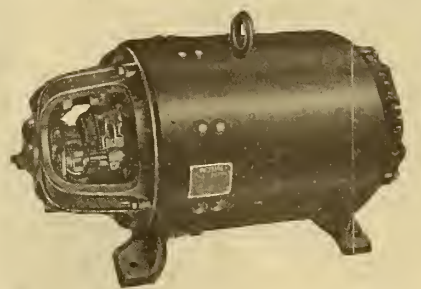
Al is the son of a millionaire lawyer. His father's will is that the youth follow the same course in life as he and he showers his boy with every luxury, including unlimited finances and a racing automobile. His father's profession does not appeal to him and Al neglects the study of law, spending his time perfecting a new automobile device, it being his desire to pursue a mechanical career. The youth's habits become known to the father, who informs the youth that his income has been stopped until such time as he proposes to resume the study of law.

Disregarding his father's wish, Al starts out to find employment for himself and applies for a position as a chauffeur. He is engaged by William Clifton. William arranges a week end visit at the home of Nan, his fiancee, and is driven there by Al. It is then that Al sees Margaret again and they are later detected in a love scene by William and Nan. William discharges Al on the spot and the older sister rebukes Margaret for her conduct.



William and Nan notice the change in Margaret and wonder at her brooding. William tries to console Margaret, who informs her prospective brother-in-law that she is the wife of Al and that it was a romance of several weeks previous. With pity for the girl, William folds her in his arms, assuring her that he will rectify matters. At this point Nan approaches the couple, and she gathers the impression that William and her younger sister are having a love scene. William's protests fall on deaf ears, but with a mission to perform he goes off satisfied that time will adjust matters.

William goes to the city and seeks Al. He hears Al's story of having been cut off financially by his father and decides to go to the father and attempt to bring about a reconciliation. This proves unsuccessful. William is not defeated, however, for he telegraphs Margaret to come to the city at once, it being his plan to bring the girl face to face with her father-in-law. Margaret leaves her home rather mysteriously and later Nan finds the telegram from William. She is heartbroken and tells her father, who urges her to forget.



Margaret goes to Al's father, and after much coaxing he finally accepts the girl as his daughter-in-law, forgives his son and there is a happy reunion. Margaret telegraphs her sister that she is coming home with her husband and asks forgiveness. When Nan reads the message she is horror-stricken, for she believes that William and Margaret have been married.

Al and Margaret, together with William and the millionaire, arrive at the Gilbert home. They are received by the father, who is very much wrought up over the whole affair until the correct circumstances are revealed and then he readily forgives. Nan has not made her appearance and she is sought by Margaret. With bowed head the older sister clasps hands with Al, feeling all the time that it is William. She finally raises her head and recognizes Al and realizes the folly of her thoughts. Asking forgiveness of her sister and William, Nan falls into the embrace of William.

JERRY AND THE BLACKHANDERS (Sept. 15).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Father (Jefferson Osborne); Mother (Janet Sully); Daughter (Claire Alexander); Gardner (George George); Chief of Blackhanders (Abe Lincoln); Butler (Gordon MacGregor). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Jerry's sympathy is aroused by a blind man, who is playing an accordian. He is about to donate to the unfortunate's tin cup when the musician winks an eye and Larry gets suspicious. He informs a policeman about the fakir and as the guardian of the law arrests the beggar Jerry runs off with the accordian. He serenades his sweetheart.

The discord of Jerry's singing and the weird sounds of the instrument attract the father and he investigates. At the same time, Hank, the gardener, rushes to remonstrate with Jerry. In the meantime the father has armed himself with a large vase and just as he drops it from a third story window, directed at Jerry's head, Hank appears and he is the target and is knocked unconscious.

Jerry tries to revive the stunned man with music from the accordian, but before he has administered much treatment the father has summoned the police and Jerry takes to his feet. His flight carries him to a secluded spot where there is in hiding a band of blackhanders. The "lookout" spies Jerry and at the point of a gun orders him to enter the "shaek of mystery."

The chief of the band is getting ready to send an anonymous letter to a wealthy merchant and plans are being perfected to install an infernal machine in the man's house. The band decide to force Jerry to carry the letter and the machine to the house. Jerry is astonished when he finds that the merchant is the father of his sweetheart. Urged on by two blackhanders, Jerry arrives at the house. He fights his way past the butler and when he sees his sweetheart he fears for her safety.

The father appears and Jerry hands him the letter. A general mix-up follows and Jerry rushes up stairs and he locks himself in a room with the daughter. Suddenly he remembers that he has a dangerous infernal machine with him and he rushes out to the hall. The father, butler and mother give chase and Jerry, not desiring to injure the girl he loves, runs out of the house, carrying the machine with him.

He hurries back to the blackhanders' shack, escaping the police as the two members of the gang who were guarding him are arrested. Gaining an entrance to the shack, Jerry places the machine in front of the chief and starts to run when he is hustled back by the other members of the gang. The chief remembers the hour of the expected explosion and with his henehmen rushes out of the building, leaving Jerry alone. A moment later there is a terrible explosion, the building is blown to pieces and Jerry sent sailing through the air, only to land in the path of the two policemen who are searching for him.

GAUMONT.

FANTOMAS (Episode No. 2, "The Man in Black"—Three Parts—Sept. 14).—The cast: Dr. Chalek, the man in black, Loupart (Victor Navarre); Inspector Juve (James Breon); Fandor (Louis Melchior); Lady Beltham (Renee Carl); Josephine (Yvette Andreyor).

All Paris was still talking of the clever trick by which Fatomas had cheated the guillotine. In the shadow of this grim instrument of death, he had substituted for himself an actor, Valgrand. However, the quick eye of Juve, the detective who had trapped Fantomas, had fortunately recognized that something was wrong and saved the actor from death.

Juve found no clue to Fantomas until the body of a woman who had been crushed to death in some mysterious fashion, was found in the office of a mysterious "Dr. Chalek." It was supposed to be that of Lady Beltham, whose husband Fantomas had murdered. Accompanied by Fandor, his journalist friend, Juve watched Dr. Chalek's apartment after he had found it impossible to identify the body as that of Lady Beltham. Dr. Chalek got into his automobile and drove away. The two men followed. Whereas the man they had trailed was a middle-aged professional man with a blond beard, the man who got out of the motor car was a slouchy loafer of the boulevards. A woman handed him a note. He went back to his automobile and drove off.

Juve followed but was thrown off the trail. Fandor followed the young woman and found that she led him to the railway station. An elderly man greeted her and bought tickets for Pontarlier. He was a wine merchant named Martinille, going to make a payment for his firm. A number of men rode with them in the car, the last on the train. Fandor did not know that one of these was Fantomas and the other were members of his band. At a point a few miles outside of Paris, the gang disconnected the car from the train and robbed both Martinille and Fandor, leaving them to die as the car rolled back down the hill into the Simplom Express. Fortunately the two men jumped before the car had gathered much headway, but, nevertheless, the oncoming train was wrecked with great loss of life.

Fantomas was disappointed in his hope of getting money from the wine merchant, since each bill had been torn in two, and the other half was not to be paid until thirty days later. He hurried to Dercey, where the wine dealers had their distillery, in the hope of getting the other half of the money. He lured Juve there, wishing to get him out of the way at the same time. Fandor, thinking the next attack would be Dercey, also went down there. He met Juve and the two were attacked by bandits. They were trapped in a circle of blazing casks, and only escaped by jumping into an empty barrel and letting it roll through the fire into the Seine.

Going back to Paris, Juve and Fandor arrested Dr. Chalck in a cafe. When they reached the street, the quick-witted man escaped by tripping them. They thought they had hold of his arms, but discovered these were merely rubber forms inside his overcoat. His own arms he held close against his body, having prepared for just such an emergency. Fantomas placed a huge snake into Juve's room, but the detective had had sufficient warning of the "silent executioner" to wear a special armor protected by sharp nails. Only in this fashion was his life saved. This encounter made clear the manner of the horrible death of the woman found in Dr. Chalck's office.

Fantomas made the mistake of retreating to Lady Beltham's villa at Neuilly. Here he was trapped by Juve. Wishing to destroy all his enemies at one time, Fantomas placed a bomb in a room and connected it with a switch in one of the outbuildings. When the house was searched he was not found because he had hidden in a tank of water in the basement breathing through a bottle which appeared to be floating on the surface, but which was really an air-tube for the criminal. After the basement had been searched and the police were gathered in the room, Fantomas had planned for the trap, the desperate man rushed to his switch and exploded the bomb. In the confusion he managed to escape and did not know whether or not Juve lay dead in the debris of the villa.

REEL LIFE NO. 18 (Sept. 3).—Interesting pictures taken on a day's cruise with the fleet of palatial yachts owned by the wealthy members of the New York Yacht Club, one of the most exclusive organizations of its kind in the world, are the chief feature in this issue of "Reel Life." These pictures bring before the spectators the hundreds of different types of cruisers and sailing vessels owned and sailed by members of the club. In addition, the film presents many scenes taken in connection with the races run under the auspices of the club with almost every type of sailing vessels participating. Incidentally, these scenes are replete with thrilling scenes, the weather at the time the pictures was taken causing a heavy sea, which made it exceedingly uncomfortable for the skippers, despite their prowess.

Another part of this release is devoted to pictures showing the "city farmers" of New York at work on the various plots of ground set aside for cultivation. These pictures clearly prove that despite the fact that they are city dwellers nevertheless they can cut the cost of living to a very small margin even by the cultivation of only a few square yards of earth.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 52 (Sept. 6).—Characteristic and entertaining pictures in and about Mauch Chunk, Pa., and other interesting pictures taken in and about the anthracite coal regions of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., comprise this issue of "See America First." So much is read of the work accomplished by the coal miners of Pennsylvania that these pictures will no doubt prove the most interesting of their kind ever released. One of the features of this release is a series of views obtained on a trolley trip in the Pennsylvania mountains upon which many scenes of great beauty were obtained. On the same reel is an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer.

THE SOCIAL SECRETARY (Fine Arts, Sept. 17).—The cast: Mayme (Norma Talmadge), Mrs. Von Puyster (Kate Lester); Elsie Von Puyster (Helen Weir); Jimmie Von Puyster (Gladden James); the Count (Herbert French); the Buzzard (Eric Von Stroheim).

Mayme is a beautiful young woman who is forced to earn her own living. Her beauty proves a serious handicap in that it attracts the attention of every man who is forced to come in contact with her, the result being that she is forced to resign from place to place in order to escape from their attentions. Finally, in desperation, she sees an advertisement for a social secretary and answers it. Before doing so she disguises her comliness as much as possible. She is accepted for the position by the society matron who has inserted the advertisement.

In the household there is a young son, who is a most estimable young man with but one fault drink. There is also a daughter—a foolish young thing, who believes her cup of happiness would be filled to overflowing were she able to announce her marriage to a titled person. One night, the son coming home late after a spree, climbs into the window and comes unexpectedly on the social secretary, who, believing herself safe from prying eyes, is satisfying a natural feminine desire to make herself look as pretty as possible. The son is astounded, and attempts to embrace her. The young woman escapes, however.

The following morning the social secretary announces that she is going to resign, but the son, seeing her alone, begs her to remain, and promises that he will never offend again. She does so, and shortly afterwards meets a count who is paying court to the young daughter of the household. The secretary recognizes him as one of the men with whom she had an ugly experience in former years, but realizes that her word would not be taken at that time, as against the count's, who has completely won the girl. The secretary determines to thwart the count, however, and permits him to flirt with her again. He makes an appointment to meet her in the garden, and she keeps it, first making certain that they will be discovered by the family. They are, and the engagement is broken by the girl's mother. The count is persitent, however, and telephones the girl to meet him at his apartment. The secretary overhears the telephone conversation by "listening in" on another wire and determines to prevent the meeting, or at least to protect the girl.

A reporter who has observed the meetings of the count, the girl and the secretary and the young son of the family, anxious to secure a story for his paper, takes to following the various members of the family, and in this manner trails the girl to the count's apartment. The secretary also having anonimously warned the girl's mother of the meeting, hurries off to the apartment and climbs the fire escape to effect an entrance unobserved. When the girl has been in the apartment but a few minutes, her mother and the reporter seek admittance. The girl, in a panic, is thrust in a rear room by the count. The secretary is on the fire escape outside this room, and when she is certain the girl is alone, opens the window and urges her to flee by means of the fire escape. The girl does so, and the secretary takes her place in the room, but as the enraged mother, her son, and the reporter rush into the room, the astonishment of the count is as real as that of the others in the room when he sees who is really there.

The mother is naturally indignant that a person who would be found in so compromising a position would dare enter her home. The son is the soul of loyalty, however, and sticks to the girl whom he wants to marry, even in the face of the incriminating circumstances. When it seems certain that the girl must stand convicted of whatever people choose to think of her, the young daughter comes to her rescue and confesses that she was in the room, and that she had been able to escape only through the generosity of the social secretary. Vindicated, the social secretary rewards the young man for his loyalty by accepting his love and giving him her promise to be his wife.

THE WOLF WOMAN (Once—Five Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast: Leila Aradella (Louise Glaum); Rex Waldon (Charles Ray); John Morton (Howard Hickman); Adele Harley (Marjory Temple); Mrs. Walden (Gertrude Claire); Franklin Walden (Wyndham Standing).

Leila Aradella is a heartless woman, utterly ruthless in the pursuit of her ambitions. Men who come under her influence, struggle for a moment against her influence and then fall easy victims to her power. Then she casts them aside, heartlessly. John Morton, one of the most prominent lawyers of the day, is one of those victims of the wolf woman. His degradation is complete and he is cast off, broken and discredited.

Next to fall victim to the wolf woman is Rex Walden, a wholesome, big-hearted boy. He is the youngest son of Mrs. Walden, a wealthy society widow, who fairly worships Rex and his older brother Franklin. Of all the victims of the wolf woman, none became a more abject slave than Rex Walden. In his boyish enthusiasm he sought to place her on a pedestal. When she tired of him, the blow was more than he could stand, and, taunted by the laughter of the woman, he took her dare and killed himself.

Mrs. Walden, apprised of her son's infatuation for the woman, had gone to her home to plead for her boy. Before that she had sent her older son to rescue the younger boy and, he, too, had fallen victim to the woman's wiles. When Mrs. Walden reached the wolf woman's home, she arrived a moment to late. Her youngest boy lay dead on the floor and when a moment later the elder son reached the house, she realized instantly that he, too, was in the clutches of the woman. In desperation, Mrs. Walden turned to Adele Harley, a young woman of the highest mental qualities, to save her boy. Franklin had been engaged to Adele and the mother felt that in the younger woman lay her only hope.

Adele offered to do her best to save Franklin and deliberately sought out the wolf woman and offered battle to her for the man she really loved. Adele made no compromise with the wolf woman, but appeared as her own sweet womanly self and challenged the other to hold the man she now had in her power. Franklin at last saw the utter worthlessness of the wolf woman and turned from her. And, facing defeat for the first time in her life, she struggled the harder to hold him. When failure at last confronted her, she gave way to a violent outburst and then fell, fainting, into a great mirror. The accident left the wolf woman horribly disfigured. The beauty which had made willing captives of the men was gone and with it went the power of the woman. Vainly she strove to exercise her control over her victims but they turned from her.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER (No. 9 of Series 2—"Partly Cloudy"—Aug. 16).—Musty holds down a job in Mole & Kittleton's dime museum. Musty seems to be the sole employee about the place, and whatever is called for by any of the patrons, he has to supply it. He is placed in charge of the cane rack, and, of course, cheats so that the customers get no canes. One irascible old fellow complains to the manager, who upbraids Musty for his dishonesty. As soon as the customer leaves the manager congratulates himself on having so business-like an employee. While Musty is engaged in an innocent flirtation, a lad with a ten-foot arm approaches the rack and deliberatly places rings over all the canes to which are attached the most handsome prizes. The boss is so incensed at Musty's carelessness that he forces him to stand up against the wall while he practices hatchet throwing, with Musty as the target. The idea of this pastime is to come as close to the target as possible without hitting, and the boss's hatchet doesn't miss the target. The Arabian Knife Propeller appears on the scene and throws two dozen knives at Musty all at once. The blades stick in the wall so close to Musty as to form the outline of his anatomy against the background.

Then Musty is called upon to operate the machine in the moving picture theater. He does so in a unique manner, having much trouble with the film, which insists upon unrolling, tying itself into knots, etc. Musty finds a way out which is satisfactory enough to him, but goes to sleep and the audience walks out after heaping their scorn upon the sleeper's head. Awakening, Musty feels the need of recreation and goes in for some more or less violent exercise with a punching bag. The results are not satisfactory, for in swinging at the bag, Musty collides with the boss, who has suddenly entered the room.

His next occupation is "bally-hooing" to attract patrons to throw baseballs at the "dodging nigger." He gets along fairly well at this until a rough customer uses a brick instead of a ball, placing the poor Ethiopian hors de combat. When the boss complains that this is the fourth one he has lost in a single week and selects Musty to take his place, our hero faints.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER (No. 10 of Series 2—"Fore and Aft"—Aug. 23).—Musty visits the seashore, and takes upon himself the duty of sweeping the tide back from the beach. Suddenly a golden head is thrust up through the water and Musty decides the owner of this crown of glory must be either a mermaid or Nanette Spellerman. It proves to be the former, and Musty starts a flirtation. This is interrupted by the appearance of a fairy tramp, who magically clothes Musty in a sailor's costume and causes a wonderful vessel, sort of a cross between a Chinese junk and a hybrid galleon one-lunged motorboat, to appear. Musty assumes command of the ship.

He visits the various decks and finally the engine room, where he finds the motive power is furnished by the engineer, who operates a sewing machine to which a crank-shaft is attached. Musty goes on to the hold and nearly sinks the ship by opening a trap in the bottom of the craft. The Merry Sunshine Society takes its annual outing aboard Captain Musty's craft. Musty lights a fire in the galley stove to prepare tea, and one of the Merry Sunshiners on deck covers up the funnel to keep from breathing the smoke. The fumes are driven back into the galley, but Musty solves the difficulty with his magic smoke consumer.

When those on deck complain that the party is short one cup and saucer, Musty dives overboard, comes up through the bottom of the ship and appears on deck with the crockery while the astonished sun culters are still looking over the rail waiting for him to come up. A moment later he suddenly bursts through a hatchway, upsetting one of his passengers and precipitating him into the briny. In trying to rescue his victim, Musty himself goes overboard and a general mix-up follows. The Sunshiners decide they have enough of Musty's cruiser, and while our hero is being dried by a blow-torch in the hands of the engineer, hail a passing rowboat and are restored to terra firma.

Undismayed, Musty decides to fish. He seats himself comfortably on deck and casts his line. Hardly has it touched the water when the bait is seized and swallowed, hook and all, by a tremendous goofus fish. The sea monster starts to run. Musty holds on and the ship is dragged out to sea at a terrific rate of speed. The astounded engineer puts the reverse action on his sewing machine without result, the dreadnought continues on its wild dash toward the coast of Africa. Finally the craft runs upon a rock and Musty is thrown into the water. The last we see of him he is still being dragged headlong through the water.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (Chapter 17, "The Telltale Envelope"—Two Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke); Dr. Stephen Royce (Henry Kolker); Richard Freneau (David Powell); David Stafford (William Roselle); Pierpont Stafford (William T. Carleton); Lois Stafford (Jule Power); Judge Freeman (Henry Weaver); Gideon Trask (Frank McGlynn); Nell Trask (Helen Hart); Staas Casinur (Maury Steuart).

After capturing Gideon Trask, the man she believes murdered her fiance, Richard Freneau, Gloria Stafford has him conveyed to the Stafford country home to be treated by Doctor Royce for his injuries and in hope of extracting a confession from him of what really happened at the base of the Soldier' and Sailors' Monument where Freneau was killed. Royce has in his pocket the letters he took from Freneau and which the latter was planning to return to Lois Stafford the night he met his death. Just as he is about to give the letters to Lois, her husband, David Stafford, appears and Royce slips the letters back into his pocket.

Later on, while romping about the lawn with little Staas Casinum, the child finds the envelope containing the letters and runs to Gloria with it. Gloria recognizes the envelope as the one Freneau showed her the night he bade her farewell, and insists upon reading one of the enclosures, thus discovering that Freneau and Lois were about to go away on a trip together. Gloria declares she believes Royce implicated in the murder and the latter is forced to tell how he took the letters from Freneau's packet after he found him murdered, also the full details of the affair between Freneau and Lois.

Gloria next encounters Judge Freeman and insists that he tell her why he released Trask when the latter was brought before him in court. The judge then discloses for the first time how David had discovered the intrigue between his wife and Freneau, and had sworn to kill the man who was ruining his home. Freeman then relates how he found Freneau's dead body, believes David killed him, and how he himself dragged the body to the river's edge and rolled it in. Shocked and half believing that her brother is really a murderer, Gloria goes in search of him.

SAVING THE FAMILY NAME (Five Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: Estelle Ryan (Mary Mac Laren); Mrs. Winthrop (Girrard Alexander); Wally Dreislin (Carl von Schiller); Jansen Winthrop (Jack Holt); Robert Winthrop (Phillips Smalley); Billie Schramm (Harry Depp). Scenario written by Lois Weber. Produced by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley.

Estelle Ryan, a chorus girl, has among her admirers Wally Dreislin and Jansen Winthrop. Both young men come of excellent families. Wally's attention to Estelle has shocked the entire Dreislin family, and the scandal is spread by the gossips. Estelle, unconscious of all this, has persistently declined Wally's advances, until, finally, she consents to go to dinner with him.

Robert Winthrop, uncle of Jensen, is a close friend of the Dreislins, and volunteers to watch Wally's movement. He sees Estelle go into Wally's limousine, and informs the Dreislins. Young Dreislin presses his suit with Estelle, but when he fails to move her from a moral purpose he declares that he cannot marry her because of the objections of his family. Estelle's indignation has an effect of intensifying Wally's love and he proposes marriage, saying he will give up his family, if necessary, and marry Estelle on the morrow. Estelle consents, and Wally goes home to face the family council that has been called. Under the distressing pressure put upon him, Wally recants and writes Estelle that he has promised to never see her again—and commits suicide. The discovery of his body opens a scandal to the public prints.

would be her wedding day. The manager of the show offers her a tremendous salary and tells her that the publicity will mean her "making" as a stage star. The heartbroken girl orders the would-be exploiters of her misfortune from her flat.

Estelle later receives a letter from Wally's mother of vindictive hatred. Estelle's grief is outwardly chilled by her inward resentment of a wanton injustice. While her heart breaks, she resolves to accept the world at the face value it accepts her. She telephones to the showman, accepts his offer, and eventually becomes a reputable star through the merit of her native talents.

Jansen Winthrop now advances his attentions, and obtaining an introduction to Estelle falls in love. In the months that have passed Estelle's love for her dead sweetheart has not entirely faded. When Jansen presses his suit she accepts, while very frankly giving him to understand that she has no genuine love for him. The girl has grown weary of stage life. She longs for home seclusion and because Jansen offers her this, Estelle declares she is willing to "marry almost anybody." Jansen's attentions to Estelle become rumored; the gossip reaches the ears of his haughty and austere mother, who voices her objections in no uncertain manner.

Robert Winthrop, her brother-in-law, joins the mother's appeal. The threat to cut the young man off without any means to prevent the necessity of him going to work, has no effect. Robert Winthrop counterfeits Jansen's handwriting, enjoins Estelle to secrecy and begs her to return with the messenger who bears the note to a trysting place from which they will proceed to be married. Believing the note comes from Jansen, the girl makes haste to comply, is ushered on board the Winthrop yacht and sails for Winthrop Island—her companion being none other than Robert Winthrop who has devised a scheme to "save the family name."

Marooned with him upon the island, Estelle reminds Robert that he is stripping her of the last vestige of respectability through his trickery, and declares that her own family name was generally respected until she encountered the methods of the Winthrops in defending their own title. There is a colored man and woman on the island to do the house work and Robert devotes his time to studying his captive. Ultimately Robert sends for Jansen, admitting that a great injustice has been done. When Jansen arrives Estelle begins making a few fast moves on her own account. Ignoring Jensen's outstretched arms, Estelle gives him her hand to shake in reunion greeting, and leaning against Robert's chest declares to Jansen that she and Robert eloped. Too surprised to deny the charge, Robert accepts the decree and when Jansen has left the room to hurry back to main land, Estelle finds herself folded in Robert's arms—and the "family name" discussion is settled for good and all.

THE VELVET PAW (Paragon—Five parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: Robert Moorehead (House Peters); Mary Dexter (Gail Kane); Senator Barring (Ned Burton); Congressman Drake (Frank Goldsmith). Scenario written by Gardner Hunting. Directed by Maurice Journeur.

Mary Dexter comes to Washington with her husband, Phillip, to get his invention, an appliance for battleships, adopted. He runs against graft and influence on all sides and finally realizes he can do nothing without money and "pull." Unknown to Phillip, Mary goes to Senator Barring and by her beauty and charm so interests him that he promises to help her husband. When she rushes to tell the good news to Phillip, she is horrified to find him dead by his own hands.

Senator Barring recognizes in Mary a clever tool and under the guise of friendship and kindliness wins her to his side. He and his wife take her into their home, help and comfort her, and when she asks to be allowed to repay them, he enlists her assistance for some of his measures. She falls in with his plans and is successful in winning to her side the vote of various members of Congress.

Clifford Drake, a young, clean-cut congressman, despite bribes and threats, refuses to side with the interests. Barring persuades Mary to use her influence. She lures Drake on and finally on a vague promise of marriage induces him to forsake his principles and vote with the interests. His infatuation costs him his seat in Congress; his party is disgusted with his deflection and turn from him, electing in his stead, Moorehead, a strong, capable, honest westerner. Drake, maddened with love for Mary, begs her to marry him despite his defeat, but she laughs his proposal to scorn and he goes, threatening revenge for his blighted career.

Mary is attracted to Moorehead and succeeds in meeting him and winning his interest. Like all other men, he falls for her charms, but despite his infatuation, he will not yield his principles and refuses to vote against the Child Labor Bill at Mary's request. Finally, however, on her urgent plea, he promises her that he will be absent when the vote is called. When Mary reports this to Barring, he is furious—they must have Moorehead's help in defeating the bill.

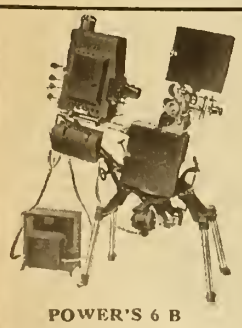
Mary realizes at last how infamous has been her part in the political game. Love for Moorehead has awakened her true nature, and she determines to undo part of her work. The Child Labor Bill is up for discussion. Madly Mary pursues Moorehead, who, true to his promise, has remained away from the House. Finally, she comes upon him and begs him to return and cast his vote for the bill. Believing she is trying to "use" him further, he breaks away from her, but at last she convinces him that through him she has come to see things in their true light and is anxious to fight with him for the right. Moorehead rushes to the House and delivers an impassioned address in favor of the Child Labor Bill. His strong arguments carry the day and the bill is passed.

Congratulations are showered on him. Mary in the gallery, rejoices in his victory when suddenly a shot rings out and Mary falls wounded. Drake, drunk and half crazed in his desire for revenge, followed Mary and fired with intent to kill. The House is in an uproar. Drake is seized by angered members and hurled from the gallery. Moorhead rushes up to Mary and is overjoyed to find that her wound is only slight and together they rejoice over his victory and her narrow escape.

METRO PICTURES CORP.

MISTER 44 (Yorke Film Corp.—Five Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: John Stoddard (Harold Lockwood); Sadie Hicks (Mae Allison); Eagle Eye (Lester Cuneo); Larry Livingston (Franklin Hall); Estelle Livingston (Londa Landowska); Dick Westfall (Henry Otto); Mrs. Westfall (Aileen Allen); Mrs. Stoddard (Belle Hutchison); Ferguson (Lee Arms). Scenario written by Charles A. Taylor. Directed by Henry Otto.

In the sordid shirt factory in which she works, Sadie Hicks dreams of the great outdoors. Surrounded by men of puny minds and flabby bodies, her fancy goes out to great manhood that is strong of mind and muscle. Translated in the language of the shirt factory life she knows best, she finds that she admires a man with a 44 chest. She sees a shipment of 44's all ready to be sent to Arizona, and she writes a little note and tucks it into one of the shirts.



On account of a rush order, the box is sent to Canada and the shirt with Sadie's note reaches John Stoddard, a wealthy civil engineer, who prefers the life of the woods to the polite society enjoyed by his family and friends. Good-naturedly, he answers Sadie's note, telling her to let him know if he can help her at any time.

Sadie receives the letter on the same day she is discharged from the factory for repulsing the advances of Ferguson, the foreman. She at once telegraphs Stoddard that she is on the way, and takes the next train for his Canadian Camp. He receives the message too late to wire her not to come. Stoddard goes to the station to meet her, intending to put her on a southbound train immediately, but he misses her, as she has left the train at a station nearer his camp than the post-office station.

Stoddard finds her, and they start in a canoe for an island hotel where he expects to place her until he can send her away again. But a storm comes up, the canoe is swamped and Stoddard and Sadie are obliged to swim to the nearest stretch of shore. It is a small deserted island, and the two have to spend a day and a night there. The noblest qualities of both are shown, and they fall in love with each other. They construct a raft on which they embark, but it has been flimsily put together on account of lack of materials, and Sadie and Stoddard are capsized again. This time they are rescued by Stoddard's Indian guide, Eagle Eye, who takes them to the camp.

They find Larry Livingston at the camp. He is the brother of Estelle Livingston, the society girl whom Mrs. Stoddard wishes her son to marry. He tells them that Mrs. Stoddard and Estelle, who are stopping at the hotel, will be at the camp presently. Sadie feels diffident about meeting these fashionable women, and hides in the woods. Here Larry Livingston finds her. He tells her that if she really loves John Stoddard, it is her duty to give him up to a woman of his own station in life, that it would be only degradation for him to marry beneath him.

Sadie persuades Eage Eye to show her the way to the railroad station. Leaving a note of farewell for Stoddard, she goes to the city and finds work in a restaurant, studying hard in her leisure hours to make herself worthy of the man she loves, and capable of meeting his mother. Stoddard is tireless in his search for her, and at last discovers her. He convinces her that Larry was mistaken, and the two clasp hands in mutual understanding.

The Girl at the Corner Table

asked her escort to ask the waiter to ask the orchestra director to play "I Love You Truly." The man at the next table sent up a request for "The Sunshine of Your Smile."

The Stock Company Enthusiast stopped at the box office on the way out after the show and asked the manager when he was going to put on "Camille." "I want to see your leading lady play that part; she made a great hit with me when she did it last season."

The Film Fan

has the same peculiarities as any other fan—only more so. His word is law to the exhibitor. He asks for the picture he wants and the exhibitor shows it.

The Progressive Producer

makes it a point to keep exhibitors and film fans acquainted with the current and forthcoming releases of his company. The progressive producer does this by advertising in the magazine that reaches and influences the choice of both the exhibitor and the film fan. He keeps his eye, and his copy in, that magazine. It is the medium through which he reaches the exhibitor-middleman and the ultimate consumer-fan.

WORLD PICTURES BRADY-MADE

Judge Our April Promise TODAY

You were promised THAT

William A. Brady would personally supervise the making of every World Picture;

Every World Picture would be a dependable picture;

We would never weaken our program by issuing special releases;

...

Your response proved that you believed us.

Your co-operation justifies our belief that we have made good.

Tomorrow is another day.

True, W. A. Brady has set a pace. But, during the present week and the weeks to follow, World Pictures will reach still higher standards.

In his selection of our new scenarios, in his choice of directors, in his assignment of stars and supporting casts, and in his staging Mr. Brady has surpassed his previous splendid triumphs.

Our promises are kept, but we have new ones to make.

Clara Kimball Young Service World Pictures

We have just established a "Clara Kimball Young Service—World Pictures."

On this program eight remarkable Clara Kimball Young pictures will be re-issued.

Through this service World Pictures will give additional co-operation to exhibitors. Note these points:

1—These subjects will be released as a program and not as specials. The World policy is to take care of exhibitors first, and to give them the benefit of all our production facilities AS A PROGRAM.

2—Holders of World franchises will be given the first opportunity to secure these pictures.

3—The prints are new. Each subject has been splendidly re-edited and re-titled.

4—The paper for this service is entirely new. It is unique. It has been designed to render unusual assistance and publicity to theatres owning the franchises for the "Clara Kimball Young Service—World Pictures."

Our branches will give you further information regarding this service. Apply to the one nearest you.

The touch of that master-craftsman, William A. Brady, dominates every picture. All are powerful, gripping stories that will win your patrons.

These World pictures reach the summit of histrionic art in the silent drama. They are bound to command nation-wide recognition and applause.

In these pictures and in their filming you will see a vision of what all photo-plays must come to eventually. Hurried, tawdry productions must fail. Only Art can survive.

Mr. R. A. Rowland, President,
Metro Pictures Corporation,
New York, N.Y.

Dear Sir:-

The present week finishes the first year of the New Strand Theatre's existance in Denver and we desire to thank you for the wonderful asset which Metro has been to us during the past year. Your pictures have been uniformerly good and of the high order and the fact that our year has been most successful from a financial standpoint is the most potent answer to Metro's excellence. Opposition on Curtis Street in Denver is of the keen penetrating kind but let me assure you that the Strand with the Metro service has not only won an envious position among the best houses of the West but has led the way many times.

With many thanks for your past efforts and a wish that the future may bring your company as fast progress as you have enjoyed the past year we are,

The Greater VITAGRAPH

"Not one poor picture"—

THE reputation of Vitagraph in the past will be more than lived up to by Greater Vitagraph in the future.

The features here announced, are the releases of Greater Vitagraph's first month.

We ask you to try to match them, picture for picture, with the output of the entire motion picture industry.

Pictures of First Quality Only—is the policy to which Greater Vitagraph is unwaveringly dedicated. No mediocre pictures, no production of doubtful merit, can find a place on our release list. Only pictures worthy of Greater Vitagraph will bear the name of Vitagraph.

WE SAID IT WOULD WIN

IN the early part of 1915 when we began producing "THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE," other manufacturers said we were spending too much money and time—and that the picture would never bring back its cost.

We believed the picture would succeed. Since then a host of exhibitors have proved it a success by breaking all box-office records. It was released nearly a year ago and is still going strong.

If you want "THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" to win for you, book it now through

WE SAY THESE WILL WIN

WITH the formation of
THE GREATER VITAGRAPH
I took up the personal supervision of every Blue Ribbon Feature. Every feature produced under the standard of THE GREATER VITAGRAPH from now on will have my undivided and most careful attention.

All business affairs have been lifted from my shoulders. My ambition is at last gratified—the ambition to personally superintend and direct all feature and super-feature productions.

The pictures which we are about to release have proved what wonderful results can be achieved by careful supervision and a great organization.

Exemplifying this are "PHANTOM FORTUNES," with Barney Bernard; "THE COMBAT," with Anita Stewart; "THE CHATTEL," with E. H. Sothern, and "HIS WIFE'S GOOD NAME," with Lucille Lee Stewart. These September releases are examples of what is to follow.

We say these pictures will win. We know it.

UNQUESTIONABLY the screen appearance of Mr. Sothern is the most important event in the history of the photo-play. The supreme genius of the modern stage, the man whose mastery will leave its indelible influence on the drama for all time, will appear exclusively in Greater Vitagraph Productions.

Truly, in the creation of The Greater Vitagraph, a miracle has been wrought! The motion picture has come into its own--and The Greater Vitagraph has made it possible.

ANITA STEWART

A Six-part Blue Ribbon Feature of extraordinary power—

A drama of a loveless marriage and a woman's unyielding faith.

Produced by

Ralph W. Ince

CHARMING Anita Stewart has never appeared to better advantage than in this big, realistic Greater Vitagraph production. Miss Stewart is an actress of rare talent, of deep and sympathetic understanding, and "The Combat" with its tense situations, offers her a wider range for the exercise of her art than any drama in which she has heretofore been featured.

To the superb work of this beautiful, gifted actress in a drama that suits her talents so splendidly, is added the genius of Ralph W. Ince, master director, under whose personal supervision "The Combat" has been produced.

And let it be remembered that "The Combat," big and fine as it is, is the typical Greater Vitagraph production, the last word in dramatic art, perfect in cast, story and production.

Paramount Pictures

PARAMOUNT Pictures do not owe their success to one star or to a dozen.

The organization that rises by one star will fall by that star.

Human nature craves diversity.

It would even tire of Heaven if it had to live there.

Paramount service serves human nature.

It does not attempt to force one star on the public week after week.

It does not thrust upon the public a player that the public must tire of sooner or later.

It has the largest, grandest collection of famous players ever assembled by any moving picture organization.

And it serves these stars to the Famous Players Film Company

Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co.

on Earth in-Pictures

public in two new pictures every week, keeping the public's interest in them fresh and unwearied.

Everywhere in the United States Paramount exhibitors will tell you that Paramount Pictures are the one program that never surfeits or palls.

If the public tires of one Paramount star, there are ninety-nine others that it loves.

And those ninety-nine others come along regularly at the rate of two a week (104 a year) in the cleverest, brightest, briskest pictures that it is humanly possible to make.

The Paramount Idea is broader than any single player—broader than any single play.

It is as broad as human entertainment itself.

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION. 68 EXCHANGES

VOL. I. SEPTEMBER 23, 1916 No. 2.

Three Tremendous Mutual Serials Are Filling Theatres

THREE big Mutual serials, "The Diamond From the Sky," "The Girl and the Game" and "The Secret of the Submarine" are now playing to capacity houses in big theatres all over the country. Bookings on these big serials are being made in the Mutual exchanges every day. Exhibitors are finding them just the unit needed to complete their programs. Serials bring new and steady patronage to the theaters. They link up the late summer and early fall business with that of the coming winter. A patron who begins to follow any of these serials now is a sure customer for many weeks. A number of such patrons will make any theater successful.

The Mutual Film Corporation's very first serial was "The Million Dollar Mystery." It made big money for every exhibitor who ran it. By it the Mutual proved that it knew what would appeal to the public. It followed up this early success with "The Diamond From the Sky," "The Girl and the Game" and "The Secret of the Submarine." The exhibitor was thus given a chance to secure for himself the big box office value created by big advertising campaigns. He did so. He is still doing so. The addition of a serial to any exhibitor's program will increase his business. The biggest exhibitors in the country—men who control long strings of theaters—are proving the truth of this axiom. And what applies to the bigger houses proves equally true with the small ones. "The Diamond From the Sky," "The Girl and the Game" and "The Secret of the Submarine" are now being booked at the 68 Mutual exchanges. A great number of exhibitors are availing themselves of these attractions daily.

Studio Notes

The third Mary Miles Minter Mutual Star Production, "Faith," is just about completed at the American studios at Santa Barbara, Cal.

Arizona forms the background for all the scenes in "The Land o' Lizards," the five-reel American Mutual Masterpicture that was released the week of September 18. Practically all of the scenes were actually taken in that state.

The release of "The Sable Blessing," a five-reel Mutual Star Production, previously announced, has been postponed. The new release date will be announced later.

"Fantomas" First 3-Reel Serial

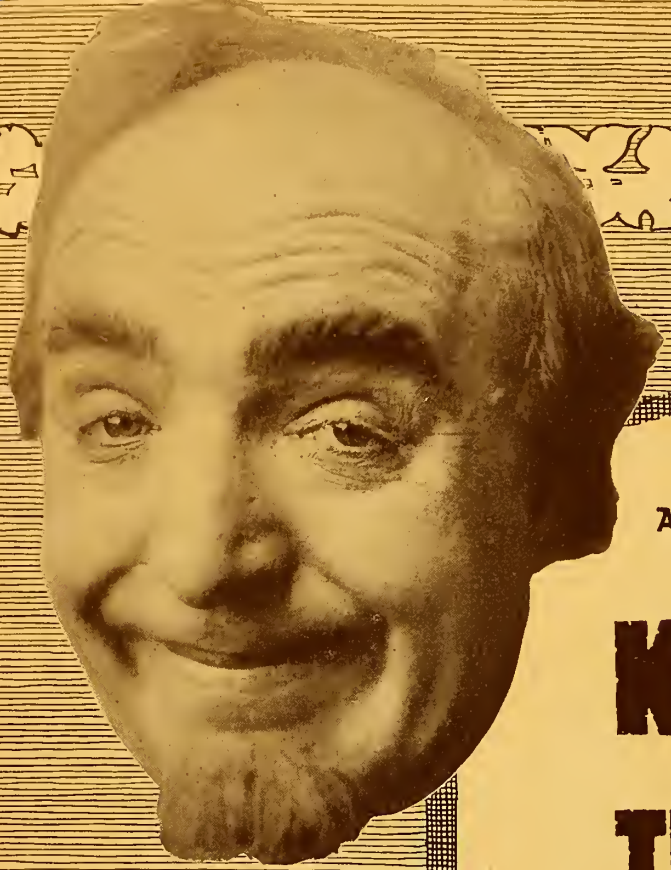
Exhibitors are finding the Gaumont-Mutual series of photoplays featuring the phantom crook, "Fantomas," a tremendous drawing card for their theaters. Thousands of people have been following the stories in a long list of newspapers and are eager to see the stories enacted on the screen. "Fantomas" is in five chapters of three reels each.

Kolb and Dill in Their Second Mutual Star Production

ON MONDAY, September 18, Kolb & Dill, famous German comedians of the vaudeville and musical comedy stage, made their second appearance in a Mutual Star Production. This, like the first, was made at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc. The first one, every exhibitor knows, was a big money getter. The brand of comedy introduced by these noted laugh-makers set all America to chuckling. It was something new in motion pictures. Their second appearance is made in an even funnier five-reel Mutual Star Production.

"The Three Pals"

The second Kolb & Dill release is entitled "The Three Pals." Al Santell wrote the story. Both Kolb and Dill are given unlimited opportunities for the brand of clowning which made them famous. The scene is laid in a wild and lonely district in the West. Later the scene shifts to a gay Chicago cafe on New Year's eve. Mike and Louie, the two characters created by Kolb & Dill, find plenty of chance for comic antics. They also prove they can play on your very heart strings in a pathetic scene of the photoplay. This play, like the first in the Kolb & Dill series of Mutual Star Productions, was directed by Rae Berger. "The Three Pals" is the second of a series of six Kolb & Dill comedies.



"Land o' Lizards" Released This Week Is Thrilling Story of West

Gold, since time began, has been the cause of greed, hatred and blood-lust among mankind. It has separated the best of friends. It has inflamed the passions of men and women. It has created feuds without number. It has caused the death of thousands. Never, perhaps, has the evil it can do been better illustrated than in "Land o' Lizards," the five-reel Mutual Masterpicture released by the American Film Company, Inc., on Monday, September 18. Here is a big red-blooded, thrilling story of Arizona. It is presented by players of real note. It is staged in the exact localities represented on the screen. It is photographed with the crystal clearness that has made American camera work famous.

Enacting important roles in "Land o' Lizards" are Frank Borzage, Anna Little and Jack Richardson. The story tells of the discovery of gold on a stream claimed by the lawless Bar C. outfit. It shows how the outlaw band try to retain the claim, though old Dave Moore and his daughter, "Bobbie," have long been working it. Ward Curtis, president of a big development company, and "the Stranger," a wandering cowboy with a wonderful personality, at last secure the gold claim. They break up the outlaw band. The unfolding of this tale forms a most fascinating screen story. It is a story that will send theater patrons away satisfied. It is a story that will make them long for more of a similar kind.

B.S.MOSS PRESENTS MARGARET NICHOLS IN THE POWER OF EVIL

RELEASED OCT. 1ST.

Could White Slavers Accomplish Their Evil Without The Aid of Strong Liquor?

"The Power of Evil"

Vividly portrays the Acute Human Miseries that stand at the door of

DRINK

Will Future Years Find Us A Society of Degenerates?

"A Father's habit becomes an inheritance of the son—home, loved ones, fortune, innocence—all are dissipated and succumb to his unnatural passions—a degenerate's grave is his BECAUSE HIS FATHER WAS A SLAVE TO DRINK."

Such stories, so common in everyday life, most of us pass unnoticed until some writer of commanding power brings home the lesson—pictures the future—points the danger to our unborn progeny.

Direction of HORKHEIMER BROS.

George Bronson Howard

that master of vigorous expression and daring ideas—Author of "The Follies of 1912," "The Passing Show of 1912," "An Enemy of Society," "Snobs," "The Double Cross," etc., gives voice in to a clamorous protest against the liquor enslavement of the unborn. He approaches the subject from a hitherto neglected angle, and gets home his message in a way that holds attention—prompts thought. talk and discussion after the show.

George Bronson Howard's Straightforward Outspoken Style Is The Secret of His Popularity —and "The Power of Evil", pronounced by many as his greatest work, hits straight from the shoulder with his most powerful punch. It tells a story of absorbing interest—a story of universal appeal.

MOSS FILMS

FOUR blind men of Kut once examined an elephant. "Ah," said the first as he felt of its legs, "an elephant is built like a tree."

"You are wrong, Abdullah," exclaimed the second, fingering a tusk. "An elephant is a long, curved, pointed object."

"Fools," insisted the third, "Elephants are broad, flat things like a wall."

But the fourth, who had been holding the tail, cackled with amusement. "How ridiculously you all talk—an elephant is exactly like a piece of rope."

The blind men who have been producing motion pictures have no conception of the industry. They've only handled little parts of the proposition and each is attempting to measure its possibilities by the evidence of his own narrow experience.

Every one of them has displayed ignorance of its true dimensions.

Otherwise they would never have given me the chance to leap in and revolutionize the system with the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation.

Their day is over unless they adopt my way.

The squarest deal always becomes the standard of success. I have won out because I have let the exhibitor win, too. So must they.

Facts and Comments

PREMIUM swindlers are not so numerous as they used to be but there are too many specimens surviving. These men prey on the exhibitor approaching him with all sorts of alluring promises to improve his business by the distribution of "valuable" prizes. Of course the public which patronizes the motion picture houses never come into direct contact with the premium men; the latter persuade the exhibitor to "underwrite" their plans to the public. It is only an inexperienced or careless exhibitor who will be foolish enough to stand sponsor for the premium promoters. About the best asset an exhibitor can have is the confidence of his public and common sense must tell him to guard this confidence with great vigilance and pealousy. If anything goes wrong with a premium proposition, if the public are fooled or disappointed, the blame will be placed upon the exhibitor who let the "premium" men come into his theater.

WE ARE very tired of the argument that "censorship would be all right if the right kind of censors could be found." Any man who advances such a proposition shows he has failed to grasp the principle involved in all discussion of censorship. "The right kind of censors" are illusions of the mind. One man's views and ideas are as good as another man's provided they do not clash with the law. The original censor of history, the austere and dignified Cato, a real statesman in many respects, became foolish in the eyes of the world when he started to "censor things." The best man or woman living cannot transform a bad principle into a good one.

"I HAD an offer only a short time ago from an exhibitor with a beautiful house costing over fifty thousand dollars absolutely free if I would guarantee the rent of the place for the balance of the term of his lease." We quote this passage from a letter addressed to the editor of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD by an old showman located in the South. With the coming of the fall, with wide-spread prosperity and general resumption of business we hope that this pessimistic echo will die away in the general chorus of the good times.

VOLUMES are being written in the commercial literature of the day all devoted to descriptions of the growing wealth of Latin-America. A glance at the export statistics show vast trade balances in favor of Latin-America, especially the Argentine Republic. We have no accurate information showing to what extent the constant appeal to the American manufacturer has resulted in more intimate trade relations, but we do know that the film field is nearly virgin territory. Even in war time the export of film from Italy to Latin-America has shown an increase. There are about thirty motion picture producers in Italy who sell their films in the Latin-American market. Much of this film is very good and wins on its merits, but it is in no way superior to our product. American producers who want to get into the Latin-American market will find a valuable guide and medium in Cine-Mundial, the Spanish edition of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD which reaches the Latin-American market. A letter to Cine-Mundial might turn out to be a very profitable investment.

"OUR first concern is and always must be to entertain our public," said an exhibitor at a recent meeting in New York. "We are not here to assist in any political propaganda or in the solution of any social problems." We advise exhibitors to use this motto in their advertising. It is a very simple but a very eloquent appeal to the great American public upon whose patronage this industry must always rest. The public do not want to see films with a social or political mission, they do not want ostentatious preachments and "lessons" on the screen. The so-called sociological reform films are in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the flimsiest sort of a pretense any way. Straight and clean entertainment is wanted—we would never show a feature that could not stand up under this simple definition.

Why Beauty Counts

By Louis Reeves Harrison

CATTLE are browsing at the edge of a grass-topped cliff, all engrossed in filling themselves as rapidly as possible with the material needed to sustain life. They eat until they can hold no more, obey blind instincts of self-preservation and perpetuation, rest at intervals and keep on in the eternal round from animal to vegetable and back again, simply a lot of raw material to be transformed in nature's laboratory. They are good business men, who never waste a moment studying the grandeur and beauty spread out at their feet. Of what use the view?

The human being goes beyond the physical development into a complicated browsing on the hillside. He knows that flowers bloom and wither and bloom again, and the idea of death suggests a reawakening in some finer form than that in which he has appeared on earth. Through comprehension of death he begins to understand life, unless he belongs to an intermediate grade of two-legged cattle who possess no spiritual element of growth and change. The finer man knows that he has risen from a state of comparative degradation, from a beginning to which he would never return. Aspiring beyond past and present to a future, his mind reaches out for an explanation of existence and its purpose.

To browse around and get all he can within reach is natural, and it may make him the strongest of his herd, but he must die just as weakly as the rest, to be eternally reconverted in the laboratory unless he can be of service beyond attending simply to his own material needs and desires. How shall he live again in some greater sphere unless some practical reason exists for his advancement to a larger and finer life, unless he joins forces with his creator to start soul growth and improvement in the common herd?

Starting with a selfish motive, figuring on a reward for effort because he can not figure any other way at the beginning, he glances away from his browsing and notes the hungry sea waves below, eternally lapping at the land. His eyes rise to a spreading expanse of ocean that seems to have no limit until it reaches a line of sky. There, at the decline of day, sits a golden lion whose fiery mane rises against a dull background. As it dies, sinking slowly into the sea, a gorgeous palette of color is set up against the sky, only to fade in turn while peeping eyes of gold and of silver watch it from the ever-darkening vault above.

What wonderful color and movement! What does it all mean? The man who has raised his eyes above filling his stomach feels a glow his emotions have never known before. Infinite beauty, time and space are whispering to him for the first time. There is no beginning, no ending, nothing but growth. That far off sun is but an unfailing fount of light and life, the nearer stars but friendly worlds, most of them grander than his own, and beyond them float millions upon millions of groups, more brilliant, more beautiful than his dull little earth, all moving in harmonious response to an invisible will.

With mental expansion comes a bigger and broader interest in that dull little world. He is charmed by the marvelous diversity of flowers; the deep-flowing river has a message; the gossamer veil of falling waters takes on new meaning, and so with the roaring breakers, the ice-capped peak, the verdure-clad prairies, the mysterious woodland. He begins to perceive with his whole soul, until appreciation of beauty and grandeur, however unconscious, becomes vital to his happiness, a sort of fore glimpse of what his heart aches and prays for in secret.

Man observes that vagrant raindrops can be transformed to snowflakes of varied sky-born beauty yet conforming to one law of structure, just as little round pellets of metal scattered on a table become regular in form and arrangement under the influence of radium, just as random impressions in his own mind crystallize into thought, and he begins to attain a god-like knowledge of cause and effect. Springing from the womb of beauty, the very mind he uses in his progress is inspired and guided during its growth by that same universal mother.

When moving pictures first appeared the visualization of movement was in itself such an achievement that it became an end rather than a means. Production was everything. Pictures were no longer a suddenly petrified phase of life, merely suggesting what had led up to that phase and what might follow. But the men who did the picturing were like amateurs with kodaks. A very large proportion of the early releases, far from delighting us and inspiring us with beauty, were hideous and repulsive. We were called upon to wonder, not to feel and admire.

Taste was lacking, taste carried to a high degree and used to express in beautiful form some work of creative genius. Fine taste calls for an unusual amount of imagination, sentiment and reason, three faculties not highly developed in cattle wholly occupied in getting all there is to get. Taste feels intuitively and judges from training that beauty adorns and enriches an expression, but taste does not invent what is to be expressed. Taste may imitate, while true creative power scorns imitation, consumed with the passion of releasing what Socrates calls the "demon within" that burns its way out from the human mind in one striking form or another.

It has often been assumed that the best we can do is to go to nature, but nature did not set that castle in the hill, the heaven pointing spire amid the trees, that steamer ploughing the sea, defying wind and tide, and it is less important to merely picture a twinkling sky full of bright dots than what we feel when we look up into the star-sown heavens at night. We are conscious of that feeling, but it is obscure, its message vague. The interpretation of nature, the interpretation of life, comes from true perception of beauty and that artistry which may not enrich the pocket but surely does the soul.

Beauty in a release makes it less perishable, but it is surer to reach popular appreciation, when applied to the expression of something which powerfully stimulates the human heart and mind. Beauty is not an end, but a means to an end. In a novel the beauty of presentation lies wholly with the author. In a picturing of life on the screen, beauty of presentation can only be suggested by the author, and it is all too often suggested in vain. The director goes to nature for a background, not realizing that the natural may be inharmonious, even insupportable.

It was when man first began to raise his eyes from feeding his immediate necessities that he felt the charm of the infinite as expressed through varied and beautiful forms on earth and in sky. Appreciation of beauty was almost the first step taken in his soul's ascent from purely material occupation. He must still provide for his necessities, but he turns with relief to his vacation in the country, to his evening at the concert, to the story of life as printed, as staged, as represented on the screen that he may enjoy, through beauty, some mental or emotional expansion for which his whole nature craves. He often finds his way to material happiness through the spiritual stimulus of artistry.

Are Short Subjects Coming Back?

By W. Stephen Bush.

I BELIEVE that if a vote were taken in the exhibitors' ranks to decide this question, are short subjects coming back?, neither the "ayes" nor the "noes" would have it and there would be something like a tie. There is no question, however, that very many exhibitors wish for a return of the shorter subjects.

Often the wish is inspired by the recollection of the good old golden days when incomes were big and expenses were small. Often, too, the desire for a return of shorter subjects is prompted by the recollection of the fine quality which used to reside in many of the single reels. All are agreed, too, that features are not an unmixed blessing, that too many of them are outrageously padded, and that there are long and painful intervals between high quality features.

Here is one exhibitor, evidently a careful and experienced student of conditions, who writes to the Moving Picture World and records his emphatic belief that short subjects will never come back. His arguments are interesting and plausible. Says he:

"You hear among the regular program exchanges that the short subjects are coming back. I have been in the show business for more than twenty-five years and I have never yet seen any form of popular-priced amusement ever come back. A matter of twenty years or so back every large city had its melodramatic house where the gallery gods could sit and eat peanuts, cheer the hero and heroine and hiss the heavy man. There were also dozens of popular-priced repertoire shows touring the country, playing one and two week stands in the smaller towns. This branch of the business played out and popular-priced vaudeville came into vogue. A few years ago there was not a town of any size anywhere in the country that did not have its store room vaudeville show. It is foolish to believe that either one of these once popular forms of amusement will ever again attain the popularity that they once enjoyed. It is the same with the pictures. After feeding the people with five and six reel features is it reasonable to suppose that they are ever again going to be satisfied with the short subjects? There is no doubt about there always being a demand in certain locations for the one and two reelers, but their days in the big houses are done."

It seems pretty clear that the feature will hold the centre of the screen for some years to come and that most people will define a feature as a multiple reel to begin with. The feature was both a logical and an artistic development of the motion picture and just as natural as the growth of a healthy tree. I have heard it said that a really clever exhibitor makes every part of his program a feature irrespective of its length. A pretty sentiment, not without a grain of truth, but scarcely defensible in the forum of reason. In nine cases out of ten the backbone of the program must be the feature for the element of length enters into the question of merit in more ways than one. One does not have to argue that with an intelligent exhibitor.

The real question is this: Why can we not have quality in short subjects such quality as we used to have? Quality will assert itself. I have known quality to shine out luminously in a short five hundred feet and be painfully absent from a five reel feature. Short subjects will come back to a greater importance than they enjoy now just as soon as producers will put the old time quality into them and not before. The good serials are good proof for this claim. A serial with sustained quality will make money for the exhibitor. In passing I may remark that serials with sustained quality are few and far between.

After looking impartially over the entire situation I cannot help concluding that as matters stand today there is not as much quality in the average single reel as there is in the average feature. Here and there we see a single reel of excellent quality rise above its mediocre fellows and win uncommon and well deserved praise. Here and there we see a feature fall to a low grade of quality. On the whole, however, the average is pretty well as we have indicated.

We do not believe that short subjects will ever come back into a dominant position in the industry though we say it with becoming diffidence. It never pays to be dogmatic or lightly prophetic in the matter of motion pictures. This industry is delightfully uncertain, though some I fear will want to cut out the adjective.

In the mean time we will be glad to hear from other readers on the subject, a little discussion of so timely and vital a topic may be productive of some good. To our correspondent in Mississippi whose well considered letter has provoked this article we convey the assurances of our gratitude for his suggestions.

The Problem of Distribution

By W. Stephen Bush.

TO US on the inside there is nothing miraculous in the manner in which the fifteen thousand or more motion picture houses of the country are regularly supplied with their needed quantity of films. Even to us on the inside, however, there must be something of the miraculous in this distribution when we give a moment's reflection to the variety which every exhibitor may nowadays secure for his program. Our system of distribution, crude, primitive and costly as it is, after all accomplishes certain results.

Is there any need for continuing the present crude, primitive, costly and altogether unscientific system of distribution? This is the question which is discussed a good deal in exhibiting circles all over the country. The exhibitor feels that he is bearing more than a just and reasonable share of the cost of this distribution. Producers or importers who work independently of any program are confronted with the problem of distribution at every turn. The high cost of distributing bears hardest, however, on the producer whether he belongs to an organized group or whether he travels alone.

It is altogether likely that in the near future the exhibitor may be able to aid in reducing the excessive cost of distribution. The National League has in an informal way considered the question and may at an early date have some excellent suggestions to offer to the producers.

In many quarters the feeling prevails that a combination of exchanges is feasible. In other words a system may be devised whereby one great central distributing station will carry just one set of expenses where now there are several sets of expenses. I have heard of plans to divide the country into nine great zones and have each zone provided with one central distributing station. Each of these big nine central stations is to be provided with several projection rooms in which exhibitors may see in advance the film they wish to have for their programs. These plans, needless to say, are purely speculative, but the very fact that exhibitors and film men generally talk about them makes them interesting. Such a plan might be made to combine the advantages of the open booking sytem with the good points in the programs.

The problem of distribution is made more difficult here than anywhere else by the very bigness of the country. New York and Chicago have advantages over every other city. Exhibitors in other cities very largely have to take their pictures on trust except as they are enlightened by impartial reviews in the Moving Picture World.

The establishment of nine zones would cover the country pretty thoroughly and would enable the exhibitor to do his own choosing on his own judgment.

Lynde Denig, Editor of the Dramatic Mirror

LYNDE DENIG, who joined the staff of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD something more than a year ago, terminates his connection therewith this week to become the editor of the Dramatic Mirror, America's leading dramatic paper, and will presently enter upon his new duties. The WORLD congratulates its contemporary upon securing the services of Mr. Denig for the responsible position of editor. We have lived with him and know him for a gentleman and an able writer. Patient and painstaking in his work, Mr. Denig possesses also that rare quality of "horse sense" which enabled him to avert many unpleasant situations.

In the brief year and a half that Mr. Denig was on the WORLD staff he contributed largely to the WORLD'S department of reviews of current productions, gaining for himself an enviable reputation for fairness and good judgment and for this publication added dependability.

While regretting deeply the departure of Mr. Denig from his place on the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, we join his many friends in congratulating him upon his good fortune in being selected as the head of the editorial department of so reputable a publication as the Dramatic Mirror. It is a merited recognition of his ability. He has the cordial wishes for success of the members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD staff.

General Film Makes Statement

Says No Change Will Be Made in Program of Weekly Releases.

GENERAL Film Company has made preliminary announcement regarding its fall and winter program, in which it is stated there will be no change in its releasing plans; that Selig, Essanay, Lubin, Vitagraph, Kalem, Knickerbocker and Biograph productions will be identified, as heretofore, with General Film Service. The George Kleine and Thomas A. Edison interests with the General Film Company remain identically the same as before. The exact make-up of the program will be announced in a few days.

This means that General Film Company feels that the best interests of exhibitors will be conserved in pursuing the same lines laid down when the present administration under direction of President George Kleine took hold of the reins. The same predominating policy of presenting distinguished stars in short length pictures will prevail. This announcement coming from General Film Company's advertising and publicity department will no doubt be welcomed by exhibitors. The preliminary statement by General Film Company concludes with this paragraph:

"General Film Company purposes to do in the future as it has in the past—lead. It blazed the way, maintained always a commanding position, served faithfully the best interests of exhibitors, won the public's confidence, produced pictures abreast of the times and made it possible for exhibitors to earn liberally in proportion to their investment. A program of variety, quality and consistency, such as is furnished by General Film Service, is responsible in a large degree for the unquestioned popularity of moving pictures today and there is no reason to change this policy. Noted stars in short length productions will be a feature of our fall and winter program. Exhibitors everywhere have indorsed this policy by subscribing to General Film Service and business with the General Film Company has increased steadily. It is a permanent growth due to the excellence of our service. There will be improvements, of course, in the service where improvements is deemed essential and exhibitors will always have the assurance that they are offering a program unequaled by competitors.

"There will be no change in General Film Company's numerous branches covering the United States and Canada and our customers will be served with the same promptness and regularity that has always characterized General Film Service. There will be no waste of printer's ink in conducting a campaign based on braggadocio, but an effective comprehensive advertising campaign calculated to best serve exhibitors has been decided upon. We pledge that General Film Service will be best and we will keep our pledge."

According to Albert E. Smith of Vitigraph, a director of the General Film Company, more than 6,000 theaters are now using General Film Service. This is conceded to be a greater number than is served by any other distributor.

National Association Meeting

United Stand on All Matters by the Members of the National Association Promised by President William A. Brady.

PRACTICALLY one hundred per cent. representation of motion picture producers in the membership of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was promised by President William A. Brady at a meeting held in the association's headquarters in the Times Building on Wednesday afternoon. This meeting was attended by representatives of thirty-five of the largest producing companies in the industry and was called for the purpose of appointing various committees, one of which is to be devoted to each important phase of the industry.

The meeting was remarkable for the number of prominent men it brought out, among them being President William A. Brady, World Film Corporation; Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; P. A. Powers, Universal; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Co.; W. E. Shallenberger, Arrow Film Corporation; Edwin Thanhouser, Thanhouser Films; Carl H. Pierce, Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co.; H. K. Tootle, Gaumont Co.; Randolph Bartlett, Brennon Film Corporation; John F. Miller, Niagara Film Service; W. J. Wright, Kalem Corporation; G. H. Wiley, Van Dyke Picture Co.; Geo. Ridgewell, Sunbeam Film Co.; L. D. Willis, Fox Film; A. Lorrimore, representing Thomas H. Ince; Eugene B. Sanger, Sanger Picture Plays Corp.; Hamilton Smith, Chester Beecroft, representing Mr. Freuler of Mutual; Theodore Wharton, J. W. Buck, L. D. Wharton, Wharton, Inc.; P. A. Parsons, Pathe; Frank Powell, Powell Productions; Louis B. Jennings, American Film Laboratories; H. M. Goetz, Erbograph Co.; Mr. Feely, Florida Pictures Corp.; Mr. LeVino, Arrow Film Co.; J. O. Walsh, U. S. Motion Picture Corp.; Mr. Bolster, Vitagraph Co.; Jesse J. Goldberg, Rialto; C. R. Macauley, Kineticartoon Corp.; W. H. Kembel, Brooklyn Triangle; William M. Seabury, general counsel; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary.

A united front upon such vital questions as censorship was also promised by President Brady, who stated that though some difference of opinion upon censorship existed among the members of the association, every one was agreed that the opinion of the majority should prevail.

Special efforts were urged to secure as many new memberships as possible from among those eligible who have not yet joined with the result that seventeen membership applications were received at the meeting.

The election of an executive committee and the appointment of other committees was postponed until the meeting to be held on Thursday, September 14, at 3.30 P. M.

William M. Seabury, general counsel, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, were appointed as a committee to attend the Convention of the League of American Municipalities in Newark, N. J., on Thursday, Sept. 7, and to learn, if possible, the kind of corporation the mayors and other city officials individually desire from the motion picture manufacturers. P. A. Parsons was appointed a committee of one to secure co-operation from the trade papers in the way of proper mention of the meeting, its purpose, and the meeting to be held next week.

HUDSON COUNTY EXHIBITORS MEET.

A well attended meeting of the Hudson County Exhibitors League of New Jersey was held on Thursday, September 7, at their headquarters on Central avenue, Jersey City. The most important matter considered was the tendency to take the most popular stars out of the regular program and to use them in special features for which very high prices are asked, while the prices of the regular programs on which these stars formerly appeared remains unchanged.

A combination is now being formed by this league to book these special features jointly, providing a price can be obtained from the exchange which will be fair to both the exchange and the exhibitor. Each feature will be handled separately, and if satisfactory terms cannot be made to the entire combination the members are pledged, secured by a deposit, not to use that particular picture in their houses. This combination can already offer the exchange forty days in Hudson County.

Recognition of the operators' union was also brought up for discussion and the feeling of the exhibitors seems inclined toward the union's recognition, provided a satisfactory working basis could be arranged.

Congress Passes Federal Tax Bill

By C. L. Linz

The Measure, as Finally Adopted, is Material Modification of Original House Proposition and Similar to Old Law—Anti-Dumping Clause Inserted

CONGRESS has heeded the plea of the motion picture exhibitors and the theatrical men of the United States and has laid aside the proposition of the House of Representatives to place a tax upon theaters located in places having a population in excess of three thousand people of one-half of one per cent. of the gross profits derived from admissions, and has adopted the proposition of the Senate, based largely on the present law, but even more satisfactory, which reads as follows:

> "Proprietors of theaters, museums and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than two hundred and fifty, shall pay $25; having a seating capacity of more than two hundred and fifty and not exceeding five hundred, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity exceeding five hundred and not exceeding eight hundred, shall pay $75; having a seating capacity of more than eight hundred, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater: PROVIDED, That in cities, towns, or villages of five thousand inhabitants or less the amount of such payment shall be one-half of that above stated: Provided further, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease."

The above provisions are contained in the so-called general revenue bill which was enacted into law by Congress on Friday, September 8.

Senator Smoot, of Utah, when the provision was pending before the Senate, sought to have the rates lowered, telling his colleagues that he considered them exceedingly high with respect to the houses in the smaller cities. "I notice," he said, "the provision which reads 'That in cities, towns, or villages of 5,000 inhabitants or less the amount of such payment shall be one-half of that above stated.' That helps considerably. But the smaller cities and the cities containing between 5.000 and 10.000 inhabitants are not taken care of; and I will say that I have correspondence that shows that in cities having between 5.000 and 10,000 inhabitants, basing the number of amusement houses on the population, there are more of them than there are in the smaller cities of under 5,000 inhabitants; in other words, there is more competition as to theaters or amusement places in cities of that size than there is in the smaller cities."

Senator Smoot, unfortunately, was unable either to have all of the rates reduced, or to have the half-rates provision extended to include places of amusement in towns having a population of up to 10.000. as above referred to.

Senator Smith, of Georgia, answering Senator Smoot, stated that while his statements of competition with respect to the number of houses might be true, they come very much nearer running all the time. "We took up the House bill," he said, "and our subcommittee heard representatives of the amusement halls and of the theaters, and we found that they very much preferred the old law. The only complaint we had against the old law from them was that in the smaller towns, where the theaters run only a part of the time, they were overtaxed. Then I sought to find from them a measure of the size of the town which would run its theater and amusement halls only about half the time; and from the information they gave us, we decided on 5 000 inhabitants as the size of what was the proper basis of distinction.

"I wish to say that since we adopted this modification I have had letters from amusement people, but not a single objection to the modified provision. Of course, they, like everybody else, would rather not pay any tax at all; but they seem to think that we are now treating them very fairly.

"The trouble about the House provision is that while it was based upon receipts, it was the gross receipts, and not the net receipts. We first tried to change it to net receipts, but there we found the trouble was that many of the smaller amusement houses kept no books and that there was really no way to tell what the net receipts were. The responsibility was largely devolved upon me to try to reach an equitable and fair mode if we were going to keep any of the tax at all. We then decided that this was the fairest way in which to proceed, unless we extempted them altogether. We needed the revenue, and, therefore, did not think we could exempt them."

Exhibitors and exchangemen are alike pleased with the fact that they will not be called upon to pay the penny tax upon all express receipts, freight bills of lading, and telephone and telegraph messages where the charges amount to fifteen cents or more. While it was up to their employees to see to it that the stamps were placed upon each of the two former used, they became careless and the writer knows it to be a fact that many of the larger patrons of the express companies and railroads faced prosecution for a violation of the law in not having their receipts properly stamped. It was also the duty of the employees of the transportation companies to see to it that the stamps were properly used, but they also became careless.

Importers of films and other materials made or produced in foreign countries are to be taxed upon the entry of any such, at any custom house, either for consumption or warehousing, 25 cents when not exceeding $100; 50 cents when exceeding $100, but not $500 in value, and $1 for all values above the latter amount.

It is also provided that every seat sold in a palace or parlor car and every berth sold in a sleeping car shall be taxed one cent, to be paid by the company selling the same.

Congress has also provided against unfair competition at the close of the present European War, and members of the trade in all its branches are interested in the plans for protecting the film industry in the United States under the following provisions:

> That it shall be unlawful for any person importing or assisting in importing any articles from any foreign country into the United States, commonly and systematically to import, sell, or cause to be imported or sold such articles within the United States at a price substantially less than the market value or wholesale price of such articles, at the time of exportation to the United States, in the principal markets of the country of their production, or of other foreign countries to which they are commonly exported, after adding to such market value or wholesale price, freight, duty, and other charges and expenses necessarily incident to the importation and sale thereof in the United States: PROVIDED, That such act or acts be done with the intent of destroying or injuring an industry in the United States, or of preventing the establishment of an industry in the United States, or of restraining or of monopolizing any part of trade and commerce in the United States.
> Any person who violates or combines or conspires with any other person to violate this section is guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.
> Any person injured in his business or property by reason of any violation of, or combination or conspiracy to violate, this section, may sue therefor in the district court of the United States for the district in which the defendant resides, or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages sustained, and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.
> The foregoing provisions shall not be construed to deprive the proper State courts of jurisdiction in actions for damages thereunder.

"Intolerance" World's Greatest Motion Picture

Reviewed by Lynde Denig

Griffith Surpasses Himself by a Spectacular Masterpiece in Which All Traditions of Dramatic Form Are Successfully Revolutionized

UNLIKE anything that has been produced in the past, massive beyond all precedent, well-nigh universal in its scope, perfect in detail, astoundingly magnificent at one moment and intimately human the next, D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance," now being displayed at the Liberty theater, is the greatest motion picture ever made. Compared to this stupendous production that has human nature during all ages for its theme, "The Birth of a Nation" is local and partisan; nor is there anything in Italy's masterpiece, "Cabiria" to equal the battle before the walls of Babylon, to mention but one of the many tremendous effects in "Intolerance." If Griffith never made another picture his would be the credit for bringing pre-eminence to America as the source of an unexcelled spectacle.

Original Method of Construction.

Sticklers for dramatic form as applied to the stage will find "Intolerance" hopelessly revolutionary. Griffith discarded accepted conventions and worked along his own lines in using an almost bewildering succession of significant pictures to stimulate the mind. The purpose of the picture as outlined by the producer is "to trace a universal theme through various periods of the race's history. Ancient, sacred, medieval and modern times are considered. Events are not set forth in their historical sequence, or according to accepted forms of dramatic construction, but as they might flash across a mind seeking to parallel the life of the different ages.

"There are four separate stories, each with its own set of characters. Following the introduction of each period there are subsequent interruptions as the different stories develop along similar lines, switching from one of the other as the mind might do while contemplating such a theme. Through the ages time brings forth the same passions, the same joys and sorrows, the same hopes and anxieties—symbolized by the cradle 'endlessly rocking.'"

True to Mental Processes.

Such is the manner in which the producer summarizes his idea, but the construction of the picture, and its reaction on the spectator invites further analysis. Supposing a student of character and history devotes an evening's conversation to convincing a friend—his equal in intelligence—that intolerance has been one of the great curses of humanity since the world began. Instead of theorizing he cites definite instances in different periods of history, and under the magic of his words his friend visualizes first this tragedy, then that, all bearing out the argument that intolerance of other men's beliefs has been responsible for much of the misery in the world. During a discussion of this kind, the mind, in pursuing a conservative train of thought, does not follow uninterruptedly the life story of the same set of characters. Rather it leaps from one memory to another, regardless of time and place, and finds illustrations substantiating or refuting the argument.

Probably Griffith had such normal mental processes in view when he constructed "Intolerance" without regard for dramatic laws. He used the screen as a reflection of an extraordinarily quick and cultivated mind, supplying pictures that give a superb visualization of happenings that most of us could only dimly conceive, because of a deficiency in knowledge or imagination. Time and again, a scene in Babylon, or in Judea, or in medieval France is cut at a critical point in the acton and we leap into the struggles of Twentieth century victims of intolerance. It is a daring method of construction, though true to mental reactions and effective.

Human Interest in Abundance.

But it should not be gathered that the picture is an argument without personal appeal. The present day illustration of intolerance, and the chief in point of story interest, concerns social problems much in the fore—strikes, crime as the result of environment and the harm done by meddling, hypocritical reformers, to whom so-called charity is a fad carrying with it a certain social prestige. These modern Pharisees, who place bronze tablets on their million-dollar institutions and pry into the lives of defenseless victims of low wages in factories owned by philanthropic magnates, are ridiculed broadly and through subtle irony.

Then in creating sympathy for the characters, Griffith used a quantity of the suggestive, poignant close-ups for which he is famous; he cut the scenes short, eliminating everything that did not have a necessary place in the action, and to keep up a high pitch of excitement he occasionally moved the figures at an impossible speed. No doubt this quick movement is justifiable during a charge of soldiers, such as that of Cyrus and his hosts in the assault on Babylon; but it appears unnatural in a scene play by two figures in a room.

Marvelous Spectacular Effects.

If the human note is most surely realized in the last of the four stories, the other three, besides enforcing the contention that intolerance has always been a great menace to happiness, offer opportunities for some of the most thrilling and historically correct spectacles ever offered an audience through any medium. In depicting incidents in the life of Christ and his crucifixion there are many beautiful scenes, at once reverent and impressive. Events preceding and during the massacre of the Hugenots, also are presented with startling vividness; but the picture reaches its spectacular heights in showing Babylonian civilization, its luxury, degeneracy and ultimate fall at the hands of Cyrus.

It is almost unbelievable that such magnificent structures as Belshazzar's banquet hall could have been erected in California. They give a new idea of the possibilities for depth and richness in pictures. And greater yet, really the master accomplishment of the production, are the scenes showing the assaults on the walls of the doomed city. Nothing known to ancient warfare is omitted in the attack of Cyrus and his army. Mammoth siege towers are moved against the wall, rocks are hurled on the heads of the attacking legions, monster engines of fire are utilized in the defense, the screen fairly blazes with conflict, until, almost as though it were toppling over into the orchestra of the theater, one of the siege towers falls and Babylon is saved from the first attack. Tremendous as is the climax to the second act, the final and successful assault of Cyrus is not robbed of its power to thrill.

Acting Is Notably Fine.

In a production of this description where thousands of men and women contribute to the total impression, individual performances are naturally relegated to secondary consideration; but not in this instance, because of lack of merit. The playing of Mae Marsh as the girl of the modern story is, if anything, more expressive than her work in "The Birth of a Nation." Robert Harron is an ideal exponent of the boy, and included in the long cast are such familiar names as Lillian Gish, Tully Marshall, Spottiswoode Aitken, Constance Talmadge, Bessie Love and a dozen others who contributed to the perfection of detail in difficult characterizations. G. W. Bitzer, head of the camera staff, achieved cloud effects and splendid bits of lighting that possess the double attraction of novelty and beauty.

The one regret in considering a picture of such magnitude and appealing to audiences of all classes is the absence of a more hopeful philosophy than one gathers from "Intolerance." To be sure there are some sunlight, merry scenes at the very close; but they do not dissipate the impression left by a display of the innate meanness in the dominant element of mankind. This, however, was inevitable, for granting the choice of such a subject, the producer could do nothing but carry it through consistently, as he did in the most memorable and wonderful of all photoplay creations.

Opening Night a Motion Picture Function.

It was a brilliant assemblage of the leading lights of New York's motion picture world that attended the opening performance of "Intolerance" at the Liberty theater Tuesday evening, September 5. To name here all who were present would constitute a roster of film notables, but the greater they were the harder they fell under the spell of the great Griffith spectacle. It is said of William R. Hearst that previous to the performance he had ordered that two hundred words on the opening be wired to all Hearst papers, which he increased to five hundred after the first part had been shown; but when the big scenes of the second part had flashed past he hurried out and telephoned an order for one thousand words, which is going some for any first-night performance.

Throughout the presentation the audience followed the unfolding of the subject with breathless interest, but broke into enthusiastic cheers at the close of the second part following up the demonstration with insistent calls for "Griffith, Griffith," until the master director appeared in front of the curtain and expressed his thanks for the great appreciation.

Beyond a realization that the most elaborate, even stupendous motion picture production had been shown them, few in the audience ventured that night to express their opinion of its greatness, so profound an impression did it make. The best substance of opinion is expressed in the following extracts from the New York daily papers, all of which gave liberal space to their reviews:

Charles Darnton in the Evening World.—Once again D. W. Griffith proved himself the ruling genius of the motion picture world. "Intolerance" is nothing less than wonderful.

Louis Sherwin in the Globe.—With "The Birth of a Nation" D. W. Griffith set a standard that everybody admired and all his rivals envied. With "Intolerance" he goes a step further and sets a new standard. As a spectacle its success is complete. Especially in the Babylonian scenes. The attack of the army of Cyrus upon Babylon, the fight on the walls, and the first victory of the defenders are really breath taking. The pictures are not only thrilling and magnificent but as far as research and human ingenuity can contrive they are also authentic.

T. E. Oliphant in the Evening Mail.—No one will be accused of rashness of statement in averring that never before has the American theater witnessed so stupendous a spectacle.

Zit in the American.—To say that this newest spectacle, "Intolerance," startled even the most skeptical of first nighters is hardly a beginning, so far as praise of such an effort goes. The picture is so gigantic in spectacle, so universal in theme and so diversified in content that it seems almost impossible to believe that the brain of one man directed and planned it all. The picture was a surprise to those looking for a picture of the ordinary calibre, for its presentation was highly novel.

The Evening Sun.—There was no question of the enthusiasm roused by the spectacles. But the discussion of the modern story began in the audience between the acts and is likely to rouse as much difference of opinion as did the race issue in Griffith's earlier piece, "The Birth of a Nation." In this modern story he frankly attacks the great philanthropic "foundations" and even gets in a side slap at one of the institutions of city government, the Children's Court, which he charges with parting a loving mother who had done no wrong of any kind, from her child.

The Evening Telegram.—Mr. Griffith has even succeeded in surpassing his famous film, "The Birth of a Nation." "Intolerance" is likely to have a long and prosperous run that will doubtless eclipse the record made by "The Birth of a Nation" in the same playhouse.

Heywood Broun in the Tribune.—It should be remarked that the genius of this film director does not lie only in the handling of mass effects. Indeed, much of the effectiveness of his pictures lies in the manner in which he will drop a big effect to hammer home an interesting detail. In all the technical aspects of screen photography the picture is remarkable.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG BEGINS NEW PRODUCTION.

With the first of her own company's productions, "The Common Law," being cut and assembled, Clara Kimball Young this week began work at the Blache Studio, Fort Lee, N. J., on her second picture, an adaptation of Thomas Dixon's powerful novel, "The Foolish Virgin."

The cast for this new Selznick picture has been partly selected by Miss Young and Director General Albert Capellani, and before the end of the week all the principals in the picture will have been engaged. The story of "The Foolish Virgin" is expected to make an even stronger picture than "The Common Law," owing to its wide range of characterization and the intensity of its dramatic situation.

Arrangements are being made by Mr. Lewis J. Selznick to give an invitation showing of "The Common Law" at one of the leading Broadway theaters within the next two weeks. This will be followed by a reception at the recently completed offices of Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc., on the fourteenth floor of the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue.

BUSHMAN DIRECTING HIS OWN PRODUCTION.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, the popular Metro stars, who recently completed the stellar roles in the stupendous screen production of "Romeo and Juliet," are now at work on a five-part Metro Quality feature called "A Diplomatic Romance." Mr. Bushman is directing the production and he collaborated in the writing of the scenario. When "A Diplomatic Romance" is completed Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne will begin work on the big serial which is being prepared for them. W. Christy Cabanne, for many years David W. Griffith's first lieutenant, and recently the foremost director with the Fine Arts in the Triangle company, will direct the Bushman-Bayne serial.

Lee Dougherty Recalls Early Days

During Nineteen Years With Biograph, the Manager of Productions Worked With Griffith and Contributed to the Advancement of Many Stars

AFTER nineteen years of service with the Biograph Company, during which time he has been a factor in the development of the motion picture from a trivial entertainment into an important art, Lee Dougherty has resigned, because, according to the Biograph's present plans, there is no immediate need for a manager of productions, a position held by Mr. Dougherty since the days when Griffith was an unknown actor and Mary Pickford an undiscovered child.

Lee Dougherty.

When pictures flickering across a white sheet were a curiosity, Mr. Dougherty, in a small way, became one of the first, if not the first, exhibitor in the country. That was in 1896 at the Boston Museum where, between the acts of a musical comedy, he showed a few feet of chase scenes much to the delight of a mystified audience. About a year later, having become a member of the Biograph organization, he went on a lecture tour with some of the best of the company's early product, and not long after that he was made stage manager of the companies producing the Mutascope, "one-minute" comedies, an event that really marked Mr. Dougherty's beginning as a maker of pictures.

In recalling the old days he said: "The first long film, running about 650 feet, was called "Personal" and it drew so well at Keith's Union Square theater that the stay of five weeks might have been profitably extended. We followed this with 'the Lost Child,' which was considered very good at the time, but we were having much trouble in finding competent directors, for men recruited from the stage knew nothing about screen requirements and they were rather slow to learn.

"About this time an actor who had been playing small parts at the Fourteenth Street studio, said that he would like to have a try at making a picture. In our efforts to locate a competent director, H. N. Marvin, J. J. Kennedy and myself had decided to test each applicant by giving him a script and allowing him to produce it in his own way that we might judge by results. Several had failed—among them some who have succeeded since—so without expecting anything to come of it, we gave the new man a chance with a complicated scenario called 'The Adventures of Dolly.'

"The actors in the studio were not at all disposed to see one of their number succeed in a position of authority. Their attitude was so unfriendly that the embryo director said he would visit Broadway and muster his own company. At the corner of Forty-second street he met Arthur Johnson, who accepted his offer to act before the camera. He continued the search until the company was complete; then made the picture according to his own ideas. It was a big surprise and needless to say the director was Lawrence Griffith, as he was called at that time. We concluded that if his second picture was as good as the first, he was the man we wanted. As a matter of fact, it turned out better, and after that there never was any question about Griffith's standing with Mr. Kennedy and other officials of the Biograph company, although his theories and methods were consistently opposed by practically everybody else in the business.

"During those years I filled two positions, production manager and press representative, and in the first capacity I was constantly in touch with Griffith. Instead of following a scenario, he took the rough sketch of a story and we would work it out together, always subject to change, for if some actor made a particular impression during a rehearsal, the story might be altered in order to bring out the full strength of the character. It sounds conventional to praise Griffith in these days of his fame, but the fact remains that he virtually started as well as carried on the advancement of the art of photoplays.

"Popular opinion credits him with unfailing discernment in the selection of players, and of course it is justified, for nine-tenths of the screen stars served an apprenticeship in the Biograph studio; but one star he was very slow to see. When Blanche Sweet first appeared at the Fourteenth Street studio, she was a mere undeveloped child, but some of us insisted that she had big possibilities. I did for one, and Frank Powell, who was assistant director at the time, agreed with me. Griffith said 'No.' He declared that she had no feeling and no soul, and it was a full year before he conceded her promise as an actress. If I remember correctly, 'The Lonedale Operator' was the first picture in which Miss Sweet convinced the producer of her worth."

Mr. Dougherty talks modestly of his own accomplishments with Biograph, although for nineteen years he has been supervising all of the producing companies, passing judgment on the completed product, editing and writing titles. In addition to all this he discovered adjectives for use in press work that caused him to be referred to as the "Tody Hamilton of the picture business."

Matt Moore

MATT MOORE, the well-known director and star, has resigned from the Universal Company, with which concern he has been associated for the past three years. Under the direction of Stuart Paton, Mr. Moore recently finished "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," which has been in the working for the past year and a half. The picture is said to be most novel and artistic. It is in twelve reels, and many of the scenes were taken under the water in the Bahama Islands. Jane Gail and Mr. Moore are co-starred in this production.

Matt Moore.

Mr. Moore is rated one of the most popular leading men. Three years ago, when he first joined the Universal, he and Jane Gail were co-starred in a number of feature productions directed by George L. Tucker, among them "Traffic in Souls." When Mr. Tucker and Miss Gail went to London, Mr. Moore became leading man for Florence Lawrence, with whom he remained a year, afterward joining Mary Fuller.

Mr. Moore has also directed a number of pictures in which he and Miss Gail played, among them "The Little Lady Across the Way," "The Poet's Progress," "Too Many Brides," "Her Invisible Husband," "Why Mr. Kentworthy Lied" and many other feature productions.

Mr. Moore has not announced his plans for the future, but is considering an offer to star in a serial which is said to contain one most novel and original idea. He is expected in New York within a few days.

ANITA STEWART CONVALESCENT.

Anita Stewart, whose recent illness alarmed her friends and admirers all over the world, is recovering her strength in the Catskill mountains and expects to return to her work at the Vitagraph studio about October 1. In the meantime Director S. Rankin Drew is resuming scenes in "The Girl Phillipa," and will finish those requiring all members of the cast except Miss Stewart, and will pick up the scenes in which she takes part when she returns.

Universal Completes Submarine Spectacle

Production Made in Conjunction With Williamson Brothers Represents Work of Two Years—Remarkable Effects.

A REMARKABLE production which has just been completed by the Universal Film Company will prove beyond all question that the world has at last bowed to the will of man, and that the sea, like everything else, has given up its secrets. During the closing of the year 1914 a company, headed by Stuart Paton, and consisting of Jane Gail, Edna Pendleton, Matt Moore, Howard Crampton, William Welsh, Curtis Benton and others, left New York for the Bahamas. They expected to make their headquarters at Nassau and remain away about eight weeks. But before they returned they hoped to have the greatest production in the history of filmdom recorded on spools of celluloid.

In addition to the actors there journeyed with the company two scientists, George and Ernest Williamson, who startled the country a few months previously when they announced to the world they had completed a submarine chamber, which could be lowered to a depth of from 150 to 200 feet below the surface of the water and photographs taken from behind the great glass disc.

The drama which Paton was to direct had been written by him around this great invention, and for the first time in the history of the world a moving picture company were to enact their roles on the bottom of the sea and a camera was to record the film down in the home of old man Neptune.

It was in the harbor of Nassau that the Williamson brothers first demonstrated to the world that undersea photography was not a probability nor a possibility, but a wonderful reality. So successful had been this expedition that Stuart Paton decided he would write a photoplay of adventure with most of its action far below the keel of passing steamers.

He communicated with the Williamsons, who a couple of days later appeared in New York. The famous inventors read the script carefully and told the officials of the Universal they would guarantee to see that every scene which called for action beneath the water was successfully carried out. For their work in connection with this adventure they would charge $100,000. They would go to Nassau with Paton, build a submarine chamber and remain there, looking after this particular part of the production until the picture was finished.

The greatest "sea devils" in the world were at that moment in Honolulu trying to raise the submarine F-4, which had gone down in that harbor several weeks before. They were the Stillson divers, employed by the government, under the direction of George D. Stillson, recognized as the greatest diver in existence. By special permit they were released by the government for a two months' leave of absence.

Arriving at Nassau on December 14, 1914, the Paton company was met by a peculiar gathering. The natives, although subjects of the British flag, are suspicious and superstitious.

After the islanders had been quieted the rest looked simple. Day and night the Paton company worked building houses, rafts, submarines, and "sets," while the Williamsons looked after the making of a mammoth barge to hold their submarine chamber.

The brothers had brought with them two immense glass discs, made in France, each one five feet in diameter and one and a half inches thick, for the observation window; also a battery of nine Cooper-Hewitt lights arranged in a gridiron, each light having 2,400 candle power, these to be lowered for extra submarine illumination, should that be necessary. As a matter of fact it was not necessary, and these artificial lights were scarcely used, owing to the wonderful clearness of the West Indian sea even at considerable depths.

This tube represents strength and flexibility. This was obtained by overlapping steel scales of malleable iron about a foot apart that formed the skeleton of the tube. Over this metallic structure was securely fastened a waterproof fabric of canvas and rubber, the result being a permanently open airshaft down into the sea, a vertical passageway into which a man might step from the deck of the barge and down which he might climb exactly as one climbs down a ladder.

There was no discomfort from breathing the air as it was not compressed. The top of the tube remained open at the deck level like the top of a well, the sides and the bottom being strong enough to resist the pressure of the ocean.

At its lower end the tube expanded into a spherical observation chamber five feet in diameter, one side of which was provided with a large funnel-shaped window. This observation chamber was made of castiron and weighed four tons. While the submarine photographic work was in progress two persons usually occupied this chamber at the same time, Cameraman Brulatier taking the pictures through the heavy glass window and Director Paton signaling to the actors on the bed of the ocean, and giving directions to the deck crew above. A simple ventilating device freshened the air so that both could remain below indefinitely. The raising and lowering of the chamber was controlled by two chains that were attached to the chamber, and ran to chain hoists on the deck, which shifted the position of the chamber, following the wish of the director below.

It took three or four days for the Paton company to prepare everything for the submarine work. The first thing the Williamsons had to do was to place the observation chamber in position in the shaft, and this was rather a slow beginning, as the chamber was heavy and had to be lifted with big steel cranes. While this was being done Paton was engaged in taking some of the "exteriors" with Matt Moore and Jane Gail on the island. In some of these scenes the entire population of eighteen thousand natives was used.

On the day the first scene was taken beneath the water the towing steamer brought the barge, with the submarine chamber, to a distance within a few yards of a yacht, the Loando, which had been purchased in New York for $20,000 and taken to Nassau under her own steam. On this yacht was Matt Moore and Jane Gail. A submarine, which had been built at Nassau, and made after a government design, rammed the yacht and as it was burning Matt Moore and Jane Gail dove overboard near the barge and were caught by the cameraman as they descended to the bottom right in front of the submarine chamber.

While the company was at Nassau some excellent pictures were taken of the action underneath the water, which will mystify the audiences when the production makes its appearance. Divers are shown at work on the bed of the ocean; we see them walk along the floor of the sea carrying one of the members who has been killed by the enemy and watch them bury his body among the coral beds of Nassau Harbor, which are known to be the most beautiful in the world. Greater than this is the actual battle which takes place on the bed of the ocean, with the fighters using rifles! We watch the men firing on each other and see the smoke from their rifles! We wonder how it is done, but that is a secret which Stuart Paton refuses to divulge, but it is only one of many surprises we get in this picture.

The effects which Paton introduced include the destruction of two yachts which cost $20,000 each, four balloons, which made night ascensions from Nassau and scared every native, besides sending a submarine to the bottom of the harbor, where he afterward took pictures of it as it laid on the bed among the coral gardens.

After spending many weeks at Nassau the Paton company returned to New York and worked at the Universal studios at Leonia. From there they went to Universal City, where the remaning scenes were taken. The picture will be released some time in October. Over 300,000 feet of film have been taken up to the present.

The name of the production and its plot are being kept a strict secret by the producers, but they declare nothing ever attempted by film manufacturers in the past will compare with this mysterious picture, which has been nearly two years in the making.

"Billy" Sherwood, Versatile Player

ONE of the popular juvenile leads of filmdom is William (Billy) Sherwood, at present with the World Film Corporation playing as Ethel Clayton's brother opposite to Carlyle Blackwell in "The New South." Mr. Sherwood is himself a Southerner, for he was born in New Orleans on October 10 in the "Eighteen-Nineties" some time. Small things show early indications of what is in a man and Billy surprised himself by winning a school medal in 1903 for reciting "The Polish Boy." Later when "Old High" senior class put on Shakespeare's Henry IV., they gave him the heavy role. Of course a boy with experience would be in demand at college for dramatic parts and when Billy got to Tulane College he had some excellent chances.

Billy Sherwood.

A new film company came to New Orleans while he was at Tulane and Billy left college for the studio. He wasn't in luck. The concern lasted hardly two weeks after he joined it, so he came to New York and played any parts he could get at first, but this wasn't to be for long. Much better roles were soon coming his way as his ability became better recognized. He has played with the George Kleine Company, with the Kalem, opposite to Marguerite Courtot, and with Edison, opposite Grace Williams. His more recent parts have been as "the best man" in the Famous Players picture, "The Lost Bridegroom," featuring Jack Barrymore, under the direction of James Kirkwood. Then he played the juvenile lead in "The Spell of the Yukon," a Metro, Popular Plays and Players film, starring Edmund Breese. He had a lead in "Beyond Recall," a Pathe (Arrow Film) picture starring Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore, directed by Howard Hansel.

BOSTON FILM MEN HERE.

H. G. Segal, secretary and general manager of the Globe Feature Film Corporation, Boston, Mass., and his associates, Edward D. Levinton and Benjamin J. Shoolman, arrived at the McAlpin Hotel, New York City, Sunday, September 10, to spend the entire week reviewing pictures to be handled by them in the New England States. Mr. Segal and his party left Boston Saturday afternoon, via automobile.

Lasky Studio Busiest in History

Seven Well-Known Directors Busy on As Many Productions —Companies Headed by Noted Stars.

EXPANSION in every direction at the Lasky studios in Hollywood, Cal., has been, for the first time in the history of the organization, the constant employment of seven directors on productions for the Paramount Program. In days gone by as many as six directors have worked at one time on the two massive open air and glass-covered stages; but with the engagement last week of Marshall Neilan, seven separate companies are now operating.

The entire producing organization is under the general directorship of C. B. DeMille. The other directors are George Melford, Frank Reicher, William C. DeMille, James Young, Edward J. Le Saint and Marshall Neilan.

George Melford, upon the completion of the production of "Each Pearl a Tear," of which Fannie Ward is the star, has started work on Blanche Sweet's new production, entitled "A Woman's Victory." Frank Reicher is completing the Columbia University-Lasky prize photoplay, "Witchcraft," which will be Fannie Ward's next starring feature to be released on the Paramount Program in October. This is a massive production, the scenes of which are laid in an early New England village at the time when superstition led to the persecution of aged people among the early Puritans.

Marie Doro is completing, under the direction of James Young, an elaborate photoplay by Paul West, entitled "The Lash," the scenes of which are laid on the Coast of Brittany and Paris. "The Lash" also is an October release on the Paramount Program.

Following the sensational success of Lou-Tellegen in "The Victory of Conscience," the star is completing, under the direction of Edward Le Saint, a picture version of "The Victoria Cross" by Paul Potter.

William DeMille is directing the new co-stars, Thomas Meighan and Anita King, in "The Heir to the Hoorah." The scenes of this picture are being made in the Asierra, Nevada, Mountains.

Mr. Neilan's first picture will be "The Tides of Barnegat," in which Blanche Sweet appears as the star.

UNIVERSAL BUYS BRAND WHITLOCK STORIES.

Recent purchases in the Universal scenario department include the twelve stories from the pen of the eminent American Minister to Belgium, the Hon. Brand Whitlock. As a follower in the footsteps of the famous "Golden Rule Jones," he made great strides forward in municipal reform. His book, "The Turn of the Balance," an earnest argument against capital punishment, created a sensation. A five-reel play, entitled "Lady Eldone's Daughter," also has been purchased from Lois Zellner, whose recent release, "The Innocent Lie," was a Famous Players' production. "Lady Eldone's Daughter" is intended as a vehicle for Violet Mersereau, the dainty little ingenue who is at present working at the Fort Lee studio.

Another play from the pen of Willard Bradley, the mayor of Greenwich Village, has been bought, entitled "A Little Nomad." Mr. Bradley is the author who captured a top-notch price with his story, "The Beloved Imp," $1,200 being paid recently by the Universal for the synopsis.

"His Mother's People," by J. R. Burky, will probably be used as a Bluebird feature. It is an exquisite story of false pride and great mother love. The Indian mother slaves to educate her half-bred son as his white father would have wished. The boy is ashamed of her, but at last awakens to a realization of her true greatness. Other purchases include: "The Dreamers," by F. Eugene Ackerman; "The Price of Silence," from Breezy stories; "Right Is Might," by Adriana Spadoni; "The Rose of Tyronza," by William H. Sharpe; "Because He Loved Her So," by Hal Reid; "The Dummy Director," by Hal Reid; "A Modern Cinderella," by R. M. Crossby; "Pirates of Fame," by Helen Bear, and "The Divorcee," by Lawrence W. Pedrose.

From among the hundred scripts that are the daily average received in the Universal scenario department, we call these few remarkable titles: "Whose Child Am I?" and "Who Is My Father?" These titles were by different authors and both suggested as companion pieces to "Where Are My Children?" the Lois Smalley masterpiece. Here are some more strange ones: "The Follies of Mother," "Father Regenerated" (they seem to come in pairs), "The Fatal Laugh," "The Kiss That Killed." "Freckles Extinguished," "A Happy Couple Until" (excites the curiosity of the editor), "Classy Heathen" and the prize one, "Flees in Father's Pants."

Spoor Comments on New Service

Outlines Policy of the Organization and Forecasts the Activities of the Essanay Company.

COMMENTING upon the formation of the Kleine, Edison, Selig, Essanay Service, announcement of which was made exclusively in the Moving Picture World last week, George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Company, gives out some additional information on the subject. According to Mr. Spoor the organization has been formed for purposes of distribution only and that each company interested therein will retain its individuality as before. Besides the new features of the four companies all of the Selig and Essanay feature productions, formerly released through the Vitigraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay distributing offices, known as the V-L-S-E, Inc., will, after September 16, be released through the new organization, known as the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service.

The distributing offices of George Kleine will be utilized for this purpose in addition to releasing the Kleine-Edison features. Offices are located in Chicago, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, Toronto, Montreal, Minneapolis, Dallas, Kansas City, Denver, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Indianapolis, Salt Lake City, Detroit, St. Louis, Washington, New Orleans and Cincinnati.

"The policy of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service throughout the United States and Canada will be the placing on the market of a limited rather than an unlimited quantity of meriorious feature plays of five to eight reels in length," said Mr. Spoor. "These will be presented at irregular intervals, but sufficient in number to place before the public annually a great number of stars and desirable productions. In other words, it is our aim to give the public quality rather than quantity.

"Among Essanay's new features which are already finished and which will be released through the new organization are: "The Return of Eve," featuring Edna Mayo, supported by Eugene O'Brien; "The Prince of Graustark," featuring Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton; "The Breakers," featuring Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig, and "The Chaperon," featuring Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien. Other new features are now under way, one in which Essanay's great star, Henry B. Walthall, will appear.

"All of these features will be released under the open booking system. There will be no program whatsoever. Every exhibitor will have the privilege of looking at any or all features and booking and rejecting what he wishes.

"I am a thorough believer in merit and our pictures will stand wholly on merit. There will be nothing crammed down the exhibitor's throat and no attempt at any such system. Exhibitors know best what will please their individual audiences and are the best judges of what pictures they should show.

"I might add that I believe that in the very near future that every picture will be offered on the open booking plan. The day of trying to foist a program on the exhibitor, trying to make him take good, bad and indifferent plays, is now past. The sooner producers and exhibitors recognize this fact the better it will be for the motion picture business. It can mean nothing but better pictures.

"The motion picture public has been educated beyond the antiquated closed booking plan. They now demand nothing but the best pictures and are unwilling to sit through several reels of poor or indifferent plays to see one good one.

"Exhibitors also are too intelligent to stand for the program policy in features much longer. I think I am safe in saying that practically all of them prefer the open booking plan and the only reason that programs are used at all is because conditions have been such that they have scarcely been able to help themselves.

"But the time has come when they are demanding their rights, the right to see and know what they are buying, just as they insist on knowing what they are buying in a department store or wholesale house or factory. And their insistent demand can result in but one thing, the open booking system.

"Essanay is planning to give the exhibitor and the public none but excellent pictures. That we are staking our reputation and our future on this is evidenced by the fact that we are giving the exhibitor absolute liberty to reject any film that he does not think is up to standard. In other words, while we are claiming all excellent pictures, we are making the exhibitor the final judge in this matter. It is not our say so that will decide whether the picture has merit or not; it is the decision of the exhibitor after he has seen the picture. On his decision we stand or fall.

"Plans have been effected, also, to give the exhibitor the very best service as well as the very best films. While I believe that good pictures is the main issue, yet even good pictures are valueless unless the exhibitor can realize on this quality. He must be able to present their worth to the public in such a way that he can convince it that he has a good picture, one worth seeing, in order that he may attract the public to his theater.

"The proper and necessary advertising material will be furnished exhibitors on every feature. The exhibitor will be given no glittering generalities and flamboyant phrasings. He will be told specifically what each play is and to whom and what class it appeals particularly.

"He will be given the proper material to present these facts to his patrons, and to all persons in his district, so that he will, in the first place, be able to draw large audiences to his house, and then answer their expectations by giving them a first class picture, one that sends them home satisfied and anxious to come again.

"For in this way only can steady patronage be built up, by producing the goods when the patrons once have been attracted. To attract and fail to come up to expectations of the patrons is worse than not to have attracted at all. To disappoint the patron is to lose his patronage.

"Our aim in the new organization, therefore, will be, in the first place, to produce pictures that never will disappoint, and to give the exhibitor such service that he will be able to make the utmost profit out of their value."

OCTOBER BLUEBIRDS ARE FINE.

Three of the Bluebird features for October have been scheduled, and with plenty of good material to draw from the remaining two release dates for the month may be expected to carry equally attractive offerings. "Wanted—A Home," a Lois Weber production, featuring Mary MacLaren; "The Chalice of Sorrow," a tragedy introducing Cleo Madison to the program, and "The Social Buccaneer," in which J. Warren Kerrigan and Louise Lovely join forces as leaders, constitute the attractions for October 2, 9 and 16.

The exhibitor will reap the benefit of Mary MacLaren's success in "Saving the Family Name" when "Wanted—A Home" is released only three weeks later. Production by the Smalleys make the best of Bluebirds and as Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley are now devoting themselves exclusively to exploiting Mary MacLaren, theater managers who play Bluebirds have a strong combination to advertise.

Cleo Madison comes to Bluebirds under Rex Ingram's direction, in "The Chalice of Sorrow," a tragic play, located in Mexico and telling a concise and gripping story of intrigue and villainy. Miss Madison's emotional talents will have full sway and wide scope. Her principal support will be provided by Wedgewood Nowell and Charles Cummings, new members of the Bluebird forces.

In the early days of Bluebird's usefulness, when "stars" were shining, J. Warren Kerrigan and Louise Lovely were individual luminaries. Now that "The Play's the Thing" and everything else subservient the making "The Social Buccaneers" finds these two players uniting their talents because they are the best suited players for the leading roles. Frederick S. Isham's story becomes a Bluebird through an arrangement with Bobbs-Merrill Co., to subsequently screen all of the Isham novels in this program.

PALLAS-MOROSCO SEEKING STORIES.

In spite of the fact that the Pallas-Morosco forces have in their dramatic department ten staff writers, writing exclusively for these two companies, in addition to which they have three freelance writers working on special commissions, two members of the firm giving a larger part of their time to the scenario department and have the advantage of being able to call into consultation Oliver Morosco, one of the greatest producers in America, and George Broadhurst, the greatest living playwright, the company is still seeking the best and strongest obtainable stories from the best possible writers in order to present to its Paramount patrons real stories of exceptional interest.

The company is especially desirous of obtaining stories adapted to Vivian Martin, Dustin Farnum, Myrtle Stedman, Kathlyn Williams and Lenore Ulrich. It does not invite incomplete and imperfect scenarios from amateurish writers, although it will pay anyone for original ideas, depending upon their availability. What it does want is good stories, with carefully co-ordinated plots, by writers who know how to put drama into their writing. This company especially desires modern society dramas with comedy relief, with carefully worked out and logical plots, with happy surprises, small casts, closely knit plots, and good acting parts rather than what is ordinarily termed "mechanical drama."

Elaine Sterne a Real Story Teller

"Sonny Jim," First Book of Script Writer, a Charming Tale of Childhood, Filled with Suspense, Humor and Pathos.

By George Blaisdell.

ELAINE STERNE, well known to followers of photoplays as a writer of scripts, winner of the Evening Sun-Vitagraph thousand-dollar prize, of another photodrama prize of $500, has written a book. This does not mean Miss Sterne has entered a new field, for nearly two years ago she captured a $250 first prize in a short story contest. There is in the book, however, abundant evidence that the fiction prize went to a real story teller—one who is a mistress of the rare art of holding adult interest in a story of a child and of children and incidentally grown-ups, and while holding that interest move to mirth—and to tears.

"Sonny Jim," published by the W. A. Wilde Company, of Chicago and Boston, is a collection of eight stories written around scripts from the pen of the author and produced by the Vitagraph company in the past two years. The episodes are independent, but there persist through all of them Daddy Jim, Mother Dear, Mandy the cook, little black Lil', Peter-Dog and the playmates of Sonny. The book is illustrated with reproductions of "stills" taken in the course of the photographing of the respective scripts, for which acknowledgment is made to the Vitagraph.

The titles are "Sonny Jim and the Valentine," "Sonny Jim and the Amusement Company, Limited," "Sonny Jim and the Great American Game," "Sonny Jim and an Easter Lily," "Sonny Jim and the Circus and the Boy," "Sonny Jim and the Bear Facts," "Sonny Jim and Cause for Thanksgiving" and "Sonny Jim and the Knight Before Christmas."

The style of the author will compel attention. The stories are told in the simple vocabulary of a child, but there are always present the touch, the polish, of the story teller. Miss Sterne knows children—very likely her comparatively recent emergence from the magic land of dolls and toys and association with all the minor happenings that loom large in the lives of youngsters has enabled her more vividly to paint the pictures of the joys and the heartaches of child life.

Sonny Jim is a real boy—affectionate, almost always truthful, aiming to be obedient, but try as he will he "blows up" and reverts to juvenile savagery at times. Well may the adventures and misadventures of this boy and his companions thrill youngsters and stir the hearts of their elders for many years to come. The book brings out the real tragedies of childhood. The stories are told with a skill that is notable. There is a high degree of suspense. There are present marked qualities of tenderness, of insight into the child mind and of humanness.

It is possible the book may be the instrument for reducing the time this young woman of twenty-four years may have for screen work; nevertheless "Sonny Jim" will bring her a host of new friends.

KITTY GORDON WORKING ON NEW FEATURE.

Kitty Gordon, the famous beauty of the musical comedy stage, began work this week at the Blache Studio on the first production of the Kitty Gordon Film Corporation. This picture will be a film version of "Vera the Medium," by Richard Harding Davis.

Miss Gordon's new picture is being filmed under the supervision of G. M. Anderson, the famous "Broncho Billy." The story is exceptionally well suited to the statuesque star, giving her many opportunities to appear in startling costumes and to make the most of her noted beauty and superlative gifts of expression.

The Kitty Gordon Pictures have been added to the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises and will be released by him on the open booking plan along lines similar to those he has adopted for the Clara Kimball Young and Herbert Brenon pictures.

MARSHALL NEILAN NOW A LASKY DIRECTOR.

Marshall Neilan, one of the best-known leading men in motion pictures and prominent also as a director, has taken up his new work as one of the Lasky directors at the Hollywood studio of the company. Mr. Neilan by no means is a stranger to audiences that have seen Paramount pictures during the past two years. He took the leading role some months ago in the Lasky production of "The Country Boy," and he has also appeared as leading man for the Famous Players Film Company in "Madame Butterfly," in support of Mary Pickford, and in "Little Pal" with the same star.

In the past few years Mr. Neilan has been connected with various companies, always to his increasing credit, as his popularity both as a player and director has constantly grown. He was recently with the Selig Company.

Coming From Kalem

Last Days of September Bring Interesting Releases Through General Film.

EVENLY balanced between comedy and drama, four releases are found on the Kalem schedule through General Film Company for the week of September 25. Ham and Bud and Ivy Close provide the fun-making element, while the eighth episode of "The Girl from Frisco" and an episode of "The Hazards of Helen" supplies the dramatic thrills.

The release in the series by Robert Welles Ritchie is "The Battle in the Dark," a story built on the encroaching Hindu labor in California. Barbara Brent finds herself engaged in a bitter struggle with the leader of the "ragheads," as the Hindus are known to Californians from their turbaned headgear. The two reels close with a smashing climax in a thrilling night battle between ranch men and the Hindus. It was for this episode that Director Horne burned a three-story residence to the ground, lending a grim touch of realism to the battle scenes at the climax.

Marin Sais and True Boardman continue to be the popular leads in the Kalem Western series. Ronald Bradbury is seen as the Madah Singh, leader of the Hindus, while the balance of the cast includes Josephine West, Frank Jonasson, Edward Clisbee and Karl Formes, Jr. "The Battle in the Dark" is issued on Wednesday, September 27.

"Bumping the Bumps," the Ham comedy scheduled for Tuesday, September 26, finds Ham and Bud rivals for the hand of Ethel Teare. Ham aims to remove his rival by impersonating a phrenologist and giving a report on Bud's bumps that causes that person to be hurried off to an asylum. The one reel abounds in plenty of action of the kind relished by followers of these comedians.

"The Death Swing," the Hazard release of the week, calls on Helen Gibson to perform her usual daring stunts. A logical story works up to the climax in which Helen swings from the station roof on a telegraph wire through the air, landing atop a train which is running wild to certain destruction. This single reel "Hazard" is scheduled for release on Saturday, September 30.

The Ivy Close release of the week is "Rival Artists," issued on Friday, September 29. Ivy's fiance, an artist, and Henry Murdoch, a house painter, get mixed up in a jovial plot abounding in laughable moments.

Robert B. McIntyre

ROBERT B. McINTYRE has been installed as studio manager by the World Film Corporation, with headquarters at the Peerless Studio in Fort Lee. Mr. McIntyre, who intends hereafter to devote himself to motion pictures exclusively, has enjoyed a long and valuable experience at the business end of theatrical amusements. For several years he was business manager and treasurer of the historic Walnut Street theater, Philadelphia. From that post he joined the active forces of William A. Brady, first as touring manager of "Baby Mine," and then as treasurer of Mr. Brady's Playhouse, at that time about to be dedicated to the public. This position was held very successfully by Mr. McIntyre until the conclusion of last season, when he turned his attention to the picture field, in which there is reason to expect he will "make good" quite as emphatically as he had previously done in the extremely difficult role of box office expert, in which trying position he proved himself as being away up in the foremost rank.

Robert Brower Says Farewell

Popular Old Player Seen for Last Time in Famous Players' "Quest of Life."

THE mere fact that "The Quest of Life" marks the motion picture debut of the celebrated stars, Maurice and Florence Walton, would be sufficient to give that Famous-Paramount picture great interest. But another very interesting fact concerning the picture was discovered when Robert Brower, a veteran of the screen, appeared in the studio the other day to play the theatrical manager. "The Quest of Life" will mark the farewell appearance of Mr. Brower on the screen after years of association with the motion picture.

Robert Brower.

"One hears some of the younger chaps talk about the motion picture industry being in its infancy," declared Mr. Brower. "Why, I rocked the cradles of the ancestors of this industry. Over sixty years of my life have been spent on the stage or in association with theatrical affairs, and I cannot help but smile at these youngsters who think they are pioneers."

Mr. Brower took part in one of the first motion pictures ever turned out by Thomas A. Edison and he remained with that concern until a very few weeks ago, when he decided to retire from active work before the camera and to devote his time to pigeon raising on a newly acquired farm in Ulster County.

But at that time Ashley Miller, under whose direction Mr. Brower had appeared many times, was engaged by the Famous Players to direct Maurice and Florence Walton in "The Quest of Life." When he read the script and saw the role of the theatrical manager, he immediately thought of his old friend, Bob Brower, who had been a real theatrical manager for a good many years before he took up photoplay acting "to keep himself out of mischief."

A telegram to the farm brought a protest and a demand to be let alone with a warning, "I am no Adeline Patti." But Brower relented and arrived at the appointed time, though he professed to be greatly worried as to what would become of the pigeons in his absence.

Brower has never made an effort to conceal his age, as he does not believe in the old adage that the good die young. According to his own story, he can tell personal experiences with Capt. John Smith, Pocahontas and George Washington—he scouts the cherry tree story, by the way, declaring that the Father of His Country was entirely too clever to have chopped down the tree himself and that he would have out-generaled some other small boy into felling the tree for him.

According to Brower, the Capt. John Smith incident was greatly exaggerated by the press at the time it occurred, and if it had not been for the prodigious activities of the Indian princess' press agent in putting the tale on every birch bark sheet in the country it would never have survived as long as it did. It may be interesting to critics of the present great war to know that even Brower declares that it is the biggest war which has occurred within his memory—though he qualifies the statement by saying that his grandfather used to tell him great tales of battling with the last few millions of men of the Stone Age and of the whole mountains which were uprooted in the struggle. It hardly seems possible, however, that even Brower's grandfather could have been old enough at that time to have offered much resistance to the Stone Gentlemen.

Brower is greatly interested in the progress which Miss Walton and her partner have made before the camera and threatens to leave the pigeons flat and to come down to New York for the opening of the pictures at the Strand theater, as he is sure that the celebrated dancers are going to prove as great a sensation on the screen as they did on the stage.

"The Reward of Patience" at the Strand.

ANOTHER diminutive screen star was introduced to Strand audiences the week of September 10, in the person of Miss Louise Huff, who is starred in the famous Players production of "The Reward of Patience."

The story is of a little Quakeress, whose knowledge of life is confined to the limits of the community in which she lives. A stranger from the city comes to the little town and, on his return home, persuades his mother to employ Patience as her social secretary. It is from this home that Patience sees the man she loves wedded to another and watches the tragedy of his existence with the profligate wife. Finally the wife elopes and Patience earns her reward.

Short features for the week were the Strand Topical Review, the Strand Travelogue, a comedy cartoon and a comedy. Autumn Hall, William van de Wall and Irene Joani were the soloists.

Douglas Fairbanks at the Rialto.

Douglas Fairbanks in a Triangle-Fine Arts feature picture, "Manhattan Madness," was the star at the Rialto theater. As Steve O'Dare, a wealthy young New Yorker, returning home after several years spent on a Nevada cattle ranch, Fairbanks takes a big bet made by a fellow clubman, who insists that there are more thrills to be had in Manhattan than in the Woolly West. Vincente Ballester, Mary Ball and James Price were the soloists. The usual one-reel pictures were on the program.

"The Big Sister" at the Broadway.

Mae Murray was seen at the Broadway theater in the Famous Players-Lasky-Paramount picture, "The Big Sister."

Miss Murray plays a girl of the submerged stratum who is perfectly honest and upright, but whose poverty has entangled her with a set of gangsters. Over her they continually hold the terror of taking from her Jimmy, her small brother, who has been left in her sole care by the death of her parents. The fact that the story required bonafide New York settings prompted the sending of Miss Murray from Hollywood, Cal., to the Famous Players studio in New York, where she came under the direction of John B. O'Brien.

The usual weekly news, cartoons, educational and scenic studies, and a two-part comedy rounded out the program.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four Triangle pictures were shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Norma Talmadge in "The Social Secreary," and a Triangle-Keystone comedy were on the program. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Frank Keenan in "The Thoroughbred," and a Sennett-Keystone comedy were the picture features.

SON OF ROBERT W. PRIEST DIES.

The many friends of Robert W. Priest, director of publicity for "Civilization," will be grieved to learn of his recent bereavement in the death of his young son, Robert Rendall Priest. Little Robert was scarcely more than three years of age, and was stricken with what is supposed to have been infantile paralysis only two days before his death, which occurred on Monday, Sept. 4, about 11 a. m. Mrs. Priest, mother of the child, is the sister of Harold Rendall of the moving picture department of the New York Review. The readers and staff of the Moving Picture World extend their sympathy to the bereaved family.

WHO OWNS THE MARCELLE AT HOPEWELL, VA.

Through a slight misunderstanding of the information given us, Mr. Xippas, it was stated in a news item in the issue of September 9, that the Marcelle theater of Hopewell, Va., was owned by S. A. Xippas and Roy C. Davis. The fact is that the new theater is owned by the Tri-City Amusement Company, of which Thomas Temple is president, C. W. Saunders treasurer and S. A. Xippas secretary and general manager.

"The Mishaps of Musty Suffer"

The Fourth and Fifth Comedies of the Second Series, Featuring Harry Watson, Jr., Are Laughmakers of a Pronounced Type.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IN NO. 4 of the second series of Musty Suffer, which is given the mysterious title, "Local Showers," we first catch sight of the "whirling" comedian lying in bed, while a small tempest surges through and around the curtains. These gentle zephyrs stir the depths of a hollow tooth, and we actually watch the growth of an abscess on the affected jaw while the sleeper stirs uneasily and finally awakes. So we see "Musty" immediately following a bee line to a painless dentist to have the offending tooth removed.

Flossie (Miss Della Connor), the tender-hearted young lady who has charge of the down stairs office, weeps in contemplation of what is about to happen to "Musty," whose eyes are riveted on a card on the wall which gives the information that teeth are "hauled" without charge. But this tender-hearted young creature takes special care that the patent coin extractor, employed to hoist "Musty" to the torture room on the fourth floor, relieves him of all the loose change he has in his pockets.

Dan Crimmins is the nice, urbane assistant to the "Doc," who informs "Musty" that his employer is a painless dentist and that the extraction of a tooth "doesn't hurt him a bit!" What happens to "Musty" in the dentist's chair will not be described, as it is better that the pictures should tell the story. Needless to say that H. H. McCollum, as "Doc," with Dan Crimmins as his assistant, subjects poor "Musty" to some of the most mirthful and strange experiences in his career.

No. 5 of the second series is still better than No. 4 as an entertainer. "Musty" takes the part of a pirate bold, after dreaming of buried treasure and dark deeds on the Spanish main. He locates the treasure on one of the principal streets of his home village and persists in digging for it despite repeated arrests by officers of the law. The weird mirthful scene that shows "Musty" undergoing the "third degree" at the hands of the officers (Dan Crimmins and Maxfield Moree) is unlike anything that one can recall. "Musty's" last attempt to dig up the treasure results in his piercing with his pick one of the water mains, and we see him not only driven, but partly lifted out of the hole by the force of the stream that spurts high in the air.

The police patrol wagon used by the officers to arrest "Musty" is one of the most comical contrivances I have ever seen. What with its wheelbarrow shape and the bell attached that keeps hitting "Musty's" head at every toll, a view of it in the pictures must always result in aching sides."

"The House of Lies"

Oliver Morosco Presents Edna Goodrich in a Beautifully Staged Picture Full of Charm—Has Romantic Sentiment.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A PICTURE of high romantic ideals and of that state of heart that Tennyson said was better than Norman blood or coronets is, in the latest Oliver Morosco production, drawn against a background of utter selfishness and decadent folly. The film is called "The House of Lies." Its charm comes not so much from the strength of the plot as from the beauty of its scenes and the beautiful sentiments it expresses. The heroine, played by pretty Edna Goodrich, wants to be loved not for the beauty of her body, but for the beauty of her mind and soul. Her step-mother (Lucille Ward) and step-sister (Kathleen Kirkham) conspire to get a wealthy man (Juan de le Cruz) hooked up in matrimony. The mother knows that with two beautiful daughters she has two strings to her bow and she plans to play for the prize with both; but Edna is disgusted at the very thought of any such plan and during the expensive reception her mother gives with her widow's life insurance money, she puts acid on her face and is badly scarred. She is now compelled to play a Cinderella part by her selfish step relatives. She must sew and mend and do up hair for her sister while sister and mother go to parties at the rich poet's house. She really loves the rich poet. She had always admired his works long before she knew that her mother wanted her sister to marry him.

Finally abandoned by her heartless step relatives she has to depend upon typewriting for her living. An old family doctor (Herbert Standing), her life-long friend, gets her the job as secretary to the poet. At a beautifully pictured lawn party and feast, her sister has at length trapped him into an engagement. But the villain (Harrold Holland), who has provided the wherewithal, has made the mother promise to steal a note from the rich man's safe and the mother has made the foolish daughter aid in the plot. The man sees the first steps in the conspiracy and is on the look out. In the night the mother and daughter pick the safe while the rich man watches. The new secretary comes on the scene. The villain, the mother and the two daughters are caught with the goods.

Edna accuses herself, because she thinks the man really loves her sister. He so admires her for this nobility that he takes her in his arms. The direction was in the charge of W. D. Taylor.

Dowlan Directing "The Lawmaker."

William C. Dowlan has completed "The Light" and is now directing Richard Bennett in "The Lawmaker." The company has recently returned to the America Studio, Santa Barbara, after several days' sojourn at Long Beach, where Mr. Dowlan obtained some good scenes of the recent tennis tournament.

"Friday, the Thirteenth"

Peerless-World Adaptation of Thomas W. Lawson's Famous Wall Street Story—Robert Warwick Starred.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig

OWING to the sensation caused by Thomas W. Lawson's story when it was published a number of years ago, the name will be of distinct advertising value to exhibitors, for "Friday the Thirteenth" still remains the most renowned of fiction works dealing with Wall Street. Just how closely the picture follows the original is not a matter of vital importance, so long as it remains interesting and essentially correct in suggesting the cruelty and the fascination of the Stock Exchange as it existed at the time Mr. Lawson wrote his bitter arraignments, and exists to-day. In these respects, "Friday the Thirteenth" is a satisfactory production. It may be classed as a good, if not extraordinary Wall Street picture, well acted, intelligently directed and quite elaborately staged.

Scene from "Friday the Thirteenth" (World).

To give an audience an idea of the neighborhood in which New York's financial dramas are staged, several hundred feet at the opening of the first reel are devoted to views of the famous streets and buildings in the lower part of the city. In a photoplay of this description these scenes are justified, lending, as they do, a certain perspective of value to the story proper. On the one hand, we have the Brownleys, father and son, both powers on the Street, and on the other, Judge Lee Sands, a Southern investor, and his daughter. The drama resulting from a conflict of these four characters is not difficult to forecast. Brownley, Sr., ruins the proud Southerner, whose daughter goes to New York and fills the position of confidential secretary to the Brownleys. The junior member of the firm falls in love with her at first sight, and although she responds, her first duty, as she sees it, is to gain information by which her father's fortunes may be recouped. Several millions change hands and there is a liberal supply of melodrama before the two families are happily united by the marriage of the young people.

As might be expected, scenes on the Stock Exchange are staged in a lavish manner, and there is nothing lacking in the movement and excitement of the struggling brokers during the moment of a panic. Director Emile Chautard deserves much credit for his handling of these stirring passages of the picture. The cast is in all respects efficient, with Robert Warwick in the lead, supported by Gerda Holmes, Charles Brandt and Charles Harvey.

"The Unwelcome Mother"

Suggestions of "Lady from the Sea" in Latest Fox Picture—Has Deeply Interesting Story and Has Been Ably Handled.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WE CAN safely call the latest Fox production, "The Unwelcome Mother," a beautiful picture. The depth of its humanity makes it beautiful and that means that author, director and players worked together, making it effective. Many a picture is beautiful in the author's mind—here the spectator also sees its beauty. It tells a true heart story and shows how a step-mother wins the affections of a heady, recalcitrant young miss of sixteen, who has been worshiping her dead mother's picture and keeping two younger children also rebellious. There are some delicate touches of convincing humanity in the showing of how these naturally affectionate younger children reacted in the situation. The big sister can lead them and control them, but they are naturally drawn by the sincere advances of the kindly stepmother.

The author has made a very commendable attempt to draw an imaginative background such as Ibsen gets, especially in his earlier plays, and a peculiarity that is perhaps his surest gauge of lasting fame. It is a quality that ought to be imitated and the attempt to make this picture in part like "The Lady from the Sea" has lifted it far above the average motion picture. But we, in America, live a more reasonable, touchable, every-day existence, more after the classic manner, and don't often feel romantic threads of weird fates wound through our lives, so the climax, startling and valuable as it is, seems exotic. This ending gives to the story emotional swing as it closes; but it is the high quality of the material all through that holds up this melodramatic close.

Beautiful in itself, the picture is full of beauties—pretty children, fine human faces of older players, charming sets and wonderful backgrounds. Not all of it ranks with the best and some of its photographic effects are not adequately dramatic. The acting is full-blooded. A fight between Walter Law, as mate, and Frank Evans, as brutal captain of a schooner, could hardly have been made more realistic after each has had a chance to warm the other up to the punching point. Contrasting with such scenes are the nursery pictures at the home of a widower after he has brought his new bride to care for his three children. This bride, Elinor Valkyrien, had been the adopted daughter of a lighthouse keeper, a sea gull—spirited waif of the waves. She had met the mate fleeing for his life after killing the captain in self-defense. After the fight the captain had tried to stab him in the night. The meeting of the girl and the sailor is also a remarkable bit of realism. When the sailor leaves the girl, the story falls into the commonplace for a moment in order to begin a new situation; but from the time of Elinor's marriage, to the close, when the sailor comes back and finds her in her new home, it stands up well.

Triangle Program

"Diana of the Follies" Five-Reel Fine Arts Vehicle for Lillian Gish, "The Jungle Child," a Kay Bee and "Puppets," Another Fine Arts.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A VEHICLE serves no purpose at all unless all of the abundant opportunity it affords a star performer is made to compensate through one fascinating characterization for what it lacks in originality and true story interest. but Miss Lillian Gish proves that she can be the whole play in "Diana of the Follies," and causes us to forgive a purely theatrical structure of material worn almost to a frazzle. Reviewers were just beginning to hope that the story of the capricious wife who leaves husband and child to return to the stage only to be called back through serious illness of her child at a high moment of her professional success might stay where constant repetition put it some time ago, and here it bobs up again.

It is all the more of a compliment to Miss Gish that she succeeds in arousing interest under the circumstances—it is deadened by a lack of strong characterization among the supporting roles—and it shows what she could achieve in real drama of the screen, where she would be called to interpret something besides herself and draw attention without the perpetual limelight of a vehicle. She is allowed to do pretty much as she pleases as "Diana," and she does it with a great diversity of moods, thus crowding her versatility into one medium, but many of those moods reveal the subtle method and artistic intelligence employed when she had a really difficult interpretation to make. Every young star must have her fling, and Miss Lillian has now had hers. Hereafter she might create the role, not have one written to create her.

"The Jungle Child."

In this five-reel Triangle Kay-Bee there is some fine story material and an admirable character contrast. Furthermore, the author dares to be consistent at the expense of stale convention. Like nearly all of the Triangle products, the action is carried on with appropriate and picturesque settings, and when the admirable interpretation of both Dorothy Dalton and her support is added, the summing up of merit becomes large. A play well constructed, well handled and well interpreted should certainly rank high, but there are two serious drawbacks, one the lack of a really vital theme and a more obvious lack of plausibility. In spite of all the care taken to develop the story, it is impossible to a disastrous extent.

To illustrate in brief, there is a bad slip which might be easily remedied by changing a subtitle. The meanest kind of a villain deliberately deserts his comrades in a South American jungle to die of starvation, yet he is "sickened" when the heroine kills a savage in an attempt to murder him. He does not know the language of the savage people among whom she was cast when a mere babe; he could not possibly communicate with her except by signs, yet he describes in glowing terms the civilization to which he would lead her in order to obtain a property she is to inherit. There are others, but enough has been illustrated. Dorothy Dalton is a magnificent type, a tremendous relief to the pony ingenues long in vogue, and a charming actress. She would be superb in some role illustrating the modern idea of fine womanhood. The story could have but one artistic conclusion, and that is carefully preserved.

"Puppets."

This two-reel Triangle-Fine Arts reverts to the pantomime and illustrates as well as anything recently shown how bare of human interest is any screen play given over almost entirely to movement without psychology. The faint revelations of mind and heart are so weak that there might as well be none at all. The actors merely pantomime, all save De Wolf Hopper, and are as devoid of character as so many marionettes. The release is glaringly black and white, designedly so, with an occasional relief of bright subtitle.

Three Kalem Releases

"The Gun Runners," Seventh Episode of "The Girl from Frisco"; "Defying Death," a New "Hazard of Helen," and "That Pesky Parrot," a One-Reel Comedy Featuring Ivy Close.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Gun Runners."

AN attempt to start a revolution in a Central American Republic supplies the motive of the seventh episode of the Robert Welles Ritchie serial. It also affords Marin Sais plenty of opportunity to show that the girl from Frisco can take care of herself in any situation. Having blundered upon the retreat of a gun runner, known as "The Blind Mole," Barbara is mistaken for an adventurous young woman by the name of "English Rose," who is in league with the revolutionists. Miss Brent learns enough of the secrets of the plotters to cause them to make an attempt on her life. She escapes and is instrumental in preventing Arendo, the leader of the gun runners, from getting safely away with his illegal cargo. A necklace given her by Senator Wallace plays an important part in the story.

Vigorous movement makes the development of the plot and lovers of melodrama will follow the unwinding of the two reels with unabated interest. Aside from Marin Sais, True Boardman and Frank Jonasson are seen in their original characters; Ronald Bradbury, Karl Formes, Jr., and Edward Clisbee appear as Arendo, "The Blind Mole," and Jimmy, respectively. Director James W. Horne is keeping his portion of the production up to the mark.

Scene from "The Gun Runners" (Kalem).

"Defying Death."

The hair-raising situation in this number of the "Hazards of Helen" sends the operator at Lone Point shooting under a moving train, while lying face down on an electric handcar. And there isn't the slightest doubt about the ability of the reel to deliver a thrill. The plot concerns a certain Paul Gorden, who tries to prevent Helen's railroad from getting a new franchise. Gordon steals some important evidence and endeavors to get away on a train, but Helen starts after him on a handy bit of rolling stock and defeats him at the risk of losing her life and the company's handcar. Helen Gibson is assisted in the acting by P. S. Pembroke, George Routh and G. A. Williams.

"That Pesky Parrot."

A newly wedded couple live happily in their cozy cottage with their highly educated parrot until, in an evil hour, the lady decides to call in an interior decorator. Not caring for his samples of wallpaper, the young wife accompanies the man of paste to his shop, in search of a more pleasing design. Hubby returns home, and a chance remark of Polly's makes him think that his wife has eloped. He starts on a mad chase after her and almost kills the decorator before matters are explained. Ivy Close and Henry Murdock as the supposed elopers do some wild riding on their own account, Robert Ellis being the jealous husband. A lively reel.

"The Evil Women Do"

Five-part Bluebird Production Based on Story by Emil Gaboriau Carries Morbid Theme.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

PAST an interesting characterization, there is very little in the Gaboriau story when visualized that has what one might term "an appeal." The picturized version discusses a type of woman that is made and not born, without satisfying the mind of the spectator as to the primal cause of her degenerate tendencies, rambling along through a series of fiendish acts which are not characteristic of "woman," but of certain individuals whose morals, through influence or environment, have become perverted.

Heading the cast on the feminine side is Elsie Jane Wilson, who interprets the role of Ernestine Bergot in an entirely satisfactory manner. Francelia Billington, as the contrasting feminine, is very charming and handles well the role of Henriette Ville Handry, in spite of the fact that the type which she represents is of the sweetly passive sort.

Rupert Julian, Douglas Gerrard, Hobart Henley and Sydney Dean have the principal masculine roles, all of which are handled effectively. Julian Rupert has also directed the picture from the scenario of E. J. Clawson. While there are portions of the production that are very well staged, including the fight between two women of the Paris streets, urged to their utmost by Ernestine, and the earlier scenes in the studio of Justin Chavessat, one cannot help feeling that the most has not been made of the Gaboriau story. The theme is, at its best, extremely morbid; and even with its best influences at work it has little to recommend it save the clever acting of Elsie Jane Wilson.

"Saint, Devil and Woman"

Five-part Gold Rooster Play Based on Hypnotism Features Florence LaBadie.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THE story of this production, written by Philip Lonergan, the featured member of the cast, Florence La Badie, is called upon to portray in addition to the normal character of the orphan, Florence Stanton, two psychological changes brought about by hypnotic influence exercised by individuals of opposing natures. Miss La Badie has been fairly successful in depicting these effects on the susceptible mind. Her support, including Walter Dion and Ethyle Cooke and other Thanhouser players, also do capable work.

The story treats of how the executor of a wealthy man's estate uses his superior will power for evil, so subordinating the will of the heiress of the estate that she becomes a mere tool under the power of his hypnotic influence. Later she develops the nature of a veritable demon, retaliating in her abnormal condition the cruelty which she undergoes from those about her.

Another character of interest who enters the story in rather an unobtrusive fashion is a young doctor, whose attention is turned to tenement evils. During the course of the picture he meets Florence Stanton, discovers the evil work of the Spaniard who dominates her, and pitting his own will power against that of the Spaniard finally succeeds in rescuing the girl, who upon recovery, develops again her former sweet and womanly nature.

The interest of the picture would have been aided largely had the subtitles been less active in telling the story ahead of the action of the play. In many instances the story has been depleted of suspense through this mistake.

a chance on clouding years of the young man's life; conceding also that the young woman in the case, the wife, knowing the culpability of the father, will for many months not only remain away from her husband, but also keep him in ignorance of his father's unspeakably inhuman conduct, "His Wife's Good Name," Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon release for September 11 on the V-L-S-E program, will make a strong picture. The subject is finely staged and photographed under the supervision of Ralph Ince.

Lucille Lee Stewart is cast in the role of the wife, a negative creature—sweet and simple, but lacking those elements, magnetism perhaps more than anything else, that contribute to the making of a strong woman, one to inspire interest and sympathy. John Robertson, as Doctor Cameron, the friend and benefactor of the wife in distress, wins the heart of the observer from his entrance in the story, and holds it in increasing fashion to the end. It is a splendid character, finely portrayed.

Huntley Gordon, a not overyoung college student, supplies the ginger that enlivens the story. A good performance. Frank Currier as the brutal father bulks big. Of the role that is given him he makes the most. We despise the senior Weatherby, but his skill in interpretation makes nearly convincing a character none too logical. William Lytell, Jr., as Silk Harrington, the young man employed by Weatherby to "frame up" the bride so that her husband may see her in another man's arms plays his part to the T.

"His Wife's Good Name" is expensively produced, interests, and contains situations of real strength.

"Is Any Girl Safe?"

Five-Reel Photoplay, Produced by the Anti-Vice Motion Picture Co., Claims to Warn Mothers and Their Daughters of the Traps Laid for the Latter's Downfall.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

"IS ANY Girl Safe?" belongs to that class of moving picture dramas that claims to arm the innocent against the wiles of the seducer and white slaver by depicting on the screen the fate of young girls who are tricked into a life of shame. The method by which this is accomplished is told with the completeness of unsavory detail that marks the proceedings at a coroner's inquest. We have repeatedly pointed out that such plays do not make for good and should have no place on the moving picture screen. Proper teaching at home will furnish any young girl with the best protection against the snares of the vicious. The titular question, "Is Any Girl Safe?" is unanswered in this production, and whatever lesson it might teach will not compensate for the fact that the spectator is dragged through several obnoxious scenes, such as the interiors of a house of prostitution.

The photoplay is supposed to be a visualized sermon of warning. We are constantly reminded of the fact that it is a sermon by innumerable "cut-backs" to the preaching minister, and by frequent pedantic and trite sub-titles. Otherwise we might be tempted to believe that "Is Any Girl Safe?" is merely a sordid story of commercialized viciousness, with the happy but scarcely plausible ending in which two procurers reform—one of them going so far as to become engaged to marry the girl he was willing to sell into bondage.

The story deals with Bill Kerns, a vulture of society; Ralph Williams, another of his ilk, and the two girls who are their prey—Jean Daly, a struggling factory girl, and Marjorie Kerns.

Kerns wins the regard of Jean and entices her to the bawdy house conducted by Mme. St. Maurice. Here Jean is drugged. Meanwhile Williams has tricked Marjorie into coming into his room. Williams locks Marjorie in an ante-room when Kerns calls. Kerns learns that it is his sister who is locked in Williams' room, and thrashes him. Kerns rescues his sister and brings her home. His long dormant conscience is awakened by his sister's narrow escape. He decides to save Jean from the fate he has sold her into.

Kerns rushes to Mme. St. Maurice's house. The madame refuses to let Jean—who is as yet unscathed—go, and Kerns decides to take her away by force. He is compelled to fight Mme. St. Maurice's retinue of unspeakable compatriots, and in the midst of the fight is wounded by a shot. The police hear the fracas, and entering the house make the madame and the inmates of the house prisoners. The closing scenes show Williams repentant and Kerns at the home of his sister, convalescent, with Marjorie and Jean at his feet.

"The Yellow Menace"

Seventh, Eighth and Ninth Episodes of the Melodramatic Serial Now Being Released by the Unity Sales Corporation.

"Drops of Blood."

ALI SINGH, the Asiatic gentleman whose mission to this country is to hasten the moment when the yellow race shall have subjugated the white, still continues to make life interesting for Margaret Bronson and her friends, in the seventh episode of "The Yellow Menace." Having kept her a prisoner through several numbers he now sends her home," but first gives her a poison that deprives her of the power to think. The Princess Najla contrives to secrete an antidote in Margaret's bosom and the girl is restored to her former state.

The main motive of the episode is woven around an inventor whose formula for a high explosive is desired by Ali Singh. Finding that the inventor will not sell his secret to a foreign country, the "The Higher One" captures him and proceeds to bleed him, drop at a time, until the man reveals the secret of his explosive. Other thrills include the death of the inventor and an attempt on the life of Errol Manning.

"The Time-Clock Bomb."

In the eighth episode of "The Yellow Menace" Ali intrusts the formula of the new explosive to one of his minions, and Hong Kong Harry tries to get the man out of the country on a tramp steamer. Margaret Bronson's brother and Errol Manning succeed in recovering the formula and Ali Singh retaliates by blowing their home to pieces with a time-clock bomb.

"The Crystal Globe."

The drawing for a disappearing gun, invented by a United States army officer, becomes the object of Ali Singh's desire for government secrets in the ninth episode. Ali has already gained possession of a plan of our eastern coast defenses, but the drawings for the gun are not so easily stolen and he is forced to call in occult aid. The Princess Najla is put into a trance and made to gaze at a wonderful crystal globe that has the power to tell the Chinaman just what he wants to know, but he does not succeed in getting the plans.

The three episodes have the same rapid action as in the previous numbers, and are equally well produced. Edwin Stevens' impersonation of Ali Singh is also maintained at the same level of excellence, and the work of the remaining members of the cast demands a like verdict.

"The Light"

Five-Part American Production Introduces the Mystic Lore of East India with Franklyn Ritchie in Role of Hindoo Prince.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A COMPETENT cast including Franklyn Ritchie, George Webb, Helene Rosson and Eugenie Forde are largely responsible for the entertainment values of this production which deals with a theme of not sufficient realism to contain any great degree of interest.

The staging of the production has been done by William C. Dowlan in an artistic manner; the settings are rich and the mystic atmosphere of the apartment of the occult personage, Prince Zarak, whose powers of crystal gazing, etc., combined with a handsome exterior, proved a lure to certain of the feminine kind who happened to strike his princely fancy, has been well maintained.

The story treats principally of the clever scheming of Prince Zarak in meeting and becoming well acquainted with the pretty wife of an artist. The scheme devised later by which he hopes to gain possession of the person of the artist's beautiful wife, through whose purity of soul his favorite god is awakened, is unintentionally furthered by another of the prince's victims, of whom he has grown tired. This woman's work is to win the love of the artist for herself while the prince turns the wife's attention to the fact, causing her to believe that he is her affinity and that it is to him she must turn in her trouble. Eventually, as would be expected, his evil intentions are uncovered and the woman who has loved him and has been his aid in things good and evil stabs him and then herself, leaving the artist and his wife in their former happy condition.

"The Scarlet Runner"

Vitagraph's Mile a Minute Motor Series Presents Earle Williams in the Stellar Role.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE first four adventures of "The Scarlet Runner," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, Vitagraph's new serial for the program of the V-L-S-E, are well staged, but not unusually strong in story interest. The serial, which is being directed by Wallie Van and P. S. Earle, derives its name from the high-powered automobile purchased by Christopher Race as a means of earning his living when deprived by his rich uncle of the allowance of which apparently he had made poor use. And Christopher's efforts to make good are so far confined to grasping stray opportunities rather than to making and marked effort. Following through the remainder of the twelve adventures which comprise the serial, it is to be hoped that each may gain in strength of interest and clearness of delineation.

"The Car and His Majesty."

This adventure, which, by the way, is the first, has to do with Christopher's enforced adoption of a vocation. The first at hand and apparently the easiest way to earn a living for this luxury-loving young man is that of a chauffeur, and upon which he enters with considerable vim after selling his belongings and purchasing the "Scarlet Runner." Following his purchase of the car he enters the service of a king travelling in disguise and helps to defeat a plot through which a friend, Martin Linden, is about to meet his death. Others in the cast during this adventure are Charles Kent, Garry McGarry, L. Rogers Lytton, Marguerite Blake, Templar Saxe and Thomas R. Mills.

"The Nuremburg Watch."

A plot which aims at the destruction of Sir Gordon Race, Christopher's cousin, who is defending a woman on trial for the murder of her husband, is the main pivot of the second adventure, which again brings the "Scarlet Runner" into service of the endangered party. An infernal machine in the shape of a watch which is to explode at a given hour, with the ride against time to defeat the devilish plot, provides the thrill of this number, which is perhaps the most stirring of all. Donald Hall, Adele Kelley and Nellie Anderson are added members of the cast.

"The Masked Ball."

In this adventure Christopher is enjoined by an apparently honest individual, Fitzgerald by name, to aid in what he terms a practical joke to be played at a masked ball in London. The joke is to consist of robbing the guests of their jewels, and, according to the relater of the plan, the returning of them at the supper, when the prize diamond will of course be theirs. Christopher, put on his guard by a forced accomplice of Fitzgerald's, rescues the jewels and is the hero of the evening. Lillian Tucker and William Dunn appear in this number.

"The Hidden Prince."

With Lillian Tucker, Kalman Matus, Gordon Gray, John Costello, Ethel Corcoran and William Dunn in the supporting cast, the fourth adventure proves to be quite as interesting as the other three. The point at issue herein is the proper mating of two couples whose respective romances are about to be ruined by the villain Fitzgerald of the previous number, and the father of one of the feminine adjuncts. The "Scarlet Runner" again enters the breach and sets matters to rights. The first of these adventures will be released October 2.

"The Reward of Patience"

Famous Players Picture with Story Well Presented in Every Way and Filled With Likable Sentiments and Scenes.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE character of Patience herself is the background of this picture by the Famous Players. It is made in five reels, with Louise Huff in the titular role and the beauty of the simple Quaker girl, in the atmosphere and flavor of her heart and mind is heightened by the flabby coldness of the money-spending world against which it is drawn.

It is a love story and opens in a Pennsylvania village to which a young engineer comes. He is rich and is engaged to a society woman (Lottie Pickford) who is going to marry him solely because he is rich and she needs the money. Patience meets the young engineer, played by John Bowers, and the growth of their friendship is naturally and pleasingly portrayed. There is an appealing idyllic quality in these scenes of village life. They are like a poem by Goldsmith. Among other pleasing details we have here a group of village youngsters, like sheep, with Patience as the shepherdess, who furnish more than one bit of real humor. Her father dies. The engineer writes to his mother about the girl and she asks her to come to the city to be her social secretary. In town she is at first out of place in her plain clothes and plain ways of thinking, but does very well and meets the other woman. At the wedding she sheds a few tears, but becomes social secretary to the new family. When a baby is born Patience is kinder to it than its mother, who has a friend (Adolph Menjou) who, when the story began, didn't have enough money for her to marry him, but whose uncle has since died and left him rich. There is no "heavy" work in the picture, but this man proves himself a sneak and ends by running away with the engineer's wife. Patience has been discharged and has gone back to the village. The elopers are wrecked and drowned and the engineer comes back to the village for Patience.

The story in its development gives many excellent situations. Hobert G. Vignola had charge of the direction and he has made good use of all his material. The acting of even the servants in the story satisfies. Louise Huff is able and pleasing all through. Lottie Pickford rises to all the requirements of her role splendidly. The action is clear and dramatically intergrated. It is a well balanced picture full of good things.

Steiner Making Comedy Series.

Ellis Parker Butler's "Philo Gubb" series will be made in Jacksonville, Fla., under the direction of Pierce Kingsley, who is picturizing and also producing this unusual series of comedy dramas to be released in two-reel subjects. Edwin Stevens, who plays the role of the villainous demon, Ali Singh, in "The Yellow Menace" serial, now being released by the Unity Sales Corporation, is starring in this new "Philo Gubb" series as Philo Gubb, the amateur detective.

In the home studio of the Serial Film Company, at Cliffside, N. J., Mr. Steiner has outlined for himself a busy fall and winter. He will begin work next week on a big seven-reel picture containing some new and interesting phases of the present vice crusades. And, in addition, he is busily arranging all final details for the production of a big new serial to follow "The Yellow Menace."

Change of Title.

Owing to a similarity in the title of two feature productions that might result in confusion, the Metro Pictures Corporation, out of deference to the Vitagraph Company, has changed the name of their five-part production, "The Wheel of Justice," in which Emily Stevens is starred, to "The Wheel of the Law." The Vitagraph has a feature bearing a like title, but the stories are distinctively different. In addition to Miss Stevens "The Wheel of the Law" is produced with an exceptionally strong cast headed by Frank Mills, who has been starred in his own right on other programs and on the speaking stage. The story of "The Wheel of the Law" has to do with convictions obtained through circumstantial evidence to further the ambitions of a district attorney who has his heart and mind on the Governor's chair. It is an intensely dramatic story with many big moments, affording Miss Stevens splendid opportunities for her rare skill and artistry.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

We'll Except Mr. Hoffman.

COMES M. M. Hoffman, of the Bluebird, who being duly sworn, or swearing, says that he and his company, severally, are not to be included in the general statement recently made to the effect that the company press agents do not prepare their matter for the exhibitors but to please their bosses. To prove his point he places in evidence Exhibit A, which is a herald for a Bluebird feature. It is an eight-page paper, printed in readable type, and later Mr. Hoffman wrote that he is going to adopt our suggestion that the entire back page be left blank for the exhibitor to use for other films, house talk or what he will. This department is as open to company publicity departments whenever they have anything novel to be commented upon, but the matter must be sent in. Mr. Hoffman is going to keep us posted in future. We did not have Mr. Hoffman in mind when we said that the publicity men ignored the exhibitors, but on the contrary we did not have him in mind because he failed to show us that he was different and his herald was an antidote to another in a slightly later mail that had the story reduced to about a three point. It was pretty, but no one could read it. This department is for advertising in all its phases as applied to the advertising of picture houses, and all press agents are welcome to contribute, though flimsy is strictly barred. Mr. Hoffman does not mention it, but his advertising in the Saturday Evening Post is about the soundest and most logical stuff about photoplays that has ever been in that sheet. He is doing more to scotch the star system that is strangling the business than all the rest of the matter addressed to the general public put together. The star system was all right for a time, but you cannot show stars weekly or monthly and preserve their freshness. With a few notable exceptions stars not only get stale but distasteful after a year or two. Build your plea on plays. It will last longer and be more profitable, and your films will not further advance in price. Mr. Hoffman did not ask us to talk about that, but about his herald, but as long as we started talking, his talks are worth talking about. Incidentally the Satevepost stuff is good to study for style for your own house talks in your own programs.

Still on the Map.

New Orleans seems still on the map, though we seldom get material from there now. This reproduction of the front of the Dreamland for "Broken Fetters," a Bluebird play, is so unusual that we are indebted to the Consolidated Film and Supply Company for sending it in It not only shows how to work this feature, but will suggest other dressings to the clever exhibitor.

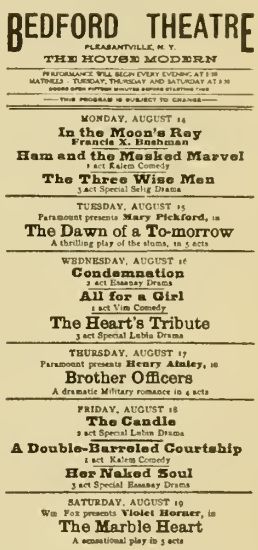
That is the best feature of such reproductions. Do not copy. Let the dressing give you original ideas. That picket fence scheme can be used for other titles and makes a splendid flash for the lobby.

Be Careful.

A recent issue of the Pals suggests the old Raffles stunt in connection with Sherlock Holmes. The idea is all right, but be careful. The suggestion is worked to the effect that the person capturing Sherlock must have in his possession a copy of the local paper interested in the scheme and a ticket to the latest performance at the showing theater. This would seem to make it a lottery, and as such it cannot be advertised by mail. Better drop these requirements and trust to the general advertising for a return. And Pals fails to suggest that generally the Raffles does not appear until the last day of the contest or a day previously set, though a later date may be announced in the paper. You cannot be too careful of any scheme requiring the purchase or possession of anything representing an intrinsic value, since this is held to be the "valuable consideration" of the Federal Law.

Up to Eight.

The Third Street, Easton, Pa., has gone back to an eight-page program with plenty of good reading matter in addition to the stories of the films. It is a good change, for the Third Street program has been a bit too business-like lately. Now they have the space in which to be interesting as well and it should make for more business.



Guess Which.

George R. Murphy, of the Bedford, Pleasantville, N. Y., sends in two throw-a-ways and writes:

> Enclosed find two programs by different printers. Which would you think is the better of the two. Criticism would be appreciated.

Of the two the longer is 5¾ by 11 and the other 5 by 9 inches. It will be seen that the former is disproportionately long, but the matter of proportion is less important in throwaways than on more pretentious pieces. The smaller of the two is better not because it is smaller, but because it offers better selections of type. The composition is about the same in both instances, but the longer program, possibly because there was more space, uses a high letter, but one that is considerably condensed. It is a larger face than the other, apparently an eighteen point against a fourteen, but because the individual letters are narrow in proportion to their height they are not so plain as the smaller but more legible setting. It is not the height of the type that counts so much as its legibility and its display. Here there was no need for type so small. Any of the lines set in the condensed could have been set in a normal face as well and most of them could have been extended had the printer the type. But it would seem that one printer bought large condensed faces that he could use on some jobs where a normal letter could not be used, and then uses it all the time because it is all that he has. The other printer gets smaller faces, but seems to have studied values. He gets types that work in well with each other. Compare the house names on the two bills. The smaller sheet looks better because the three type faces employed work better in combination than the three on the longer bill. They fill in the space better and still do not crowd. The copy for the printer is the same in both instances and offers no difficulties whatever, and yet the two jobs are unalike. It is not always easy to find an office with good job faces for amusement work, but one of these two men is a printer at heart and the other is a printer by trade. One buys type and the other selects it, picking out that which will be most useful to him and most serviceable to the patrons. Look at the two Tuesday bills and note how the Mary Pickford stands out above the Valli-Valli. The type is smaller, but more distinct and attracting. There seems to be no two guesses here. The smaller is by far the better set bill.

Smaller and Better.

The Circle, Easton, Pa., has cut its program down and yet gets a much better result. The old issue was loosely constructed and rambled, but M. A. Carman has cut it down to 3¼ by 6 inches and not only gets a better program, but uses less paper, though his composition bills are probably not much less. In the new form, the front and back pages of which are reproduced here, the house announcement is all on

'THE DIVIDEND'

A Triangle Play written by C. Gardner Sullivan, directed by Walter Edwards and supervised by THOMAS H. INCE.

This story revolves about the activities of a money-grabbing multi-millionaire who with one hand takes from the poor and with the other gives, and whose whole motive in life is the acquisition of money and dividends for his investors.

At a stockholders' meeting he promises unprecedented dividends at the end of the fiscal year. This promise he makes good, but only through the reduction of wages and an increase in rentals on the company's tenement property.

This capitalist reaps another dividend upon which he had not counted. His son, whom he had neglected in his mad pursuit of profits, has become an opium fiend and sinks to the lowest depths of degeneracy. There are other dividends that this capitalist and his coterie of financiers had not bargained for and which could not be totaled in dollars and cents, but had totaled countless thousands of human wrecks and untold misery.

The conclusion of the story follows out the natural laws of retribution.

the front page, including a time table, the date, a dated day condensed program, an underline and the address. The inside pages are similar in design to the back page shown here, the two day subjects each getting a page to itself with an inset trade-mark at the bottom. The write-ups are well done, without undue and extravagant praise, and the entire issue is creditable and more hard working than the old form. About the only real comment to be offered is that the added comedy is not made prominent. This should be changed. It is not the big program that counts unless it is good and readable. Here is a half size program that does better work and saves paper—which is a vital matter right now.

Stunts—per Scott.

L. J. Scott, in the Kansas City V-L-S-E Clausman, gives a column and a bit to Doc Trunelle, of Novinger, Mo., and winds up with "Now there is not a thing he has done that any other exhibitor could not do—but Doc thought of them, and put them into effect." That is just the idea. Some men complain about bad business and others get out and make it better. Some people claim they could do well if they had the people to draw from. Doc has 1,700, so, like the Chinaman, he invented intensive cultivation. For example:

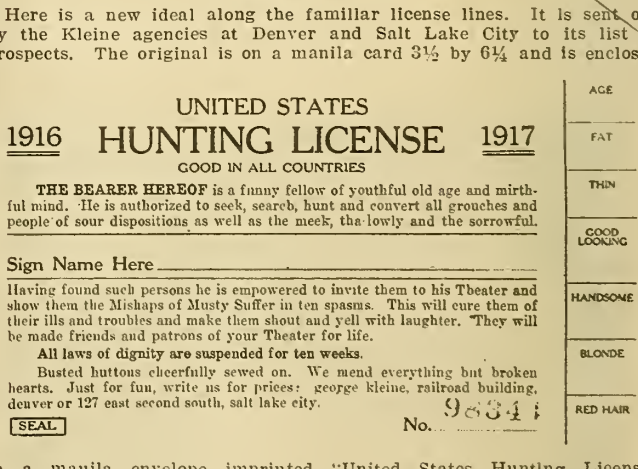
> Every evening he delivers a little snappy talk about coming events, using as an excuse the announcement of different local affairs. This town has no daily paper, so that Mr. Trunelle acts in that capacity. All dances, charity bazaars, picnics and other entertainments, even though competitive, are announced by him, consequently people are afraid to stay home for fear of missing something important.

For a railroad serial he issues a "strip" ticket, the coupons being good for several installments, and he gives a new kink to the "mystery singer" in itself an old idea but capable of still further elaboration. Here is how he worked it:

> One of the best "curiosity arousers" was an advertisement that a local person would sing on a certain night and a $2.00 prize would be offered the person correctly guessing who "Little Red Riding Hood" was. He then dressed a boy up in a Red Riding Hood costume and had him occupy the center of the stage but the singing was done by a girl whom no one knew could sing. The idea was to keep this contest going until someone guessed the right name. This did not occur until the third night, and his receipts for that night alone were over $35.00, so you see he had the whole town worried nearly and all over $2.00.

Scott's Chautauqua plan is working well by all reports. The scheme is very simple. An extra big subject is booked or the features are lumped in some special week and then boomed like a Chautauqua with the storekeepers helping things along with special bargains and the theater getting the money instead of Bryan. Not all features will work. They must be such things as can be talked about impressively. The main feature of the stunt is to get the shop keepers working in with the house to give a general suggestion of something extraordinary, and for this reason it is better to use hand-picked films.

Letting George Do It.



Hand it to J. E. Rickards for getting a double page layout for a small proportion of the cost. As the cut will show, he got the local merchants to come in with him on an advertisement for shoes. He paid for the display space he used, they paid for theirs. And while he got the full value of a two page advertisement, every merchant in the deal also got a better display for his own advertisement. He did not get half what he was paying for—he got all he paid for and more. The proposition is very simple. Ten men pass along the street. They are ten men and nothing more. They march two abreast and with measured step and they become a procession. Mr. Rickards merely formed the procession and marched at the head. He brought the paper two pages of advertising—for which most papers are grateful—he brought the house two pages of advertising and he gave each individual advertiser a chance to march with the procession and get more than he paid for. Naturally shoe advertisements predominate, but there is also a suggestion from a business college that the girl could have purchased her own shoes had she been given a business training, and that she would not have had to work for five dollars a week if she had used the classified columns of the paper. They all line up on the theme of the play and become interesting because they do. Shoes gives an exceptional opportunity to the advertiser, but any play that can be catchlined can be worked in the same manner. Try it and the merchants will thank you, but do not overwork it. It is better than a "once" idea, but run too often the stunt loses novelty.

Original Sources.

Every time you dig up something new someone comes along and pulls an original source on you. We have done it ourselves, and so we can't blame others, and we are glad to give space to the Arc theater, Delphi, Ind., where Mrs. Belle B. Gardner says the old form of the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., program has been used for years. She writes:

> We noticed what you had to say of our programs in the issue of August 12th. Thanks for your notice, but we looked up as to how long we have been issuing our style of program and we find it to be three years ago last April. It is more than three years, then, since we began this original style. Several traveling managers, as Mr. Salisbury, for Quo Cam Vadis, and Mr. Bowman, of Dante's Inferno, took samples of our programs, which they said were the best small town programs they had ever seen. Perhaps Mr. Brooks got his idea from one of these. Our house was the first small town picture house to sell reserved seats. Our first attempt was with Quo Vadis, and this idea was also carried along to other exhibitors by the gentlemen named. I enclose samples of these tickets. We have hesitated in sending this program in, but, like our house, we are "on the square." We noted too late that the printer knew more than we did about spelling Mr. Tellegen's name.

It is interesting to note that this form is old, but it is still good. We reproduce the Delphi form, which is rather deeper than the Brooks style and printed on plain print, no fold. We thing that Mr. Brooks may have stumbled upon the idea without having seen the other, but

Mrs. Gardner is entitled to all due credit for seeing it first. The allusion to the house "on the square" is probably due to its location on the public square and to make this a catchline they use a rule square in the letterhead and probably other printing. The reserved seat tickets are well worked out. The matinee is a manila card 1½ by 4 and night tickets are only one inch high. They are yellow for the matinee, red for the first night show and blue for the second, being filled in with ink on the reservation stub. Each is "1st Show only," or whatever the run the issue is good for. They are interesting as a reminder of the not distant day when reservations and quarter admissions were mild curiosities. We are glad that Mrs. Gardner came in and hope that she repeats her visit. But this department was running three years ago and more and that was the time to have sent in the good thing. And you others who have good things still under cover—why not shoot? It will not hurt you any and it may help many others. We're all friends. Come along.

Program Stuff.

If you cannot write readable stuff, get someone to write it for you, but get stuff that counts. We have just picked up a program. We are not going to name it, for it is but one of a type. The program is a four pager and about half the back page is free to the management and this is the way it is filled up:

> Edna Mayo, who plays the part of the proud and haughty Helen Steele in Essanay's five-act feature, "The Misleading Lady," used her own car to be abducted in. Miss Mayo smilingly declared that if she were to be stolen away by a man who loved her she would rather it be done in her own car.

> They are building an English railway coach at the Famous Players' studio which will be used in an Irish picture called "Little Lady Eileen," starring Marguerite Clark. But inasmuch as there is no difference between an Irish and an English coach and it is being made in America by Swedish carpenters, it can scarcely be regarded as a breach of neutrality.

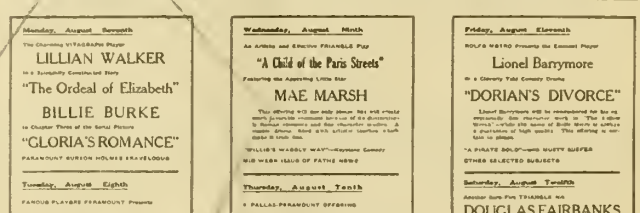
> For more than three weeks Myrtle Steadman, popular Pallas Pictures star, has been confined to a dark room as a result of the exacting double-exposure in the new Pallas success, "The American Beauty." Her occasional outdoor trips are only made possible by the use of special double-lens glasses.

This program was printed in Arizona the middle of August. The fact that Miss Mayo has a car is not half as important as the fact that they have a certain number of electric fans and other weather comforts. That an interior scene of a special sort is being built for a story not yet released, is not as vital to the house—in August—as some comment on the comforts of the theater, and while several people will feel sorry for Miss Steadman, many more would be interested in some comment on the music, the ice water or any other house feature. It is good business, paying business, to rouse interest in the players by telling about them if you have the space, but if you have not the space it is foolish business indeed to waste your only spare three inches giving three not very important facts about not very important players—unimportant, that is—when compared with your house. Don't save time and lose money by using a pair of shears where you should be using your brains, and this does not mean this particular house but any exhibitor who is so foolish as to throw away the space he pays for. Your house, your own property, is far more important to you than the highest priced star in the studios. Don't do free press work when you need the space yourself. If you cannot write a line, at least clip stuff that refers to this or next week's bill, and not items that relate to unreleased subjects that may never appear on your program.

Brief and Good.

Most of us remember the story of the Chinaman and the translator. They were in court and the judge asked what color the dog was. The witness chattered for ten minutes and the interpreter turned to the court. "He says it was a black dog," he announced. Some—perhaps too much—program stuff runs on the same lines. There is a whole earful in the Garfield (Chicago) program. It runs:

"WE ARE YOUR SERVANTS"



> In amusement. State your wishes and we will try to gratify them. Should any feature we present be objectionable to you, tell us. Should any feature please you, compliment us. We want to know just what you want us to present.

Much more can be said, but this is plenty.

That Six-page Folder.

Walter H. Brooks has sent us the white proofs of the Auditorium program, Coatesville, Pa. This is a six-page folder, the strip 6¼ by 12 inches, with type pages 3¼ by 5½. It will be noticed that the days are full dated and underlined, the matter arranged to give even sized boxes with an underline and house announcement including a time table. It is an excellent layout and one that can be copied inexpensively on cheaper stock. The folder is the only form that will give more than four pages without adding the expense of pasting or wire stitching. The Censor, Adrian, Mich., runs up to twelve pages, but we like the six-page folder better. We reproduce Mr. Brooks' because the model is so good. He is also using a postcard with a condensed program of features. He picks out three features, connects their stars with previous successes and makes a special appeal with the three, which is apt to be more effective than an entire list of six.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

That Museum.

VACHEL LINDSAY is always interesting and sometimes impractical. He seems to cherish the belief that his museum of photoplay, lately discussed, should be endowed by some rich film man. Therein he is foolish in a sense, for the late W. T. Rock is probably the last film man destined to die wealthy. That museum will not come from a single endowment as did the Pulitzer School of Journalism of Columbia University, but must grow upon the foundation of small individual contributions. That such a museum would be of inestimable advantage to the real student of photoplay goes without saying. Columbia and perhaps other colleges have the nucleus of such a museum, but none is as yet properly endowed nor sufficiently well provided with material. Already several letters have been received commenting upon the story in the issue for August 5th, but we would welcome a more general discussion. Send in your own ideas of what such a museum should be, remembering that what Mr. Lindsay has in mind is not a museum for the general public, but for the writer and student of photoplays. We place the writer before the student because the real writer is the student to the end of his days and his studies are never completed.

Statistics.

The figures may not be exact, but is is roughly calculated that the word "scene" is written each year 12,687,391 times more often than is necessary and that the word "cut" at the end of a scene is used to excess 960,427 times. It might be interesting to compute the amount of ink wasted and the horsepower spent to no good end, but what's the use.

If You Get Stuck.

If you get stuck with a scene, remember that the best way to write it is always the simplest. The other day an author sent in three different versions of the scene he was troubled about. All three were heavily technical in language and obscure in idea. A studio man would have written: "John enters, switches on lights. Goes to desk and looks over letters. Takes one. Turns down light and exits." That he turned on the light showed the director that the light was off when John entered, so the camera man would be told to close the diaphragm. That John turned off the light and left the scene showed that he moved from the desk to the switch and then to the door. It was not necessary to say that he went to the switch and then to the door. He had to do those things to follow out the written instructions, and the written instructions said the light was turned on and off. There was nothing about lights half on or full on or anything else. What was necessary was told, but the real author does not try to direct as well as write the picture.

All Night Stuff.

It has not yet become apparent on the surface that there will be a run of ten to fifteen-reel stories, but those who get about know that by the middle of the autumn there will be from ten to fifty features of ten reels or more, according to how the various concerns husband their money. When they come, do not wail that it is hard enough to write fives, let alone tens. If you are better at short stuff be glad, for the advent of the ten-reeler is going to do a lot to help the program show of one and two-reel stuff come into its own again. It looks as though there would be so many one show an evening features out next season that the five-reel stories cannot come into competition with them, and the picture theaters will have to turn to program stuff and cater to the man who wants variety instead of a single long and often tiresome subject. The tens will go into the dramatic houses mostly and the smaller theatres will have to turn to the shorter form. And probably they will make more money with the short stuff. But do not fool with the ten-reel stuff until you get your pay in advance. There are going to be some awful flivvers.

Keep Off Ince.

Just because you have a ten-reel story that will make the everlasting fortune of the producer, do not sent it to Tom Ince. He has a few thousand others to consider and the chances are that he will take none of these for his next big effort. Leave him alone and pick on some of the other fellows for a time.

The Author's League.

Now that the P. A. L. is defunct and the Authors' League has taken up the matter of script prices, several have written to ask about the latter. We do not believe that the Authors' League can raise script prices, least of all through affiliation with the labor unions. Years ago we belonged to the old Press Wheelmen, the first literary labor union, but this was merely because it saved us walking five block for a drink after one o'clock in the morning when we were making up the Sunday edition. Later it degenerated into the Blue Pencil Club without having accomplished anything. As a means of forcing prices, combinations are of no avail. On the other hand the Authors' League has done much good in other ways and may prove a handy thing to belong to if you do not ask too much of it.

Punctuation.

There is something wrong with this sentence if you will study it and it will not need very close study to find that what is wrong is that there are no punctuation marks though some are needed.

To a certain extent your leaders, fades and the like are the punctuation marks of the film. If you write a sentence you may divide it with commas and semi-colons. You say "John, in spite of his disability, made good time toward the gate." The words "in spite of his disability" modify the straight sentence "John made good time toward the gate." In precisely the same way you punctuate a series of scenes carrying a vision with a fade when the running story stops and another when the vision stops. A time leader is not unlike a period and the break leader like a semi-colon. Punctuate your action properly if you would have it play properly.

The Selling Trick.

If you can find it, there is always just one thing that influences the sale of a script to a particular person. Perhaps this person may be unaware of the deciding factor himself, but if you can find out just what it is that sells scripts to the Editor of the Gumph Films, you can sell him what you will. It is not always possible to tell, even from the produced stories, just what this is. Perhaps it may be the unusual twist to old situations, a certain form of development, a clearness of leaders, the pictorial value of the settings or what it will, but in the last analysis there is one little trick that will enable you to bunch your sales. Try and see below the surface and you may make the discovery. If you can, you can start a bank account. It is not a general style of production. It is something smaller than that, but every editor has a fad and if you can find his one weak point you can land him nine times out of ten.

Getting Back.

If, for any reason, you have had to drop your photoplay work for a time, when you start in again do not immediately try to sell. Spend some time in plotting just to get into the habit again. It will pay. For eight months we let script work lie while we worked on the third edition of Technique of the Photoplay, and it was a couple of months before we could get back into the hang of the plotting again, and for six weeks of that time we did not even try to sell. The thing to do is not merely to write plays, but to write plays that will sell. To do this the plotting mind must be stirred to activity before the good plots come.

Found the Road.

Now and then we get a letter from some one who was clearly born to arrive, and it is a pleasure to escape the usual wails of the faint-hearted. One recent correspondent writes:

> After several months of studying your department and your wonderful book, I've just sold my first script and have made arrangements to do comedies regularly. I can hardly believe that this has all happened so soon, but with your book always at hand I hope to progress to five reelers and feature stuff. The postman got to feel sorry for me when he unloaded at least one long envelope a week at my door, but one day I had a little set of ideas that went off one after the other like a bunch of firecrackers, and I just sat down and wrote them off as fast as I could. You see I had the technique and the practice of building up from scene to scene—in short, the feel of the thing, so my comedy brought a check and an order for more within four days.

Perhaps the writer credits the book unduly, for real success comes from within, but the letter contains the true secret of success, a reliable guide, study and practice, contentment and—success. Sometimes it takes a few years instead of a few months, but the routine is always the same. Study until you get the feel of the work and then you can develop your ideas unhampered by thoughts of technique.

Manufacturer's Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

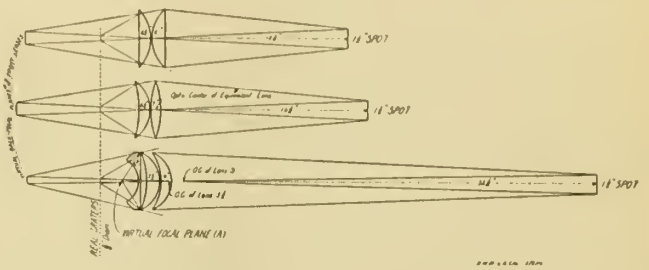
Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 155.

Should size of picture have anything to do with distance from front row of seats to screen, and why?

Interesting Dope.



Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., sends in the following interesting drawing and data. I publish it because a study of the drawing ought to prove instructive and interesting to operators. But I will say, as I have said before, that, purely for mechanical reasons, in my humble opinion the placing of the negative lens next the arc is impractical. I will also repeat my statement that there is soon to be placed on the market an objective lens which seems to take care of this particular proposition in a fairly complete manner, though I would not wish Brothers Martin, Griffiths, Armstrong and Deutsch to stop working on this proposition, because it is interesting, and moreover, highly instructive. The time is coming when the up-to-date operator will be able to talk intelligently on such subjects as coma, astigmatism, and things of that kind. He will talk intelligently because he will understand them. I would like to again point out the absurdity of operators who handle the lens system year in and year out without knowing one solitary thing about the technical end of light action through lenses.

This article is concerned largely with the same matter discussed by Brother Armstrong in issue of February 12 last. I am not sure whether our conclusions agree, because they are based on very different methods of treatment.

In the double piano-convex set shown in the drawing, the real crater is assumed as placed 3 inches from the rear surface of the 6½-inch lens, and which also fixes its distance from the optic center of the same lens. Now, since the light beam diverges forward from the rear lens, there must be a virtual image formed somewhere to the rear of the real crater, and since one conjugate focal length and the principal focus (6½ inches) of the lens is known, the other conjugate focal distance can be calculated by the formula: $\frac{1}{v} - \frac{1}{x} = \frac{1}{F}$, in which v is the known conjugate focal distance and F is the principal focus of the lens; from which x or the other conjugate focal distance is readily found. The position of the vertical back focal plane is thus determined by the position shown, and its diameter can also be found by the similar triangles, which are shown graphically.

At this point the rear condenser becomes eliminated from the discussion, and the virtual back focal plane thus established becomes operative wholly through the front condenser lens. The position of the optic center of the front lens is now assumed, and through it two secondary axes are drawn from opposite diameters of the virtual back focal plane. The secondary axes are continued forward till they diverge to an 1½-inch spot. The distance from the spot to the optic center of the front lens is now scaled on the principal axis, and is equal to v, or 15¼ inches. Also, the back conjugate distance is likewise scaled and is called u. Then, $\frac{1}{v} + \frac{1}{u} = \frac{1}{F}$ and F, which is the desired focus of the front lens, is found.

Now, in the meniscus bi-convex set shown, the same sized crater is again located 3 inches from the nearest point of the rear surface of the meniscus, and the same process as described above is repeated, again assuming the focus of the rear lens to be 6½ inches. In this case, however, the optic center of the meniscus lies forward of the lens, as shown, which condition consequently alters the position and size of the virtual back focal plane; which in turn increases the front focal distance to 16½ inches as compared to 15¼ inches in the former case. This latter comparison cannot be taken at its face value, because of the shape of the meniscus; consequently the position of its optic center can be made to vary considerable. Nevertheless it is quite evident that the meniscus bi-convex combination must always make some slight gain with respect tothe focal distances of carter and aperture. In the drawing it is merely incidental tnat the optic centers of both lenses coincide.

Now, when we come to the third and last case shown, which is a telephoto combination, the action becomes a little more complicated, although the same principles are followed. Here the same sized crater is again placed 3 inches from the rear (concave) lens, which is assumed to have a focus of 2.14 inches. The concave lens now fouses the real crater to virtual focal plane A, and plane A thus becomes a conjugate focal plane of the assumed 5½-inch meniscus, which in turn establishes the virtual back focal plane in consequence of which the 1½-inch spot becomes located 32¼ inches ahead of the optic center of the front lens, all according to the processes first described. It is thus seen that the telephoto combination makes great gains over the other two sets, although, as before stated, the distance of 32¼ inches is more or less indeterminate, because of the possible variation in the position of the optic center of the two meniscus lenses.

He Has a Question.

Michigan says:

Here is where I break into the department, for I have a question to ask, and a lot to tell you about conditions. In the last two nights I have noticed about all the colors of the rainbow in my picture. This same thing happened when I first went into the house, but I found the condensers were not parallel. These colors are not on the screen at all times. I have noticed it occasionally when my carbons were not burning right. But now I see it when everything apparently is working perfectly. The colors only show appreciably in light subjects. The house has been changed to pictures, which means that the operating room is not very well located. The architect thought he knew more than the operator. The result is the answer. The room is 10 feet 6 inches, by 5 feet 8 inches wide, and the ceiling is 6 feet. In this room are a Powers' Six and Six A, both motor driven, a spot light, a rewind, and work bench, and one compensarc, which latter is used for warming up the carbons before switching to the G. E. rectifier. The room is hung below the balcony and over a number of the main floor seats. I have asked for it to be enlarged, but the manager says no, because he does not want to cover more of the main floor seats. The lens is almost level with the screen. I have to do the work alone because there is not space for anyone else in the operating room.

Well, Michigan, I don't blame the manager for not wanting to extend the room out over more of the seats; that is natural, but at the same time Friend Manager should consider the proposition that the operating room is literally the heart of the theater, and that it is not within the range of reason that you either can or will deliver the best possible results on the screen working under such very bad conditions. I cannot, of course, tell your manager what he must do, but I can and do suggest to him that of the two evils he might far better extend the room out at least three feet and cover another row of seats. I thoroughly understand this is not desirable, but it is very much more undesirable to have the work of the operator hampered by such an utterly impossible operating room size. The Power's Six A machine is 4 feet 7 inches long over-all, which may be reduced somewhat if the lamphouse is shoved ahead, hut even so, I imagine the operator would have to turn sidewise to squeeze through between the lamp control handles and the wall of a 5-foot room.

As to your light trouble, it is not due to the condensers being out of alignment with each other. You have not described the condition with sufficient accuracy to enable me to form any intelligent opinion of what is wrong. You simply say "there are colors on the screen," but whether you mean in one spot or all over the screen, I don't know, nor do I see any reason for such discoloration when you are using D. C., unless you are carrying an extremely short arc. Possibly you are using a very low amperage and a short arc. This might bring about the condition you describe. The remedy would be to increase the amperage, or length of arc. If you are using a solid carbon below you might, under this condition, substitute a cored lower of a little less diameter than the upper. This will enable you to carry a longer arc, and under such a condition might improve your light, though under normal conditions it would act exactly the reverse.

Screens.

John Hadler, Forest City, Pa., writes:

> My picture don't show up right, and I have two new machines with a throw of 113 feet. Can you advise as to what to do?

Brother Hadler, I would have to have a lot more information in order to make an intelligent diagnosis of your case. You have a long focal length lens, and in all human probability you are wasting a tremendous amount of light. I would suggest that you install a metallic surface screen, either Mirroroide, Minusa or some other screen of established reputation, and then line up your lens system as per Table 1, page 141, third edition of the Handbook. If you have not the third edition, send $4 to the Moving Picture World and get it, because the information you will receive on that one thing ought to save you a great many times $4 in the course of the year, besides giving you a far more brilliant picture. I simply cannot consume valuable space in the department week after week in setting forth things repeatedly which are dealt with fully, exhaustively, and completely in the Handbook. I presume your manager would think nothing of paying two or three times that sum extra for a little bit extra film service for one week. Well, I would most respectfully suggest to him that he expend the sum of $4 in 720 pages of matter, practically every bit of which is consumed in telling managers and operators how to put a better picture on the screen, and put it on at less cost. The matter on screens alone is worth ten times the price of the book to any manager and operator, I don't care who he is or how long he has been in the business, and the data on the lens system is worth very much more than that. That is not hot air; it is a statement of a hard-boiled fact. If you think I am trying to induce you to buy a Handbook because of the few cents I would make, why, I guess you will have to think it, and we will let it go at that. But the point is right here: If you should purchase the book, I would receive a comparatively small sum in royalty, and you, taking as a hasis the statement of practically all operators and managers who have purchsed the book, will receive knowledge to the extent of hundreds of dollrs. I make this statement by reason of the fact that several correspondents have rather criticised me for referring to the Handbook so often instead of replying to the question in detail. It is a question of trying to take care of the mail that comes in, in the best possible way. It is a question, gentlemen, of the conservation of space in the department and—there you are.

Punching Films.

F. L. Harecourt, Toronto, Canada, says:

> Have read the articles in the department with regard to punching films, and now I would like to inquire: what is the sense in putting in the sub-title, "End of part one," "End of part two," etc., at the end of a reel? Would it not be just as well to finish with a few feet of blank white film? I have used this and it worked better than punching. You speak of the manager who is not giving his patrons n square deal by over-speeding the picture. Well, what about the manufacturer who puts about two reels of padding in a five-reel subject, one favorite method being to have close-ups every few feet? Before running the features (?) of a certain make I generally cut out at least one-quarter of a reel of advertising which starts like this: Title; Copyrighted by; Produced by; Written by; Scenario by, and a fade-in of the entire company, to which, as if this was not enough, a sunset scene is often thrown in, which has nothing whatever to do with the subject. Do you call this being honest with the audience? As for the directors putting in "pep," they put in "pad." (Ask E. W. Sargent if they don't.) Can you tell me why some of the reels in features finish with a scene about one foot long before the tailpiece? This happens quite often in Fox pictures I have run.

This is an interesting letter, and brings up a much discussed and often cussed subject, viz.: padding. Yes, Brother Harecourt, padding is one of the major evils of the day. It is to be found, I candidly believe, in some degee, in fully four-fifths of our modern productions, but in some of the features, as Friend Harecourt has pointed out, it is carried to an absolutely outrageous extent. I believe, however, that a title bearing the name of at least the leading artists is good, though the fade-in of the individual members I personally find to be decidedly a bore. Padding is not honest with the theater patron, nor is it honest with the theater manager. It works great injury to the popularity of the moving picture form of amusement. Time and again I have sat through five reels of "feature" which contained really splendid material, and would have been a corking good photoplay had it been cut down to three reels. As a five reeler, however, it was a failure; it was a bore; it was a dishonest photoplay. Two of the reels represented nothing under heaven but deliberate padding, which was so extremely obvious that I would like to spank the ten-year-old boy who could not have discerned it. It would have been a splendid three reeler instead of a wearisome, boring five reel feature. As to the placing of a short portion of a scene at the end of the reel, I had not noticed that, nor do I know why it would or should be done. The "End of part one" sub-title which is placed at the end of reels of multiple reel releases is for the benefit of those who are using only one projection machine, and there are so comparatively few of those houses now that it seems to me this practice might now well he discontinued.

A Serious Error.

From New York City comes a letter calling our attention to a serious error in the article "Brother Hays Criticised," page 790, July 29th issue, in which I said "Sixteen reels properly projected would require almost three hours for the program." The three should have been a five. Sixty feet of film to the minute means approximately seventeen minutes to the reel, and 16 times 17 is 272, which divided by 60 minutes to the hour gives a trifle more than 4½ hours as the time for a sixteen reel program. Mr. Printerman evidently mistook a five for a three—not a very difficult thing to do. The brother says:

> I think an explanation is necessary. Why give Mr. Speedy-Manager a calling down for compelling his operator to run ninety feet per minute, page 790, July 29th issue, and then on the next page say that ninety feet per minute is proper projection, for that is how I figure the running of sixteen reels of film in nearly three hours. Sixteen reels properly projected should take 4½ hours. We showed the first article to our Mr. Pep-Manager, whereupon he turns the page over and displays to our gaze the Hays article and says: "Why pick on me when Mr. Richardson admits that eleven minutes to a reel is proper projection?" Who is to blame for this error?
> On the carbon question why call the operator lazy when he refuses to use a solid carbon for D. C. negative? Can you show me a good cored carbon on the market today which will burn evenly all the way through, without spitting and spluttering for more than half its length? You might find eight or ten, or even less in each hundle. Why, with the solid carbon a man cannot even thread his other machine without losing his light completely, and if he has to rewind, clean and patch film in the bargain, where is the sense in calling him lazy? When the carbon manufacturers turn out good carbons, instead of rushing out their product because they are overloaded with orders, possibly you might be right. In my opinion the above is the real cause for the poor carbons of today, for haste makes waste and poor workmanship, and the operators gets the blame for bad projection, while the public is the goat.

With reference to the carbon matter, there is, unfortunately, considerable truth in the brother's contention just at this time. I cannot, of course, keep track of all these things as closely as I would like to, but it is generally admitted that caroons are not as good as they might be, or as good as they were before the war started. However, I do not believe the matter is bad enough to justify a refusal to use solid carbons below, and as you all know I don't believe in the operator "threading the other machine," "rewinding," "patching and cleaning films," etc. My position is, and always has been, that the operator is there to project the picture, and to do nothing else under heaven while the picture is on. The work of all the artists in the photoplay is at his mercy, and their work is going to suffer if he is not right there at the observation port where he belongs. Also it is not honest with the audience to require the operator to do things which is going to hurt the show.

Old Time Operator Passes Away.

Local Union No. 293, New Orleans, La., says:

> Local 293 regrets to advise you of the death of Brother A. Fourreau, a member of this organization. The deceased worked as moving picture machine operator in several southern states, his period of activity covering the past twelve years. Brother Fourreau at the same time carried a paid up card in the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and this came in handy for the widow and two children, since the insurance was $1,500. Local 293 sent a floral offering as did one of the New Orleans managers.
> In this connection Local 293 would respectfully suggest to all union operators that adequate insurance is something every operator ought to have, since his position is one which renders the time of his passage into the Great Beyond a decided uncertainty. Brother Fourreau has many friends in the south whom we feel sure will be deeply grieved at his untimely death.

Out of Focus.

Harry Bowman, Jr., of the Bowman's Best Shows, writes enroute:

> Am throwing a 9 foot picture at 38 feet, with my machine about 8 feet to one side of the center of the screen. I have to do this in order to dodge the center pole, as we show in a tent. Now what I want to know is the cause of the left side of the picture being out of focus for almost two feet, and I cannot focus it by throwing the rest of the picture out of focus. Is it due to the angle of the throw, and is there any remedy except to move the machine? Have been using a Bliss Oxy-Hydro-Cet since last spring, and in my opinion it is a great thing for the traveling exhibitor. It is light and compact and the results exceed tanks and the Pastil. I expect to make another trip to New York the coming winter and want to be sure to see you this time. Will you be there in January?

No, I don't think I will be here in January, Brother Bowman. I expect to be hitting the high spots about then down in the sunny Southland, working my fool head off traveling by day, viewing operating rooms, and theaters, lecturing two hours each night, and doing lots of other things which spell good, hard work.

As to the out of focus effect, why 8 feet off center on a 38 foot throw is awful, and I would respectfully suggest that you scheme out some other way of supporting the tent top. It seems to me it could be done. I should think, however, you could sharpen up this part of the picture by throwing the rest out of focus. The best way to determine that matter is to set your machine temporarily central, when there is no audience, and project the picture to the screen. Never mind the poles; their shadows will come in the center of the picture and you can then see whether both sides will sharpen. If it does sharpen both sides, that is the answer. If it does not you will have to examine the machine head, and the lens system to find out what is wrong, because no one on earth can tell you without the outfit right before him.

Regarding Springfield.

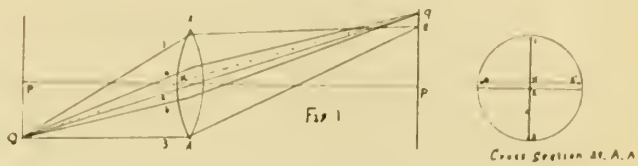
A member of Local 433, I. A., writes as follows, from Davenport, Iowa:

I certainly agree with your view of projection in Springfield, Mass. I spent several weeks there this summer, and in my opinion screen results in most of the houses were very poor indeed. I believe if any body of men needs information upon projection it is the majority of the operators in that city. Their view that you were peeved because they would not "buy your wares" seems to me to be rather childish. A man occupying the position you do, as editor of the projection department of the Moving Picture World, could not long continue to occupy that position and use the same as a lever to gain money. Springfield speaks of operators "educating you." Well, be that as it may, I for one have been benefited by your work and have found many, many useful ideas in the department. I have found that it is only by a long process of study that a man can perfect himself in any line of business. It seems to me that the letter of the Springfield Local does not do that organization any very great amount of credit.

I am not publishing this to "get back" at Springfield, but simply to show the committee responsible for the letter in question the view that a very great many are taking of their act. Some letters received comment on the Springfield matter very caustically.

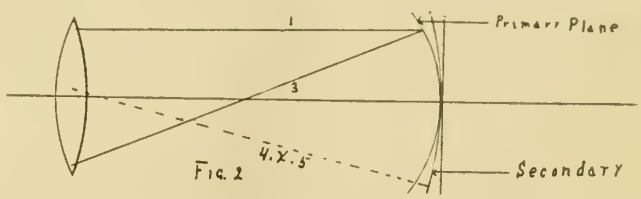
Coma and Astigmatism.

John Solar, Watertown, N. Y.



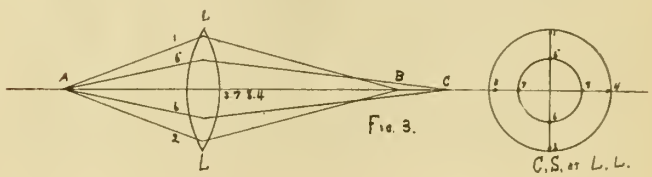
Replying to Friend Martin's letter of the July 15th number.

I see it is up to me to more carefully explain Coma and Astigmatism. We will take up coma first. Quotation: "It is now our object to investigate much more closely than we have yet done the nature of that phenomenon known to practical opticians as coma, and sometimes as side flare. We shall find that many of its manifestations are of an exceedingly interesting nature and of great theoretical interest, as well as of much practical importance. For a small amount of coma at the oblique focus of a point in a distant object formed by a lens-system may cause much more mischief to the definition than either spherical aberration or astigmatism, or both combined, so that it is eminently desirable to arrive at reliable formula of the second approximation by the employment of which it shall be possible to eliminate coma for any desired lens system."



Optical works treat this subject at great length, and it is impossible to explain in detail with formulas in a letter. I will, therefore, merely explain it in a general way, showing how it is caused. First I will explain the primary and secondary planes of a pencil of light. A pencil of light from any point of an object, as from Q, Fig. 1, spreads out in a cone shape as it proceeds towards the lens, and after passing the lens comes to a point at the focal plane of the lens, or very nearly to a point. This, "nearly to a point," is the cause of a great part of the errors of lens systems. Referring to Fig. 1. The circular part is a cross section of the pencil at the lens, points 1, 2 and 3 correspond to the same numbers in the other part of figure, and the line drawn through these numbers is the primary plane of the pencil under consideration, rays 4 and 5 are directly above and below dotted line X, perpendicular to the plane of the paper, and a line drawn through these is the secondary plane, of the pencil. In this I am supposing all other aberrations than those affecting coma to be absent. Question: "Since we are assuming the existence of coma without astigmatism, a condition which is hypothetical in the case of a simple lens, except under very special cases of eccentric refraction, but quite possible and quite common in the case of certain compound lenses."

Referring to the Fig. 1 again, we can see that the rays in the primary and secondary planes cannot all focus at the same point. Rays near the central ray Q, c, such as a and b, will focus at q, in plane p, q, e, rays 1 and 2, in the primary plane will come to a point nearer the axis than q, at some point such as e, and the rays 4 and 5, in the secondary will come to a point between q and e. Then q is the end of the coma at which the greatest intensity of light concentration occurs, while e, the opposite extremity, is marked by great diffusion.



We can get a fair example of the coma shape at q, e, by focusing the sun through a condenser. Tip the condenser to an angle of approximately 45 degrees with the rays of light, so that the rays will strike the lens very obliquely, and with the best possible focus we will have a bright circle, with a band of diffused light leading away from the circle, and by moving the screen to or away from the lens we will get other shapes of coma. Reflection has no place in projection, except loss of light. Martin says that I seem to think that astigmatism and curvature of field of the image can be used as identical terms. Also that astigmatism is a blurry effect produced in those points of the image which lie off the axis. As to the curvature part, it is possible to have a curved field without any astigmatism, but it is impossible to have astigmatism without a curved field. The blurry effect is due to astigmatism, caused by the difference in curvature of primary and secondary fields, as shown in Fig. 2. If by correction the primary field is thrown back directly on the curve of the secondary field, we have a curved anastigmatic field, that is a curved field with no astigmatism, the blurry effect, providing we had a curved screen with a radi of curvature equal to that of the secondary image or field, would be eliminated, but not entirely eliminated on a flat screen. Now if, by correction, the primary and secondary planes are simultaneously thrown back onto a flat plane, then we have a flat anastigmatic field, and the lens projecting such an image or field is termed a true anastigmat. We can also have spherical aberration without astigmatism. If the light is proceeding from a small point on the principal axis of the lens or system of lenses, we will have images of this point but in different planes, and they will lie on the axis. The rays from any zone of the lens are at the same angle, exactly equal in every way, consequently the primary and secondary planes are exactly equal and there will be no coma or astigmatism. This is not practical, but is given to illustrate more fully the primary and secondary planes. The crater being small, this in connection with the condensers is a good illustration of the above point. In this case there would be some astigmatism and coma, but it would be very slight. Now if we move the crater to one side of the principal axis of the system, similar to Fig. 1, we have an oblique centric pencil, and the primary and secondary rays will not have equal deflection, as was the case when the crater was on the axis, and we will have curved primary and secondary fields, with coma and astigmatism both present.

Martin further states that curvature of the field is not a normal condition, but is introduced artificially. The desideratum in correcting a lens or lens system, is the normal curvature errors, and excepting chromatic aberration, these errors cover practically all of the faults of a lens, or system of lenses. Why introduce any artificially when we have more than we know what to do with in the first place. Any simple lens that has aberration has normal curvature errors, and eccentric curvature corrections are introduced artificially to correct them, in the form of a stop or diaphragm, see Fig. 4. Refractive indices, ratios of curvature of the lenses, separation, and thickness of the lenses, tangents of the angle of incidence and emergence, also enter into the corrections.

The difference between coma and astigmatism, is that coma is in a lateral direction from the axis, and astigmatism is in a longitudinal direction or parallel with the axis.

Explanation of the Figures 1, 2, 3 and 4.

Fig. 1 is to give some idea of coma; it also shows what is termed an oblique centric pencil of light, the central ray, 2, passing through the geometric center of the lens we can see that the r rays, 1 and 3, in the primary plane will not cross the central ray at the same point. The rays, 4 and 5, in the secondary plane one above and one below the dotted line x, are at equal distances from ray 2, the central ray, and at the same angle of incidence, consequently will cross the central ray at the same point, but not at the same point as 1 or 3.

Fig. 2 shows the primary and secondary curved field due to normal curvature errors. With the refractive indices for the collective and dispersive lenses of a combination 1.52 and 1.63 respectively, the ratio of curvature of the two fields is approximately 2.2 to 1.

Fig. 3 shows simple spherical aberration.

Fig. 4. This is an oblique eccentric pencil, and shows how the rays are constrained to proceed to the lens at the desired angle, which angle will be altered by moving stop S S to or away from the lens; the diameter of the stop aperture also effects this correction. The principal differences between the oblique centric and the oblique excentric pencil, is that the central ray of the former crosses the axis at the geometric center of the lens, while the central ray in the other case is constrained to cross the axis at the center of the stop, see the central rays, Figs. 1 and 4. The ratio of curvature in the primary and secondary planes in this case is always 3 to 1, and is a negative curvature which is directly opposite to the normal curvature errors, and is introduced to neutralize them. The fact that the ratio for normal curvature errors is 2.2 to 1, and that for the negative excentric corrections is 3 to 1, shows us that the correction cannot be made simultaneously in both planes—that is to say, by exeentric correction, and many such difficulties present themselves in correcting a lens system.

I fear there are but few who will be able to comprehend friend Solar's meaning, but the matter is, nevertheless, given space on the theory that it will at least be helpful to our more advanced students of the projector lens system.

Quite True.

Robert J. Emory, of the Baird Motion Picture Machine Company, New York City, says:

> In a recent article I noticed you made a very strong point of the necessity for having an adjustable tension for the tension shoes. I do not know that you remember the fact, but that is one of the points we have on our machine which we have always maintained to be of distinct value, and naturally I was very glad to know it met with your ideas on this subject. For your information, our greatest trouble has been that operators will persist in using too much tension. In fact we recently had a head returned which we tested out exactly as it was returned to us. The picture was anything else but steady, but we eased up on the tension, whereupon the picture was perfectly steady.

I would again advise operators to give the matter of tension their VERY SERIOUS CONSIDERATION. As has been pointed out by Mr. Emory, it is quite possible, under some conditions, that excessive tension will actually produce unsteadiness in the picture, but whether that happens or not, excessive tension is harmful in every way, shape, manner and form. I would again call the undivided attention of operators and managers to "Adjusting the Tension Springs," page 463 of the third edition of the Handbook. This topic contains not only directions for securing the proper tension, but sets forth the reasons why that particular tension is right and proper.

Matter of Amperage.

George Cavelaris, Elyria, Ohio, says:

> My troubles consist of poor carbons, which burn unsteadily and 60 ampere fuses which blow out. I believe this is due to the following cause: I met the operator who was discharged before I took the job, and he told me that in order to get very much more light, besides cutting out all the resistance in the rheostats by turning the adjusting handle, he removed some of the fixed resistance. It seems to me that instead of doing this he should have put the rheostats in multiple.

If much of the fixed resistance has been cut out, Brother Cavelaris, the remainder will become overheated, and, in fact, get red hot. No, he should not have cut out any of the fixed resistance, unless it be a case where the voltage is not what it is supposed to be. However, I am inclined to think you have a heavy ground, because according to your sketch you are using an Edison 110 volt, 40 ampere rheostat, and if you force enough current through that rheostat, even by voltage rise or cutting out some of the fixed resistance, to blow those 60 ampere fuses, the grids would certainly become very hot indeed, and probably burn out within a short time. I would suggest that you carefully test your rheostat for grounds. See testing "Testing Rheostats for Grounds," page 260 of the third edition of the Handbook. If you don't find anything wrong with the rheostat itself, then test the lines. Incidentally, it would be a good stunt to establish a permanent ground tester as per Figure 108, page 258 of the Handbook. With such a tester you are in a position to make an intelligent test at any time, do it almost instantly, and without any bother at all. In a former letter you say you have a copy of the Handbook, therefore you can easily follow the directions and make the test. As to connecting the rheostats in multiple, if you do that you would have to have two more rheostats for the other lamps, or else connect through a double-pole switch, and have a dark screen every time you change from one machine to the other Impossible.

Tacoma, Wash., without giving any local address, says:

> There is a lady here who has a seven-year-old daughter of whom she would like to make a moving picture actress. She is a poor woman, however, and does not know how to go about it. Now, do you think it would be possible to turn the little girl over to some film producing company to take care of for what parts they would be able to use her in, so she can start while she is young and work her way up?

No, Tacoma, most emphatically and decidedly no! Under the conditions named the little girl probably would not work her way up, but instead, as years advanced, very rapidly work her way down. There is an astounding lack of knowledge in matters of this kind, and it is not confined to any age or class. The film producing companies would no more accept a proposition of that kind than they would accept a carload of dynamite if shipped to their studios. The children you see in the pictures are almost without exception the children of parents who are experienced actors, and who are working for the producing company in whose productions the youngsters appear. These children have not only inherited the talent for acting, but have been carefully trained almost from the cradle. They don't "just happen" to be little actresses and actors—not by any manner of means. They ha e been put through a very strenuous "course of sprouts," and the twig has been, with much labor, very carefully bent in the direction of the stage.

It is not within the province of the projection department to go extensively into matters of this kind, but it would be well if this particular lady, and some hundreds of thousands of other particular ladies who have similar ambitions for themselves and their children, could come to an understanding of the fact that the chances for "making a motion picture actress out of them" is about one in a million. It is a hard enough game for the experienced people of the stage. Of course there is an occasional exception where some girl of extraordinary natural talent has literally busted her way into the moving picture game. That is fortunate for her, but unfortunate for hundreds of thousands of others who, without any basis in fact, jump to the conclusion they could do exactly the same thing were they only given the opportunity.

Has Great Confidence.

J. O. Sneva, Underwood, Minn., sends $3.00 for renewal of subscription and says:

> I want to thank you for your answers to my question in July 24th issue. Yes, I found, as you say, that the No. 10 wire was too small. Have increased the size and can now lengthen my arc enough to prevent a "tit" from forming on the negative, and can now get a pure, white light, without discolored edges on the screen. Since I received the Handbook I have made some alterations on my machine, which I find has paid me well. I have great confidence in the Handbook—it is a great work. In closing I wish you much success.

It is, of course, gratifying to know that you appreciate the Handbook, but as a plain, bald-headed matter of fact, we have not yet found any purchaser who does not. Many thanks for your kind words. We trust the department will continue to merit your good will for a long time to come.

In taking scenic pictures, particularly, it is of great advantage to have an assortment of filters varying in depth of color. It is even possible with the use of the proper filter to make photographs of distinct objects immersed in bluish haze so that they are much clearer in the picture than they appear to the human eye. In taking mountain scenery where there are snow capped peaks, a filter is indispensible. Without it, it is almost impossible to get a picture defining the line between the white of the snow and the blue of the sky. With the filter, however, the high peaks will stand out with startling distinctness against the much darker background of the sky; and should there be clouds also in the picture, they will be rendered with great clearness. Where great distances are shown in the picture, as often occurs particularly in the clear atmosphere of mountains and in the west, a filter is an invaluable aid.

Filters are of use also in reducing halation. They permit of recording detail in brilliant objects which would ordinarily be overexposed before the darker portions of the picture could be sufficiently recorded on the sensitive emulsion. A dodge for avoiding halation without materially increasing the exposure is found in the use of a blue filter. As the emulsion is very sensitive to blue light, a blue filter cuts down the exposure very little and can be used even in an artificially lighted studio to reduce the halation often caused by bright objects and expanses of white cloth—such as table covers, bed spreads, shirts, dresses, collars, etc.

While it is possible to use a filter either next the film, behind or in front of the lens, it is generally the easiest to use it in the latter position, as it may be quickly attached or detached. Some sort of device for holding the filter in front of the lens is necessary and the closer it is to the lens without actually coming in contact with it, the better.

It is almost needless to state that the surface of the filter must be perfectly plain or optically flat and parallel, otherwise the image on the film will be distorted in the same manner as we see anything through cheap crinkly window panes or in cheap mirrors.

The introduction of a filter of any kind in front of the lens changes the focus by a small amount, dependent upon the thickness of the filter, also the distance of the object; therefore, when pictures are to be taken through a filter, the focusing of the image must be done with the filter in place.

In taking scenic pictures where there are no moving objects, many beautiful effects may be obtained by the use of a filter of a deep hue combined with the trick crank. The trick, or crazy, crank exposes but one frame at a time. By using it and turning fast or slow we can vary the exposure so as to get effects which are impossible at ordinary speed. A bank of clouds, moving slowly over a mountain top, when photographed through a deep-hued filter at one turn or less per second becomes, when thrown on the screen, a magnetic tornado, passing swiftly over a mountain top. Or one may compress the changing cloud forms of a beautiful sunset, which takes a half hour, into a few feet of film where the sun sinks quickly amid an ever-changing glory of clouds. A tropic sunset, with the palms waving in the breeze, silhouetted against the western light, becomes through the medium of the filter and the trick crank, a West Indian hurricane. An ingenious photographer will find many a beautiful bit made by these methods with which he may either embellish a drama or add beauty to an otherwise commonplace scenic picture.

In an article like this, it is only possible to go briefly into the foundation of the subject and those who are interested enough to investigate further will find much of value in three little booklets which are issued free of charge by the Eastman Kodak Company of Rochester, N. Y., and the Cramer Dry Plate Company of St. Louis, Mo. The title of the booklet issued by the Eastman Company is "Color Plates and Filters for Commercial Photography." "The Photographing of Color Contrasts," and "Tricolor Work" are the titles of the booklets issued by the Cramer Company.

A Book on Photographic Chemistry.

This publication is hardly a treatise on Photographic Chemistry as its title would lead one to suppose, though a useful and practical treatise on the methods of photographic manipulation. The physical behavior of the re-agents is touched upon, but little or nothing of the peculiarities of chemical behavior. The action of the various developing agents is well explained and the peculiar advantages for special opportunities dilated upon. Reduction and intensification are treated in the same lucid way to be of essential value to the practical worker, but the theoretical part of photographic phenomena and the interaction, and reaction of the chemical bodies is not explained as one would be led to anticipate under such a title. The value of the little pamphlet is in the information and suggestions it furnishes to the photographer for the best methods of using the chemical substances employed in producing the highest grade of work.

A Book on Art for Cinematographers.

The Appeal of the Picture. By F. C. Tilney, New York. E. P. Dutton and Company, 1916. $2.50 net. The cinematographer can find few books of criticism which will help him more than this one. The painter, the photographer, and the general reader will all find that this discussion of the technicalities of picture making is so simple and readable that the study of the book will be especially remunerative. Mr. Tilney is himself an artist, an art critic, and an art teacher, and thus possesses unusual training for preparing a book of this character. It is unusual for a painter to be as sympathetic toward photography as Mr. Tilney is, and so the book is of unusual value to the photographic fraternity.

A Test for Metol.

On account of the great number of metol frauds which have lately been unmasked and those substitutes which are guaranteed to be "the same chemical as metol" or "identical with metol" the following test given by Prof. E. J. Wall, of Syracuse University, will be of interest to many who purchase that expensive chemical.

Make a 1 to 20 solution in water, add a little dilute sulphuric acid, cool in ice water and then add, with constant stirring, enough sodium nitrite solution to make the mixture smell of nitrous acid. If the substance is monomethylparamidophenolsulphate, which is the chemical name for metol, a mass of fine white needle-shaped crystals will separate out of the solution.

Answers to Correspondents.

G. W. G.—Lincoln, Nebraska, sends a sample strip of film with many small round transparent spots, and wishes to know what caused them.

It is very hard to tell what causes the markings on the films which you sent, not knowing the conditions under which you are working, but it is evident that the small spots were caused by some foreign substance striking the film while it was wet. It looks as if you were working under warm weather conditions, and that the film had been developed or dried in a very warm place. If you could give more details about the conditions, it might be easier to tell you more, but at present all that can be said is that the spots are from something which occurred between the time of development and the time of drying. It is just possible that it may have been caused by too much acid in the short stop or fixing bath, which would cause a series of very fine bubbles in the emulsion which would burst on drying, and produce markings similar to those on the film which you sent.

Red—Cleveland, Ohio—Could you inform me what will remove or neutralize the red and green coloring on moving picture film. Some coloring comes out with plain water, but I have some scenes that I wish to enlarge but cannot remove the green coloring.

It is sometimes possible to remove the dye in a motion picture film by soaking it in a diluted solution of acetic acid, one part of acetic acid No. 8 to ten parts of water. A better method of making enlargements from motion picture film, would be to make a negative transparency on an Eastman Wratten Panchromatic plate, from which you can enlarge direct. As these plates are sensitive to red light you will have to manipulate them in the dark, or by the Wratten & Wainwright safelight, which you can use instead of the red light as with ordinary plates. As these plates are sensitive to all colors, it will not make any difference whether the films are dyed or not.

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and S. M. BERG

Musical Setting for "Phantom Fortunes." Released by The Greater Vitagraph.

Musical Suggestions by S. M. Berg.

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to aequaint himself with the geneal character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to antielpate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 34½ T "The great day" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 22½ D "Deering enters office" is a description of action.

Zalmon Pinsker, clothing manufacturer, finding business slow, listens to Bob Deering, who proposes to get him orders from the Allies' material buyers. He is hoping to receive a contract for $50,000 and good naturedly brings his friends in on the deal. Later realizing that he has been the victim of a swindling gang, he returns home broken-hearted. However, Bob Deering then shows him that others have been trapped as well, but there still is a market to be supplied right at home, and the picture closes joyfully for all.

The character of this picture is a bright comedy drama. The selection of the music has been made to carry out this effect.

Note particularly: Wireless effects at 34½, and telephone and elevator bells throughout the picture.

The THEME selected is "If You Love But Me"—Herbert.

Time schedule: 69 minutes (5 reels, about 4,600 feet).

Further inquiries concerning any phase of this work should be addressed to Mr. S. M. Berg, Columbia Theater Bldg., New York City.

Time Schedules for the Theater.

Owing to many theaters throughout the country being controlled by large corporations and booking being provided for by the head offices, musicians that have a little incentive and a gift of common sense are stepping into the positions of house managers, and amongst many of their problems, one of the hardest is the time schedules for their daily program.

Let us surmise that we are running a theater which usually gives a show of a five-reel feature, a weekly, an educational, and a one-reel comedy. We have a singer, an orchestra seated upon the stage, and a curtain which ean be raised and lowered between each of the shows. The musicians' hours at 2.30 to 5.00 and 7.30 to the close of the porformance, and both during the afternoon and evening, the singer is to sing twice and the orchestra play the overture twice.

The following schedule may assist. Attention is drawn to the fact that the orchestra play their overture in the afternoon at 2.30, and at 4.40. The singer appears at 2.50 and 5.00 o'clock. In the evening performance, the overture is performed at 7.31, and 9.37, and the singer appears at 8.48, and 10.54. Then note the time allowed for running the feature. So few five-reelers are today 5,000 ft., but to figure 70 minutes on an average for the running will be found practical. Of course the operator can always make up a little time during the opening and supper show.

By reading down any one column gives you the exact time for every show and by reading aeross gives you the time that every feature commences. In all instances the time given is the moment of commencing.

Schedule for eight-reel show with singer and overture:

Weekly	1.00	3.10	5.20	7.15	9.21
Curtain	...	...	...	7.30	9.36
Overture	...	...	...	7.31	9.37
Feature (five reels).....	1.15	3.25	5.35	7.35	9.42
Slides	2.25	4.35	...	8.45	10.52
Curtain	2.30	4.40	...	...	...
Overture	2.31	4.41	...	...	...
Singer	...	...	...	8.48	10.54
Comedy	2.36	4.46	6.45	8.53	10.58
Singer	2.51	5.01	...	...	...
Edueational	2.56	5.05	7.00	9.07	...
Good-Night	...	...	...	...	11.10

And now, as a second example, the theater commences its performanco at 1.30, during which time they have a continuous performance with no overtures or singers. The program consists of nine reels, which comprises a five-reel feature, a one-reel comedy, a two-part drama, and a weekly or educational. This problem is not so difficult to solve, as the only important thing is to get the feature on at a time in the evening so that late patrons will be able to see it. To facilitate this, the feature is started at 8.45. This is possibly a house that at the time of closing has hardly fifty people in the theater, the majority of the patrons in the evening coming always at 8.00 and 8.30, and going home a little after 10.00. The following is a suggestive schedule for a house of this description:

Schedule for nine-reel show without singer or overture:

Drama (two parts).....	1.30	3.45	5.55	8.00	10.15
Comedy	2.00	4.15	6.20	8.30	10.45
Feature (five parts).....	2.15	4.30	6.35	8.45	...
Weekly	3.30	5.40	7.45	10.00	...
Good-Night	...	...	...	...	11.00

S. M. BERG.

Deportment of the Musicians in the Theater.

In my past experience as musician and director of motion picture theaters, one of the hardest tasks was in controlling the musicians, and I am sorely afraid that I have made many bad friends from my remonstrances of their deportment in the theater.

I recall at one house there was no stage door, and the musicians entered from the front. I gained permission for them to bring their wives or sweethearts to see the performance, until the permission was sadly abused by a bass player, whose quiver was certainly full, he having a wife and five small children which he used to bring along, resulting in the courtesy of the management being withdrawn. Then under another management I was permitted to give each musician an afternoon off once in two weeks. There were fourteen in the orchestra, so that it worked very well until a public parade took place, and that afternoon eight musicians turned up for work.

Little consideration appears to be given by musicians for the enjoyment of the performance by patrons in the theater. One of the greatest annoyances which can possibly be inflicted on the audience is the tuning up of instruments. Of course where there is a stage, and the curtain is lowered before the overture, the orchestra can tune up to their hearts' delight. But where the musicians are seated in the pit, nothing is more disturbing than to be in a theater and see or hear musicians drifting in, possibly discussing politics, or relating some riske incident with gusto, and then take their seats and start to tune up, especially when it is done during the running of a picture. No violinist should ever be allowed to tune up his fiddle with the bow. Loud talking during the orchestra intermission or chatting over the rail with their lady friends only tends to lower the prestige of a theater.

Then again, the dress of a musician. If tuxedo is not desired by the management, at least dark suits with small bow-ties should be worn.

The leader should be at the theater in full time enough to have arranged his day's music before the performance commences. Each musician's parts should be placed in a separate cover and in the order of their playing. All of the musicians should be in the theater fifteen minutes before the time of starting, with instruments tuned, and to receive any instructions from the leader before entering the pit or stage. Drummer's effects of action, cornet calls, or special solo for any one instrument should have been noted, and a cue sheet should be made for that particular musician.

The audience's appreciation of any number played by the orchestra or orchestral selection should be gracefully acknowledged by the leader. Requests of patrons for the performance of some particular piece of music should be performed at the earliest opportunity, and noted in the program or on a slide.

Musicians must consistently remember that they are there to enhance the picture, and not the star attraction.

For instance, a few nights ago, I entered a theater that has the reputation of having a very fair little orchestra. It consists of piano, organ, two violins, cello, bass, flute, clarionet, cornet and drums. From time to time many requests are made. The picture on the screen was what might be called a sob-story, and yet, after being seated a few moments, the orchestra suddenly turned into the Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2—Listz, and really played it well, and received a baud from three people sitting near the front. Knowing this leader, at the intermission I asked, "Why the Rhapsody?" The answer was, "Request"! I remonstrated. "But the music didn't fit the picture." The answer was, "Well, if I didn't play it, they would have kicked to the manager."

Again I repeat, the musicians are there to interpret the picture, even if such a request had been made the leader should have had common sense enough to have explained that the character of the picture would not permit it being played at that time. But, if possible, somewhat later in the evening, with a picture where it would be more appropriate, such as an educational, scenic, or even a weekly. I do not infer that a Listz Rhapsody is appropriate for a weekly, but in order to satisfy patron and manager, it would have been a better choice.

I have no desire to class musicians as a non-thinking, irresponsible bunch, but it must be admitted that there are many who are thoughtless of their actions, and it is high time for those who are sincere in their work to realize there are slackers amongst them, and to take steps to weed out those who would bring nothing but disgrace upon the large majority of sincere and earnest musicians. S. M. BERG.

TWO BLUEBIRDS SET FOR OCTOBER.

From an abundance of subjects, Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., have selected two of their October releases and only the formality of fixing the exact dates prevents an announcement of the five subjects to be scheduled for that month. "Wanted—A Home" will be the issue for Oct. 2, and on Oct. 9. "The Chalice of Sorrow" will be released.

Lois Weber has directed Mary MacLaren in "Wanted—A Home," and Rex Ingram was the director of "The Chalice of Sorrow," in which Cleo Madison will be featured. The first subject will be a drama with a sociological twist, and the other will be deep tragedy. Both subjects have been created especially for Bluebird, and there is assurance that the standard that firm has established for all of its releases will be fully lived up to.

"Wanted—A Home" is released three weeks after "Saving the Family Name," in the belief that exhibitors will benefit in the second instance by the success Mary MacLaren is likely to achieve in the Sept. 11 release. Cleo Madison will be introduced to Bluebirds in "The Chalice of Sorrow" along with two male principals, Wedgewood Nowell and Charles Cummings as her principal support.

THE SUBURBAN AIRDOME NEAR NEW YORK.

The general complaint of the airdomer in this neighborhood has been the weather—viz., five days rain out of seven. This year it started out to cover the same old schedule till about the first of August when a continued dry spell began. Yet it is never clear sailing for the suburban airdome man. He furnishes pictures and nature furnishes mosquitoes, or is apt to. The condition is all to the good in real country towns or in any place where the exhibitor has spent enough capital to make his airdome markedly attractive. But hereabouts to plant money in an airdome is a bigger gamble than to plant seed in the ground. For the night that the airdome man books his best feature is the night it is most likely to rain. If his airdome is large and he can get a full house two or three nights a week it is not so dangerous. But a small airdome in a small town near a city so full of pleasures as New York is not a very sure business proposition.

These reflections were brought up in a talk with Manager Maurice Simons who has been running the People's Theater, an airdome on Main street at Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., twenty miles from the city, and a village of commuters. He has been providing a top notch program and has bravely stuck to it through the whole summer in spite of rain and other discouragements. He has showed, for instance, "Quo Vadis," "The Isle of Regeneration," "The Badge of Courage," "Via Wireless," House of a Thousand Candles" and other films of the same character every night. His regular Monday program is a five reel feature, a fresh news weekly, two animated cartoons and a scenic. It runs about the same in quality on every day.

The World man sat through a very interesting show at the People's last Sunday night. The projection by Edward Lewin was excellent. Yet Manager Simons has not made as much on his venture as he should to recompense him for time and investment. The trouble is not in the pictures and not in the poverty of the people. A cheaper show might have paid better, but that didn't appeal to a man of Mr. Simons' pluck and high ideals. He has stuck it out in spite of a wet July and has certainly given the people of Dobbs Ferry good service. He deserves much credit.

NEW YORK EXCHANGE MEN ORGANIZE.

On Friday, August 18, 1916, managers of the various film exchanges in New York City and vicinity held a meeting at the Astor Hotel, when a social club was organized. It will be known as the Film Club of New York City. Meetings to be held twice a month. The object is purely a social and "get acquainted" proposition.

On Thursday, August 31, 1916, a second meeting was held in the form of a luncheon at Hotel Astor, and afterwards a business meeting. Every exchange manager, and assistant manager, or any higher officials are eligible; and those who have not already joined can do so by corresponding with the secretary-treasurer. A. T. Beck, of the Mutual Film Exchange, was elected chairman and presiding officer, and W. E. Raynor, of George Kleine, secretary and treasurer.

The members are: A. T. Beck, Mutual; W. E. Raynor, George Kleine; E. M. Saunders, Metro; W. L. Sherry, Paramount; S. Eckman, Triangle; S. Kramer, Bluebird; P. J. Schaeffer, World; H. Boxbaum, General; E. H. Goldstein, Universal; M. F. Tobias, Mutual; Joseph Engle, International; Jules Bernstein, Monmouth; H. Hoffman, Universal; H. Gainsborough, Universal; S. Zieler, Universal; S. Abiles, Pathe; Mr. Hamil, Pathe; Joseph Partridge, V-L-S-E; Jack Levy, Fox Film Exchange; Phil Meyer, B. S. Moss; H. R. Ebenstein, B. S. Moss; Wm. S. Seymour, Jersey Paramount.

MARK M. LEICHTER IN NEW YORK.

Mark M. Leichter, general manager of the Lasky Amusement Enterprises, Inc., with offices in the Humboldt Bank building, San Francisco, has returned to the Bay City after a business visit to New York of a week. Mr. Leichter, who has been interested in pictures since the inception of the industry, was in the early days of the Moving Picture World one of its valued contributors. While in the city the past week he visited several of the larger New York theaters, including the Rialto and the Strand. Asked if he saw anything of interest, he replied that there was much, but he added that the picture men of the West did things in pretty good style.

Mr. Leichter reported business good in San Francisco. He said his company is interested in feature subjects and also in theaters; in fact, it expects to add to its list by erecting a substantial house in the Richmond district.

Observations

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

ON the eve of an era when the spirits of the moving picture people should be reviving, I say, "continue in your hopes." No place in the country has suffered more in the past three months than has Greater New York. The war, the Mexican trouble, and the epidemic have worked more havoc among the true and tried men than any combination of circumstances has in the history of the business. The war (we speak of the foreign war) has had much to do with the export trade. The Mexican question has had much to do with the domestic trade, in that it has taken (from New York alone) thirty thousand men. When you take away the men, you take the sinew of sustenance; if you take away the sustenance you naturally take away the support and pleasure of the family.

Which brings to our mind the subject of children. Many of the so-called reformers have pointed out during the recent summer season the fact that forty or more per cent. of the picture houses have been obliged to close because the children were prohibited from admission. It is not a direct lie on the part of the so-called reformers. It is a subterfuge. They know (and they cannot deny) that the picture shows are not dependent upon the patronage of children. The fact is, that the adults like the pictures. The mothers like them—but they cannot go to see them and leave their children at home alone, or leave them unprotected upon the streets. The truth is, then, that the sooner the authorities get wise to themselves, the less children you will find in idle play both in back yards and upon the streets. The writer has been the father of children. He knows, or has tried to know what is best for them; but when a municipal order is given to prevent the mingling of children in order to stay the spreading of a disease, and the authorities issuing that order do not cover the ground, but sit in their office and attack alone the theatrical branch (whether it be the pictures or others) he feels called upon to say there is some shortcoming. The elevated and subways and surface lines have no more right to pack their trains with children than have any of the theaters. Every railroad station (the Pennsylvania, the Lehigh Valley, the New York Central, the New York, New Haven & Hartford, the West Shore, the Erie, and all other companies) has notices posted regarding the examination of children before they are permitted to travel with their parents and guardians. Have such notices been posted by the surface, elevated and subway railroads? No! And why not? The Public Service Commission is at fault. If they were co-operating with the Board of Health, which they are supposed to do, they should have had the notices posted, and if they are not co-operating with the Board of Health, then any provision regarding spitting upon approaches to, or on, platforms, is a bluff. Then, again, if the Public Service Commission is working with the Board of Health, why is it that some member, or official, or employee of the Commission, did not inquire as to whether or not the health certificate order to railroads applied to the surface, elevated and subway railroads?

There has been a laxity of duty somewhere. Why should the burden be put upon the poor moving picture exhibitor? It was not put upon the legitimate (as he calls himself) exhibitor, but upon the poor man dealing to the amusement of his fellow-man, for the reason that the regular theatrical season was closed,

Why is it? Wake up, thinking people, and ponder over the question: "The moving picture people have been made the goat in this epidemic?" It is the truth. The regular theatrical season was closed when the epidemic started. The present epidemic is no worse than that which was in existence in 1907. It can be proved that there was a discussion when the present epidemic started (and among them medical men) as to whether it was more wise to give the epidemic publicity, or let it go as it did in 1907. The medical side of the story was that it would be better to have publicity in order to promote cleanliness. The medical fraternity were tools. Their recommendation and influence resulted in the closing of about four hundred moving picture houses.

The insidious hand of the old-time manager is ever present in every act in which the moving picture has been put upon the defensive. He is as true an enemy as the reformer fighting for censorship. He is worse, because he is fighting under cover. Any man who is interested in regular theatrical productions and at the same time is interested in the production of motion pictures is not an asset to the latter industry. He may be in it for the temporary financial gain, but his heart is, and will be, with the stage. He cannot comprehend that the photoplay represents art; he cannot conceive that it is possible to reproduce upon the screen an incident more true to nature than he can produce upon the stage.

It is a miserable man who will try to take from a man his means of existence. It is a more despicable man who will enter upon the field, pretending to be a friend, and try to ruin the possibilities of that existence.

* * *

The moving picture game, as many managers the writer knows of calls it, is not now in its infancy. That claim has been a fallacy for the past two years. There was a time when it was in its infancy. Its possibilities are great today. But because of a few men with some capital saw fit to embark in the business when that business had them driven to the wall does not prove that they brought it to a stand where it was able to walk of its own accord.

Most of the people who believe that they were the true saviors of the motion picture business are so blind to the truth that they cannot see further than their own office accounts. They do not seem to realize that there was money or brains in the business until they got into it. That is why many of them are not getting dividends. They know it all. If the poor dubs who saw the possibilities of the "game" before they got into it are able to draw a check, where do the newcomers fit in to kick with the stockholders? Who made the magnet? Was it the boy who said the picture was only a novelty, or was it the man who stuck and won? What made the newcomer go into the business? Answer: (1) He could teach the other fellow something. (2) "If there is any money in it, I am going to get it." Well, if he's got it, God be with him 'till we meet again.

J. Albert Hall Back to Stage

J. ALBERT HALL, who has done much excellent work for the screen, has returned to the spoken drama for the time being, and is now appearing in Chicago in Langdon McCormick's big stage production, "The Forest Fire," in which Mr. Hall plays the "lead," Judd Bradwin, a romantic westerner. The Chicago critics were unanimous in their praise of his work.

Mr. Hall's last work for the film has not yet been seen in public. It was in Aubrey Kennedy's great sixteen episode serial, "The Yellow Menace," in the part of Police Captain Kemp, the relentless pursuer, who follows Ali Singh, the "yellow menace" (Edwin Stevens), around the globe. Mr. Hall was selected by the author for this part because of his striking resemblance to the late Lieut. Becker, who was electrocuted at Sing Sing, New York, for plotting the murder of the gambler, Herman Rosenthal, by the gunmen, who also met death in the chair. His appearance in the police uniform is very imposing and most realistic.

J. Albert Hall.

His work in pictures is well known, as he has for several years played prominent parts for Famous Players, Kinemacolor, Pathe, Biograph and Fox, appearing in the support of Mary Pickford, Pauline Frederick, Marguerite Clark, Hazel Dawn, Edward Abeles, Wilton Lackaye and Robert Edeson. On the speaking stage he has supported Edward Harrigan, Henrietta Crosman, Laurette Taylor and Robert Edeson and has sung in some of the best opera organizations. He will be missed in Filmdom.

The Case of the State Right Film

L. L. Hiller, of Hiller and Wilk, Discusses the Program, Its Limitations and an Outlet for Exceptional Pictures.

THE State rights market is steadily and certainly coming into its own, according to L. L. Hiller, of the firm of Hiller & Wilk, Longacre Building, New York City, and still quoting from the same authority, pictures are going to benefit in consequence. While programs are going along the even tenor of their way, the State rights picture, that doesn't fit into the family group because it is too big, or too radical, or because there is danger of its shocking the orthodox conservative, is journeying from town to town in an independent and profitable career. "The program must look to its laurels," said Mr. Hiller, "it may even be forced to maintain a higher level and this is a healthy condition. Many of the large manufacturers are just beginning to realize how they may use the state rights market to advantage and what is more they are using it."

Going into the matter more in detail, Mr. Hiller first explained the possibilities and limitations of the program as he sees them. "The program is constructed on fixed principles. To fit naturally into the carefully perfected system of distribution a feature picture should be neither more nor less than five reels, which in itself is detrimental to achieving the best results, for it is quite likely that a subject may be treated best in less than five reels or considerably more. This is one limitation to which the program picture is subjected.

"More than that there is the question of building up a permanent clientele for a certain brand. To do this, the producer aims to maintain a standard, to convince exhibitors and the public, that in contracting for a service he will receive a definite type of picture week after week; in other words to make a trade mark represent a fixed quality. There are obvious advantages in such an arrangement, likewise there are disadvantages. What is the producer going to do with a production that owing to a startling theme, or some other cause, does not belong in his conservative program? Perhaps it is a very strong picture, but not the style that an exhibitor expected when he contracted for this service. There is danger of offending good customers, of damaging a reputation for consistency which he deems valuable, and the picture is either changed until it becomes harmless, relegated to the shelf for future consideration, or sent out without the endorsement of a trademark.

"Here is where the state rights buyer enters. To him there is only one thing that matters. Is it an extraordinary picture? And by extraordinary he means is it a picture unlike the conventional program release. Will it make people think and talk and will it justify exceptional advertising? Length does not matter at all. It may be three reels, or it may be ten. The quality of being different is what counts.

"Expense is also a factor and at the disposal of the artistic producer the state rights buyer puts any amount of money that is necessary. If the picture represents an investment of $250,000 or a bigger sum, and has the quality, the state rights buyer is willing to encourage the producer by buying the rights to his territory. Price is no object. The state rights buyer is always ready to invest more money, but he asks for quality in return. More and more state rights buyers are discarding the class of pictures that they used last year, because they haven't the quality and drawing power that the big features have today. The same evidence of development is not apparent in the program picture because the average program picture today is not much better from a quality standpoint than it was two years ago. Special features that must be released as state rights pictures have certainly developed, and for the discriminating buyer there are a large number available and more are now being planned and produced.

"Any showman knows the value of arousing curiosity. Supposing an exhibitor runs two slides, one announcing the coming of another release from the studio of such and such a company, whose product is shown every week, the other heralding the coming of a production of the state rights type. What is the effect? In the first instance the curiosity aroused is about equal to that excited when a minister publishes the text of his next Sunday morning's sermon; in the second an audience is really awakened by the possibility of seeing a picture dealing with a vital theme. Here is something fresh and different, perhaps I won't care for it, but at least the chance is worth a trip to the theater. That is the attitude a showman wants to create and with the right sort of a picture it can be done every time. He will use the newspapers and the billboards and every cent expended in advertising will be more than justified by returns.

"Now there are plenty of indications of a steady increase in the number of pictures that are not adapted to program handling. Everywhere there is a demand for photoplays dealing in a serious way with contemporaneous social problems; moreover men capable of writing such plays are ready to supply the scripts. I could name half a dozen and no doubt there are many others. The more the state rights markets are developed the stronger will be the tendency to allow stories to run for what they are worth instead of cutting them to a convenient length. It is very evident that this tendency is leading to better pictures and severe, but helpful, competition for the program makers."

Derwent Hall Caine

DERWENT HALL CAINE, named by the London Post as "England's greatest romantic actor," only son of Hall Caine, the famous Manx author whose books have sold in the millions of copies, has been brought to the United States by the Arrow Film Corporation to play in a number of its forthcoming feature productions. Included in these may be some of the best known books and plays of Hall Caine, the exclusive motion picture rights to which have just been secured by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow company.

Derwent Hall Caine.

Derwent Hall Caine was born at Greeba Castle, Isle of Man, where the family has resided for centuries. Although inheriting and developing unusual literary ability, Derwent Hall Caine early in his career showed that he preferred the stage to the pen as a medium of expression. His debut was made at Drury Lane, London, just ten years ago, when he appeared in "The Bondman." His power as an actor increased and he branched out, too, as a manager - producer, concerning himself mostly with plays written by his father. He played the character of John Storm in "The Christian" more than 800 times in London and the English provinces, and followed this astounding success with another just as big when, as "Pete," the title role of his father's play based on his own book, "The Manxman," Derwent Hall Caine appeared for four successive seasons in London.

When the American film version of "The Christian" was taken to England it did not meet with the approval of Hall Caine, and an English screen version of "The Christian" was made with Derwent Hall Caine playing the role of John Storm, which he had played so often on the stage. An instance of the popularity of this Derwent Hall Caine film may be cited in the fact that to date its gross receipts in England alone have exceeded $100,000.

BANNISTER MERWIN TO PRODUCE.

Bannister Merwin, pioneer editor of the London Film Co., briefly announces his retirement from that position in order that he may have more time for original writing and production work. Several times lately Mr. Merwin has gone on the floor to produce a picture and it is not unlikely that he will, in future, devote himself to realizing in action the stories he himself has written. It is generally easier to train a writer to produce than a producer to write, and Mr. Merkin's forthcoming productions will be watched for with interest.

NEW INTERNATIONAL PUBLICATION.

The first issue of "Excelsior" will appear under the auspices of the Italian journal, "Il Tirso Cinematografico." This new publication is international in scope; it is edited entirely in French, with a budget of notes in English; it is sent to the motion picture men of the entire world. The price of subscription is 10 francs per year. Address all communications to "Excelsior," Via de Tritone N. 183, Rome, Italy.

Universal Program for September 18

On September 19 Violet Mersereau will be starred in "The Girl Who Didn't Tell," a three-reel Universal special society and underworld drama in which Paul Panzer, Harry Benham and Charles Ogle play the other principal roles. "The Girl Who Didn't Tell" was written by Harry Dittmar and produced by Robert F. Hill. Nellie Slattery, Helen Slosson and Johnnie Walker enact other principal roles. Besides Mr. Kingsley the cast contains George Fernandez, Charles Dorian and Mrs. Witting. There will be no release under the Nestor brand on this date.

Ben Wilson will be featured on September 23 in "The Broken Spur," a Bison drama of the Canadian northwest in two reels adapted by J. Grubb Alexander from the story by Phil Hunt and produced by Ben Wilson. Charles Ogle, Joseph W. Girard, Clara Beyers and Rosemary Dean also play important roles. On the same day Gale Henry and William Franey will combine in the funmaking in "Musical Madness," a Joker comedy written by Harry Wulze, and produced by William Beaudine. Charles Conklin, Milburn Moranti and Lillian Peacock assist in the hilarity. There will be no release under the Laemmle brand on this date.

On September 24 the Powers juvenile drama, "The Valley of Beautiful Things," will be released. It will be followed by the Imp comedy drama, "A Desperate Remedy" written by Charles J. Wilson, produced by Charles E. Bartlett and featuring Gertrude Selby. Carl Von Schiller and John F. Connelly appear in support of Miss Selby. There will be no release under the L-KO brand on this date.

During the week the Universal also will release "Under the Spell," a special Red Drama featuring Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, supported by Douglas Gerard and Lulu Warrenton; "Buzzard's Prey," a special Imp drama in one reel; "A Wife's Innocence," a special Laemmle drama, and "After the Battle," a special Big U war drama in two reels, featuring Victoria Forde and William Clifford.

Anita Stewart in a Greater Vitagraph

"The Combat" Was Originally Announced for October 9, But Will Be Released September 18.

VITAGRAPH'S Blue Ribbon Feature to be released on September 18 is a striking example of the better, super-features that exhibitors can expect this gigantic organization to release. It will feature Anita Stewart, one of America's daintiest actresses, whose charming personality, combined with her great dramatic talent, has won the love and admiration of millions.

Scene from "The Combat" (Vitagraph).

In "The Combat" Miss Stewart is seen at her delightful best. Under the masterly direction of Ralph Ince the theme is carried through to a smashing climax. Supporting Miss Stewart are John Robertson, Richard Turner, Virginia Norden and Winthrop Mendell. The scenario was written by Edward J. Montayne.

In the opening scenes of "The Combat" Miss Stewart is ideally cast as the young society girl who has everything her heart can wish for. After a loveless marriage contracted to save her mother from extreme poverty, her character changes somewhat. She awakens to the sham and deceit of the world and determines not to become a part of it. When the man she had secretly married—whom she believed dead—returns to reproach her for her lack of faith, her conflicting emotions are registered in a wonderful manner.

Then comes the climax—the man she loves is accused of a crime of which he is innocent. Her husband, the attorney, tries by hook or crook to fasten the crime upon the real husband. He fails. Anita Stewart as the unknowing wife of two men, breaks under the strain. When she recovers the sky is once more clear and she is in the arms of the man to whom she first gave her heart.

Of particular interest to the exhibitor's women patrons is the array of beautiful gowns that Miss Stewart wears in "The Combat." These are sure to provoke audible comments of delight.

Rembush, president of the State League, that this organization will work hand in hand with him.

Balboa's Plant Growing Steadily

Eighteen Buildings Now Where There Was One Three Years Ago—What the Horkheimers Have Accomplished.

IMPROVEMENTS never cease at the Balboa studio of the Horkheimer Brothers, located in Long Beach, Cal. Starting in one small structure, three years ago, Balboa has been growing steadily until today eighteen different buildings are used to house its various departments. And the way its business is expanding, further additions will be needed in the near future. Those in charge are determined to keep abreast of the demand.

A year ago experts in photoplay making who visited the Balboa studio pronounced it a model plant, complete and compact. The Horkheimers, nevertheless, have been going right ahead with their enlargements. As fast as they made money they put it right back into the studio to increase its efficiency. This has been possible because there are no stockholders crying for dividends. The Balboa's owners take pride in the fact they have never sold any stock.

In the recent past a papier mache department was installed by Balboa. The work turned out by it is highly artistic. This is evidenced by the sculptural "props" to be seen in Balboa releases. The staturesque electroliers which adorn the grounds surrounding the plant attest this further. A whole building is devoted to this department.

Just behind it a blacksmith's shop has been fitted up. Many visitors to the plant cannot understand what need there is for a blacksmith's shop to make pictures. The best answer to them is to say that if there is anything in the world which does not enter into picture making it hasn't been uncovered. As a great deal of metal work is used in "sets" naturally a forge and anvil figure to a large extent.

To provide shelter for the ever growing "prop" department two large warehouses of fireproof sheet-iron construction have been added to the studio this year. Nearly all of the studios rent their furniture and other accessories used in dressing sets. Herein Balboa has made a radical departure. Ever since the beginning all sorts of odds and ends have been acquired until today this studio has without doubt an accumulation of the most varied lot of "props" in the industry. Furniture from the cheapest to the most costly period stuff is found in its warehouses, ready for immediate use when a director calls for it.

Most studios prefer to rent their "props" because it takes too big an investment to own them. Notwithstanding, in a year's time their outlay for rentals and breakage will practically amount to what the stuff could have been bought for in the beginning. The Horkheimers have always regarded renting as "penny wise and pound foolish" policy. Only recently they invested $10,000 in the handsomest furniture.

Important additions have been made to the wardrobe department. Balboa always gowns its extras, particularly when society gatherings or ballroom scenes are "shot." The smartest clothes made of the finest fabrics are brought from New York, the supply being refreshed twice a year. In between time these are made over and kept in A-1 condition by competent wardrobe women. A visit to the women's section of the wardrobe rooms is always a treat to fair visitors at Balboa. They marvel at the quality of the gowns, all of which when not in use are kept in glass cases.

No part of the physical plant has been overlooked. For the protection of the cameras and other costly paraphernalia a concrete vault was constructed. In this each cameraman has a compartment, with an individual lock and key. The carpenter and paint shops have both been amplified. To the former has been added wood turning equipment, while the latter was enlarged by the addition of a stockroom for wallpapers and moldings.

Balboa has entirely dispensed with the old style paint set. Now everything is "practical," as that term is used in the realm of amusements. No set is used twice. This is in deference to the public's growing demand for more variation in productions. When once "shot" a set is done over before being used again. For this reason it takes more time to make motion pictures now than it did a few years ago. More and more attention is being given to detail.

The grounds surrounding the plant have been parked and two landscape gardeners are in constant attendance. Beauty spots with pergolas have been provided wherever opportunity has made it possible.

"I know that some people believe you can produce in almost any sort of a shack," said President H. M. Horkheimer, "but that has never appealed to me. Beautification contributes indirectly to the finished product. It inspires, and that is why we have given so much attention to cultivating outward appearances at Balboa."

E. D. Horkheimer, secretary and treasurer of the company, is heartily in accord with this policy. The brothers communicate their ideas to Norman Manning, business manager, and he executes them. Team work has built up Balboa. The best evidence of efficiency is the fact that Balboa has gone ahead steadily since the day of its beginning.

Buy British Rights on Chaplins

Fred Bolton, Representing J. D. Walker, Closes Half-Million Dollar Deal With President Freuler.

THE British rights on the Mutual Chaplin comedies have been sold for $500,000. The announcement was made by Fred Bolton of London at the Hotel Wolcott in New York, who conducted the negotiations with President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation, and also the Lone Star Corporation, which makes the Chaplin comedies.

Mr. Bolton is a director of Walker's Mutual Chaplins, Ltd., Film D'Art of America and Canada, Ltd., and Anglo-Italian Films. Walker's Mutual Chaplins is the name of the newly formed concern which will handle the comedies, taking its name from J. D. Walker, known as the premier renter of the United Kingdom.

The deal was put through by Mr. Bolton prior to his departure from London. The Chaplin deal, amounting to a half a million dollars, is said to establish a record for single film transactions in the United Kingdom. The rights thus acquired by Walker's Mutual Chaplins, Ltd., covers the series begining with "The Floorwalker," and continuing through the twelve two-part comedies to be made under the Mutual's $670,000 contract with Charles Chaplin. The Walker territorial rights under the deal just closed take in the British Isles, India, Burmah, Ceylon, Siam and Africa.

As is customary in the Walker ventures, Anglo-Italian Films of Reynolds House, Great Newport Street, London, will handle the exploitation in all territories outside of the United Kingdom.

"It is the determined intention of the company to give Chaplin a 'fair crack o' the whip,'" said Mr. Bolton. "Hitherto Chaplin has universally been used in these territories as an umbrella under which inferior releases were foisted upon exhibitors. For the first time it will be possible to book a Chaplin by itself, and the enterprise will, I am sure, be amply compensated by success."

The Film D'Art has about 250,000 feet of subjects in New York on which he proposes to dispose of exclusive rights for America and Canada. Another enterprise in which Mr. Walker, Mr. Bolton and their associates are interested is the British Home and Beauty series of half reels showing British scenes and industries.

"I am decidedly pleased with the plans which Walker's Mutual Chaplins has announced for the distribution of the Chaplin comedies," observed President Freuler after the conclusion of the negotiations. "It is particularly pleasing to know that the Chaplin product will be marketed abroad just as it is here, strictly on its own merits and with 'a fair crack o' the whip.' as Mr. Bolton says."

FIRST NUMBER OF RIO GRANDE RATTLER RECEIVED.

Howard Irving Young, the Metro scenario writer who is at the Mexican border with the Seventh Regiment, N. Y. N. G., has been made associate editor of the Rio Grande Rattler, an eight-page weekly newspaper which is being published by the New York Division. Corporal Conrad Crawford, Company B, Seventh Regiment, formerly of the New York Sun staff, and a brother of Merritt Crawford, of Metro, is also an associate editor. Several copies of the Rattler have been received in New York, and it looks like a regular newspaper. In addition to many columns of live and pertinent news stories the Rattler boasts of several interesting departments. Mr. Young conducts a column of paragraphs, short poems, etc., under the title of "The Incinerator." Mr. Crawford has the lead news story in Vol. 1, No. 1. The Rattler has a cartoonist and everything. One of the striking features of the newspaper is its advertising. There are many columns of it, including one prominent advertisement for ice, and an entire page given over to a well known mineral water. The nearest motion picture theater, the Electric theater, at Mission, Tex., some twenty miles or so away, carries a reader in the Rattler. Manager Humason, according to the reader, is featuring a Charlie Chaplin for the coming week and announces a Metro picture for the week following.

World Schedule Complete

List of Releases from Now to New Year's Day Made, Edited and Ready for Delivery.

THE forehandedness concerning which William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, has been interviewed recently for publication appears to be well sustained in the company's official announcement that all its releases from now until New Year's are made, edited and ready for delivery.

These photoplays, produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Brady, embrace an uncommonly broad selection of themes and employ the services of all the World-Brady stars.

The first on the list, the release date of which is September 18, is "Friday the 13th," a dramatization of Thomas W. Lawson's famous novel with frenzied finance as its background. Robert Warwick is the star of this production, and the "big" scene is a photographic reproduction of the floor of the New York Stock Exchange during a panic.

Clara Kimball Young, in "The Dark Silence," follows. This play is of the European War in the sense that its story threads the battle grounds and field hospitals of France, where the heroine of the play and her lover are torn apart and reunited under vivid and thrilling circumstances.

"The Revolt," a drama of the great city, filmed from a noted stage play in which Helen Ware and Alma Berwyn met with great success throughout the country—a play that aroused vehement discussion of the sociological problem it laid bare—will be acted by Frances Nelson and Arthur Ashley.

"The Gilded Cage," with Alice Brady as its star, illustrates the vicissitudes of a young girl reared in the pleasant and spiritual atmosphere of the convent, with gentleness and goodness on every side, and suddenly plunged into the turmoil and wickedness of life at court—a veritable bird in "a gilded cage." This carries an effective love story, winding through intrigue, ambition, greed and violence. A great riot at the palace gates supplies one of the most imposing scenic episodes.

In direct contrast is "The Man Who Stood Still," a simple comedy of combined humor and sadness, the first World-Brady picture in which Lew Fields is the star. Mr. Fields personates a warm-hearted, kindly old jeweler who "loses out" to more aggressive business rivals, and suffers in ostensibly cheerful silence when grief and hardship enter his home. The sincerity of Mr. Fields' pathos in this play will greatly surprise those who know him only as a comic actor.

"The Hidden Scar," starring Ethel Clayton and Holbrook Blinn, is a modern drama of love nearly wrecked through a misstep in the past.

Robert Warwick, in "The Heart of a Hero," assumes the role of Nathan Hale, one of the most heroic characters in our national history. The photoplay is made from Clyde Fitch's stage drama, which met with country-wide favor under the title "Nathan Hale." A big, stalwart American play.

Marie Dressler, in "Tillie's Night Out," contributes the first of the "Tillie" series for which she has been engaged as star by the World-Brady organization. The various happenings to which Tillie is subjected during the progress of her night of recreation would have utterly exhausted a less enthusiastic comedienne, and they follow one another with a bewildering rapidity calculated to produce practically continuous laughter. Some of the funniest scenes are laid at Coney Island.

Alice Brady in "Bought and Paid For" enacts the heroine of George Broadhurst's most successful play, which ran for two seasons at the Playhouse, New York, and was a wonderful success for several seasons all over the continent. This is a drama showing the influence of drink upon a household in which a noble husband and a charming wife idolize one another until the insidious enemy poisons their happiness. The wife supplies a great role for Miss Brady.

The World-Brady interests are understood to have several other completed offerings in full readiness, but formal announcement of their identity and rotation is deferred for the present.

A new service has been established, called the Clara Kimball Young Service-World Pictures. This program provides eight re-issued pictures with this famous star, each re-edited and re-titled and all prints new.

First choice on the Clara Kimball Young program is given to the regular holders of World franchises with no advance in price. The printing and other advertising specialties for this service are entirely new and unique.

The new World-Brady campaign is characterized by foresight, vigor and that confidence of spirit which bespeaks the utmost faith in the growing future of the motion picture industry in which Mr. Brady is a singularly forceful and picturesque figure.

TWO VITAGRAPH COMEDIES ON GENERAL FILM.

On September 18 Vitagraph will release "A Perfect Day," a comedy produced at the Bayshore studio, through the General Film Service. It will be followed on Friday, Sept. 22, with another one of the screamingly funny Hughie Mack comedies written by Lawrence Semon and Graham Baker and produced by Semon. Hughie's latest effort to reduce his avairdupois is entitled "Sand, Scamps and Strategy."

This former Brooklyn undertaker has been putting his fat personality over so consistently recently that his name alone has come to mean great comedy stuff. Of course, due credit must be given to Hughie's confederates; to Patsy De Forest and to the willowy Eddie Dunn and to the agile Frank Brule.

"Sand, Scamps and Strategy" sets a pace for fast and furious fun that even the agile Hughie and his comedy pals will find it hard to live up to. By the time they get through spinning the villain on the old mill wheel and blowing him and his rascally gang to smithereens by setting fire to the powder house, they are fit subjects for a sanitarium.

"A Perfect Day" relates in comic sequence the trials and tribulations of a party of picnickers bound for a day of pleasure. They find it—not.

VITAGRAPH'S PRESS DEPARTMENT MOVES UPTOWN.

One of the first moves that the Greater Vitagraph has made since it was authoritatively announced that the V-L-S-E absorption was a fact was to get its press department under the same roof with its advertising and sales forces. This department, which is under the direction of Victor B. Johnson, now occupies quarters on the rear of the sixth floor of 1600 Broadway. Adjoining is the room occupied by E. Lanning Masters, who will be responsible for the advertising policy of the Greater Vitagraph.

Mr. Johnson, who will be remembered for his aggressive publicity work with the Warners and who later was a member of the advertising staff of the Morning Telegraph, will keep one of his staff at the plant to supervise the taking of genuine news pictures. He will also, it is stated, greatly augment his syndicate service to the newspapers of the country and co-operate with Mr. Masters in getting out a wide variety of exhibitor helps.

FLORENCE LA BADIE IN "THE PILLORY."

Edwin Thanhouser announces that following "Saint, Devil and Woman," the next Florence La Badie feature to be released through Pathe will be "The Pillory," by Philip Lonergan, and directed by Frederic Sullivan. Miss La Badie is supported in "The Pillory" by Marie Shotwell, Ethyl Cooke, George Marlo, Nettie Parker Spaulding, Marie Haynes, Yale Benner and James Seeley.

"The Pillory" is a strong tale of a country girl who is reared by a stern aunt whose religion is super-orthodox. Miss La Badie's mother has been driven away and finally Florence, innocent of any wrong, suffers the same fate.

She drifts to a city and is protected by a judge's wife. Just as happiness comes, the aunt, firm in her belief that the Bible must be interpreted literally, in a dramatic denunciation scene, crushes all of Florence's hopes. The ending is unusual and the story is well developed.

Paramount's New Stars

Make First Screen Appearance on Paramount Program, Week of September 25.

THE Paramount Program for the week of September 25 is worthy of special comment, by reason of the fact that, during that week, Maurice and Florence Walton, the dancers of international fame, will make their first screen appearance in the Famous Players production of "The Quest of Life." This is one of the most elaborate productions that has ever been presented by Paramount, and is an exceptionally clever vehicle for these two well-known stars.

The other feature for the week will be the Lasky production of "Anton the Terrible," in which Theodore Roberts, the screen's most celebrated character actor, and Anita King, will be starred. During the past two years, Mr. Roberts has played a wide variety of exceptional characters in Paramount Pictures, but in this production he is credited with doing his greatest work from a dramatic standpoint, that he has yet accomplished since the advent of his adopting the screen instead of the speaking stage for the portayal of his wonderful characterizations.

Surrounding the program this week will be Paramount's three short reel subjects, the thirty-third edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, the thirty-fourth of the weekly "Trips Around the World," with Burton Holmes, in which Bonnie Scotland will be visited, and the Paramount-Bray Cartoon, "Bobby Bumps Starts a Lodge," from the pen of Earl Hurd.

The Pictographs, Paramount's magazine-on-the-screen, for this week has four leading subjects, "Fresh Water Acrobats," "Dining Automatically," "Wonders of the Unseen World," and "Leather Footprints." In the first subject there is visualized the fact that a course in acrobatics is almost necessary in order to handle the sailing canoe, while in "The Wonders of the Unseen World" there is shown the various bacteria that exist in the water we drink, invisible to the naked eye. This is a plea for pure water, which is more necessary than pure food.

Treating humorously the manner in which thousands of people dine automatically each day, the subject treating on "The Nickel-in-the-Slot Dinner" is very interesting, but shows thoroughly the inside workings of one of the country's newest institutions. The subject of "Leather Footprints" shows in a most interesting manner the method in which custom-made shoes are manufactured.

The Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures for the week, continues the "Trip Around the World," leaving England behind and entering the land of the Heather. In Bonnie Scotland the trip takes in every possible point of interest in the land of the Scotchman, including the raspberry picking, which has grown to a wonderful industry, the granite built Aberdeen Marischal College, and through the Caledonian Canal, and then to the highest mountain in Great Britain, together with a number of other interesting places.

Earl Hurd, the well-known cartoonist, has eclipsed himself in the making of the Paramount-Bray Cartoon for the week, "Bobby Bumps Starts a Lodge," in which animated story, Bobby in search of excitement, decides to start a lodge, and gets hold of a goat for initiation purposes. His first victim is his friend Chocolate, but Chocolate wise to what Bobby intends to do, turns on the goat when he is about to make the plunge, and butts the goat with the top of his head, knocking him into the land of dreams. One hundred and one laughs are found in this cartoon.

Next week Paramount will release its first comedy, "Nearly a Deserter," a Black Diamond Comedy produced by the United States Pictures Corporation. This comedy deals with the surest fire trigger in the comedy world, the trick possibilities of the motion picture.

GAUMONT PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF SEPT. 17.

The Gaumont contribution to Mutual Pictures for the week beginning September 17 is made up of three single-reel releases and the third "Fantomas" episode, "The Mysterious Finger Print." Interest in Fantomas, the world's greatest criminal, has reached the point where the mere announcement of a new episode is sufficient to attract patronage. In addition to the curiosity aroused by the wide publicity given the "Fantomas" stories in American newspapers during the summer, the first two episodes have now been shown on the screen. "The Mysterious Finger Print" will be released September 21. There are two more episodes to follow. It is interesting to note that this series is to be followed by "The Vampires, the Arch Criminals of Paris," in nine episodes of three reels each.

The first single-reel of the week is "Reel Life," No. 20. This release of September 17 deals with subjects such as one would expect to find in a high-class magazine. First in importance is "Training Our Merchant Marine Officers," views on the New York State School Ship "Newport." A second section shows how a designer of gowns drapes his creation from bolts of material. The fiction section is another of the entertaining Gaumont tabloid photoplays from "Life."

"See America First," No. 54, is released September 20. It takes spectators upon a trip of rare beauty through the mountains of New Hampshire. Attached to it is one of Harry Palmer's humorous cartoons. It is called "Nosey Ned Commandeers An Army Mule."

The third release of the week is the Mutual Weekly, which is edited and manufactured by the Gaumont Company.

Frohman Company Had Good Year

Has Eleven Ambitious Features to Its Credit Produced During the Past Twelve Months.

THE Frohman Amusement Corporation last week celebrated its first year of activity in the film world. The event was made gay by a quiet little luncheon at the Hotel Plaza at which William L. Sherrill, George Irving, Ralph Dean, Jack Sherrill, Jos. Schwartz and several of the studio force were present. Not one change in the personnel of the concern has been made during the year. Except for the addition of Harry Reichenbach as business manager and advertising head, the original staff remains just as it started one year ago.

During the year, eleven ambitious features have been created. "The Builder of Bridges," with C. Aubrey Smith, released through World Film, is the oldest production; "Just Out of College" followed and became an open market feature. "John Glayde's Honor," released through Pathe, was followed by "Body and Soul," which World Film released.

Alice Brady was offered by the Frohman concern in "The Woman in 47," which was also released by World Film and later Miss Brady was presented by the Frohman Company in "Then I'll Come Back to You," Larry Evans' famous adventure story, in which Jack Sherrill shared honors with Miss Brady, and which was another spoke in the World Film releasing wheel. "What Happened at 22," with Arthur Ashley, was the next Frohman enterprise and was also taken by World Film. "Jaffery," the noted W. J. Locke story, was sought after by every program in the field, and was finally sold to William R. Hearst for the International Film Service, Inc. "The Conquest of Canaan," now complete, will be seen soon on one of various programs, and "The Witching Hour" is already in work and will be the forthcoming feature offering of the Frohman Company.

Withal, it has been a happy and profitable year for the Frohman concern. Their productions have featured many programs and those distributed by franchise medium have earned money for both buyers and exhibitors. World rights on the Frohman productions have mostly been disposed of.

LUCILLE GOWNS FOR BRADY-MADES.

William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, has contracted with Lady Duff Gordon (Lucile, Ltd.) to supply the gowns for all future Brady-Made pictures in which the feminine characters are drawn from the socially elect.

In describing the observation which had led him to adopt this expensive plan, Mr. Brady said:

"I was watching a picture at private view the other day when I noticed that the leading actress was wearing a dress which seemed familiar to me, and thereupon I instituted inquiries. These led to the information that the same gown had done duty in three photoplays, and I was not long in finding out that a good many directors, being mere men, are somewhat shy of gown knowledge. I am no supernatural authority myself, but I know a necessity when it smites me."

H. H. SHERMAN'S NEW PLANS.

Harry H. Sherman, the well-known film man of Minneapolis, who has achieved many successes both as an exhibitor and as a State right buyer, is about to enter the producing field and open offices in this city. Mr. Sherman says he has secured several stars and several capable directors and will soon be in a position to make a fuller announcement of his plans. His New York offices will have a department which will be specially devoted to the sale of leading features on the State right plan.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

Harry A. Sherman Secures Rights to "The Crisis" for the United States and Canada.

HARRY A. Sherman of Minneapolis, purchased the rights to "The Crisis" for the entire United States and its possessions, and the Dominion of Canada, on Saturday, September 2, from Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co. The purchasing price, as given out, is $250,000. Mr. Selig retaining an interest in the profits, in addition.

Mr. Sherman came into prominence some time ago when he purchased the rights to "The Birth of a Nation" for seventeen states in this country. His successful handling of that great spectacle placed him in a niche all his own as an exploiter of photoplays of the first rank. He carried an orchestra of twenty-five pieces throughout his territory; also a stage manager, property man and electrician, as well as a booth, two Simplex machines and two operators. A carload of scenic effects, worked electrically, identical with those used by David Wark Griffith, also accompanied him on his tour.

His prices for "The Birth of a Nation" were 25 cents to $1 for matinees and 50 cents to $2 for evenings. At these prices his gross receipts for ten months, as shown by the books of his company, were $1,036,339.

Later Mr. Sherman gained the control of "Ramona" for the same territory, showing at prices of 25 to 50 cents for matinees and 25 cents to $1 nights. He informs me that each of his three shows on the road has been doing a business of about $5.000 per week gross.

He announces that he will handle "The Crisis" on the same elaborate scale as "The Birth of a Nation." He will book it personally (as in the case of the Griffith film) in the best theaters in the country—both dramatic and moving picture houses.

The first great private presentation of "The Crisis" will be given in New York, in the near future, the date and the theater to be announced later in this paper.

Mr. Sherman says that he considers "The Crisis" one of the greatest film dramas ever released. "It was only after my conferees and myself had viewed this film individually and collectively that we concluded to pay the very high price demanded by Mr. Selig for an interest in the production," he states. "At that, Mr. Selig was justified in his demands. for 'The Crisis' is without doubt one of the most marvelous, appealing, and gripping spectacles I have ever seen. I consider it a worthy successor to 'The Birth of a Nation.' In 'The Crisis' every scene advances a strong story. Every member of the cast is exceptionally good and the photography and lighting effects cannot be surpassed. We have a winner in 'The Crisis' and will present it to the public in a manner commensurate with its greatness."

Formation of Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Combination Renews Confidence.

Exhibitors throughout the country are much pleased over the news of the formation of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay combination. Wires sent out last week from George Kleine's Chicago office to branch managers in the middle and far west and south have brought replies that the business has been stimulated in a way that has not been experienced for a long time. The getting together, in organization, of four of the pioneers and best known men in the business could not have resulted otherwise. It was a distinct call from the days when conservatism ruled to the present time, and cannot fail to result in renewed confidence in the future outlook.

It as been given out that V-L-S-E will handle the Selig and Essanay product up to September 16, and that on October 2 and thereafter the films will be released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay. An office in Cleveland has been added to the George Kleine exchanges, making twenty-three exchanges in all in the United States and Canada.

A conference of branch managers located in the middle and far west and south will meet in the Chicago office on Sunday, September 10, and on the same date a meeting will be held in George Kleine's New York office, which will be attended by all branch managers east of Pittsburgh, including Montreal and Canada.

So Say We—All of Us.

In Hearst's Examiner and American of September 7 an editorial appeared under the head, "Keep public pictures as clean as public schools." It is forcible and timely and will meet with the approval of every decent man in the moving picture business. Both the producer who makes an unclean film and the exhibitor who shows it should be made to suffer equally. The editorial follows:

Any immoral picture should be stopped the very first day it is displayed.

It is the duty of the magistrates, of the public prosecutors and the police to see that such exhibitions are stopped and to see that the exhibitors are punished.

When the Hearst papers fought the proposal to establish a board of censors for moving pictures they took the stand that the present laws are amply sufficient to insure the decency of the moving picture theaters.

The Hearst papers contended that instead of a board of censors, with arbitrary power to injure, or even to ruin, a perfectly legitimate moving picture enterprise, there should be perfect freedom of the moving picture—just as there is perfect freedom of the newspaper or the novel—with every exhibitor subject only to the laws forbidding immoral exhibitions.

And we contended, and still contend, that this liberty of the moving picture, coupled with the strict enforcement of the laws now on the statute book, is the only constitutional and effective method of handling this problem of the movies.

But, of course, the only way to make this constitutional method truly effective is to enforce the laws against immoral and vicious moving pictures with the utmost strictness.

The purity of the moving pictures ought to be protected as carefully as the purity of the press or the purity of the public schools.

As we have pointed out so many times, the moving pictures are both news publications and public schools.

The man who would willingly introduce indecency into either the printed or the pictorial press is a scoundrel and ought to be put behind bars to think himself over.

The moving picture business needs no other censorship, and should have no other censorship, than the censorship of public opinion and the strict enforcement of the same laws which are rightfully enforced against an improper newspaper or an improper book.

And every man and woman who loves the clean and pretty moving picture shows, and who has brains enough to perceive the instructive usefulness of this wonderful invention, ought to lend a hand in stopping improper exhibitions.

When you see a nasty, immoral, vicious film, report the matter at once to the authorities and demand that the exhibition be stopped.

Be a committee on public welfare yourself.

As far as the Hearst papers have any power or influence, that power and that influence will be exerted to the last ounce in defense of clean moving pictures, against meddling politicians and impossible cranks and faddists, and at the same time will be exerted to the last ounce in a determined warfare upon indecent and improper moving pictures.

Keep the public pictures as clean as the public press and the public schools!

Let that be the slogan

And do your part to see that it is enforced.

You may be absolutely sure that the Hearst papers will do their part, and do it with all their might and power.

The explicit instruction of Mr. Hearst to all his publishers and editors is to permit no improper picture films to be advertised in any of his publications.

The further instruction to all his editors is to use every legitimate means to stop exhibitions of immoral and therefore illegal pictures.

And the Hearst newspapers will follow those instructions to the letter.

The immoral picture must go.

Chicago Film Brevities.

The executive staff of the Mutual Film Corporation arrived in Chicago from New York Saturday, September 2 on a special express train. The executive offices occupy the eleventh floor of the Consumers' Building, South State and Quincy streets. When a call was made on Wednesday, September 6, things were getting into shape on the eleventh floor, and the telephone system had just been completed. Among the ninety-seven people on the executive staff, officers and employees included, were John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation; James C. Graham, general manager; J. D. Sullivan, general manager of the serial and Charlie Chaplin departments, and Terry Ramsaye, publicity manager. The entire eighteenth floor of the Consumers' Building is occupied by the exchange departments and others affiliated. The arrival of the large Mutual force furnished material for extensive articles in the city press, attention being directed to the fact that it brings ninety-seven officials and employees and fifty families into the city; also that it shows the growing importance of Chicago as the ideal film distributing center in the country. Unfortunately, Mr. Freuler was out when I called, which prevents me from giving more live matter concerning the arrival of the Mutual forces.

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. has taken over the suite of offices formerly occupied by the Chicago Grand Opera Company in the Auditorium Building, Wabash avenue and Congress street. The offices comprise suite 28 in the building and are located on the second floor. They will be used as a complete service station of the company, in addition to housing the city sales organization. Here local orders can be delivered and sent out promptly to the laboratory, and also delivery of the finishhed product can be made from this central point. Visiting customers will also find pleasant accommodations in suite 28, the location of which is easily accessible from all parts of the city, by elevated or surface lines.

The Hoyburn theater in Evanston, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, had a strange experience one day last week. In the midst of the presentation of a picture, Miss Grace Brooks, one of Evanston's two moving picture censors, came into the theater and stopped the show. She told the manager that the cut-outs she had ordered earlier in the day were not enough, and that during the period of stopping she would make further excisions. Half an hour or more the spectators were obliged to sit, while Miss Brooks was engaged in work that should have been done before the film was given into the hands of the exhibitor. They were obliged during that time to study the following explanation, which appeared on the screen: "The next part of this picture will be shown as soon as our friend, the censor, gets through making the cut-outs." It is about time that exhibitors and the public should be protected by the courts from such high-handed practices by so-called censors.

Levy, proprietor of the Revelry theater, 342 East 47th street, and owner of the Levy Drug Co., 47th street and Calumet avenue, this city, is a candidate for the primary, to be held Wednesday, September 13, for the Republican nomination for the short term membership of the board of assessors. During his recent trip to New York City, Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, arranged for the handling of several prominent features in his chain of theaters, through the Central Film Corporation. Among these are Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law," for October; "War-Brides," with Nazimova, directed by Herbert Brenon, which is due November 1, and later Jules Verne's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," by Universal, and Mary Pickford's first Artcraft production, "Less Than the Dust."

Matt B. Snyder, who played the role of Colonel Carvel in "The Crisis," is restless about the first presentation of that big Selig production. Writing to Selig's Chicago office recently, he said: "Hurry up with 'The Crisis' for I want to see it." Mr. Snyder can easily claim to be the oldest photoplay actor in harness, at the present time. He is eighty-two years old, but is hale and hearty and as straight as an arrow. He graduated from Annapolis Naval Academy many years ago, toured the world as a member of the United States navy, and enlisted in the Confederate army at the outbreak of the Civil War, winning the rank of major. Following the war he became an actor and appeared in support of Booth, Barrett, Barry Sullivan, Kean and Charlotte Cushman. It will be a treat to see Mr. Snyder in his fine impersonation of Colonel Carvel.

Michel Mowschine, a talented Chicago director and musician, has just completed a special musical score for "The Crisis," which has occupied several weeks. Wm. N. Monmouth Film Corporation's Campaign to Be Along Methods Employed by Most Successful Merchants.

THE recent announcement by the Monmouth Film Corporation of their forthcoming production of "Jimmie Dale, alias 'The Grey Seal'," a series of two-reel pictures—sixteen in number—carries with it a significance far greater than the mere information that a new picture is under way.

The big feature of the Monmouth Company's business policy is a big, newspaper and advertising publicity campaign based on regular merchandising plans such as are applied to selling tobacco, biscuits, or any other salable article. Even the artistic temperament of the actor will not be taken into consideration when the plans as to how to sell pictures are under way.

The Monmouth Film Corporation entered into a contract with Myron C. Fagan, editor-in-chief of the Associated Drama News Service, to conduct a newspaper advertising—rather than publicity—campaign. Mr. Fagan in turn drew into the campaign the George L. Dyer agency. Jules Burnstein, the vigilant business manager of the Monmouth Film Corporation, Mr. Fagan and the Dyer agency have been in consultation for some time, gradually shaping the form of their campaign. Mr. Burnstein, at the present writing, refuses to divulge the exact manner in which their campaign will be conducted, as he prefers to spring it on the public as a surprise.

It is hardly necessary to discuss the manufacturing end of the Monmouth Film Corporation, for that is in the hands of Harry McRae Webster, famed for his work while with the Essanay people, and with such stars as E. K. Lincoln, Paul Panzer, Edna Hunter and Doris Mitchell, they should put out a wonderful production.

NEW PUBLICITY MAN FOR PARAMOUNT IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Vernon R. Moore, a well known newspaper man, has been appointed Director of Publicity of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, San Francisco, Cal., distributors of Paramount Pictures in California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, New Mexico and Nevada, and will assume his active duties on September 11.

Prior to this time, the publicity has been handled by J. W. Allen, but in view of the country-wide advertising and publicity campaign that has been inaugurated by Paramount Pictures Corporation to help the exhibitor build his business for permanency upon better pictures, for better theaters and a better public. Mr. Moore has been added to this department, which will, for a short while to come, be supervised by Mr. Allen upon the larger details of the campaign.

BALSHOFER COMMENTS ON MOROSCO'S ARTICLE.

President of Yorke-Quality Gives His Opinion of Mr. Morosco's Celebrated Interview in the Green Book Magazine.

WE HAVE received this week a letter from Fred Balshofer, President and General Manager of Yorke-Quality Picture Corporation, commenting on Oliver Morosco's sensational article in the Green Book Magazine, which created such furore in picture circle and a perfectly "ripping" editorial in our Chicago "Letter" by our old friend James S. McQuade. Says Mr. Balshofer, partly, in Mr. Morosco's defense:

"To say that I was somewhat amazed when reading Mr. Morosco's recent article, the basis of which is 'that the motion picture industry will go down,' would be telling the truth, for I candidly think that his attitude was misunderstood by the interviewer—I am quite sure that Mr. Morosco's intentions were good at the time.

"His statement that business is not top-notch at the present time, is due to the summer season, and it has always been that a number of the smaller picture houses close during the warm months. This does not necessarily mean that the business is taking a slump. The same condition obtains in the speaking stage situation—usually 75 per cent. of the big theatres close down during the summer season.

"Motion pictures will always live—so will the stage. The former, catering to a distinctive audience, is being patronized by a majority of the speaking stage followers, whereas, the speaking stage has only its regular following and does not draw from the ranks of picture fans, because the latter can have as much enjoyment at a picture show for twenty-five or fifty cents and, consequently, nine cases out of ten, cannot see their way clear to paying a dollar or two to see a legitimate attraction.

"Therefore, the picture business will always progress, providing, of course, film manufacturers continue making attractive pictures. I do not think the article judged the industry justly when it spoke of a number of fly-by-night companies as those that have crumbled in the past year. In every profession you will find the same conditions. The conventional statement of some people that the popularity of films is based on novelty and that this novelty has worn off, suggested the following thought: Every form of amusement is a novelty, or it wouldn't come under the classification of entertainment, and as long as these respective forms of amusement can be entertaining their success is assured. People want to be entertained and why, at this present day, will they balk at motion pictures when they are being given big dramatic stories interpreted by capable casts? Now that people have been educated up to attractive pantomime—which is motion pictures, I don't believe that the screen public will ever give the voice a thought any more. Why is the ballet, which is purely pantomime, successful? We must admit that the voice is a wonderful thing, but motion pictures have been successful up until this time without it. What is to stunt their growth in the coming months?"

THE CHRISTIE BROTHERS RETURN FROM NEW YORK.

Al. E. Christie, director general, and Charles H. Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, returned last week from a six months' trip to New York, where they have made arrangements for the independent release of their pictures.

During the absence of the Christie brothers, the studio was almost doubled and the stage capacity increased and everything put in readiness for a rush of the new production.

Only one and two-reel pictures will be produced by the Christies and two companies will be kept constantly employed. Among those now taking part in the new pictures are Betty Compton, Billy Rhodes, Jane Waller, Ethel Lynne, Neal Burns, Eddie Barry, Harry Ham, Harry Rattenbury, Stella Adams, George French, Dave Morris and Nolan Leary. Horace Davey is the director.

The first one-reel comedy to be released is called "A Seminary Scandal," featuring Billy Rhodes, Eddie Barry and Harry Ham.

Al Christie has been producing comedies in Los Angeles for the past eight years, first with the old Nestor Company and later for Universal, with the Nestor brand. It was only last spring that he pulled away from Universal to make his own pictures.

Mr. Christie states that the company is in the market for one and two-reel clean, original comedy scenarios.

GRIFFITH STUDIOS STAGE ELABORATE RACE TRACK PICTURE.

George Seigmann, who acted as assistant to D. W. Griffith during the filming of "Intolerance," is now busily engaged in directing the Triangle Fine Arts production, "The Best Bet," featuring Dorothy Gish.

"The Best Bet" is a story of the race track and deals with the efforts of a young girl, Dorothy Gish, to reform her sweetheart, who had developed a mania for gambling. This chap is the owner of a beautiful horse. The man in the case agrees to forsake the race track, after one final race in which he bets all his money on his horse to win. The race is jobbed and the horse made to go lame. Another race takes place in which the hero's horse wins and the villian in the story successfully routed.

Dorothy Gish in "The Best Bet" (Fine Arts).

More than two thousand extra people were engaged in filming the race track scenes.

Six race horses and jockeys from the Tia Juana race tracks were secured for the scenes, which were staged at Exposition Park, Los Angeles. The scene at the track, where four jockeys try to pocket the favorite horse and prevent it from winning the race is one of the most spectacular scenes of its kind ever filmed. In one of the scenes, six horses are shown at full speed. The camera was mounted on an automobile which was speeded up to keep just a few feet in advance of the on-coming horses. One of the horses fell, throwing the rider, but luckily neither the rider nor the animal were injured.

In the cast supporting Dorothy Gish are Carl Stockdale, Adele Clifton, Loyola O'Connor, Tom Wilson and Joe Neery. "The Best Bet" was written by Tod Browning, who is now directing the melodramatic farce, "The Fatal Glass of Beer."

BEN TURPIN TAKES A TUMBLE.

Life to Ben Turpin, the nervy little Vogue comedian, is just one chance taking episode after another.

Ben has probably been thrown from trolley cars, run over by autos, bitten by dogs, fallen down stairs and kicked by more horses than any comedian in the business, yet he always comes up smiling, and ready for something new.

Last week he was called upon to crawl into an ash pit under red hot fire, and went through with it as though the incident was an every-day occurrence.

Early this week the little fellow was called upon to stage a fight on the edge of a smoke stack 194 feet from the ground, as no other actor would take the chance with Ben he was compelled to use a dummy. In throwing the latter over the edge of the stack, Ben missed his footfold and fell. He would have landed on the ground if his rare presence of mind had not come to the rescue.

Ben grasped the small ladder which had been strung from the top of the stack, and although badly bruised, managed to keep from falling the entire distance; however, he insisted on finishing the scene. The man has no nerves. He is all nerve.

MABEL CONDON EXCHANGE BRANCHES OUT.

Ernest Shipman, manager for the Mabel Condon Exchange, has left this week for the East to open up branch offices in New York and Chicago for his concern.

The growth of the Mabel Condon Exchange has been phenomenal. A little over a year ago Miss Condon came out to the Coast as representative for the New York Dramatic Mirror. In a remarkably short time she got acquainted with the trade and became exceedingly popular with the photoplayers. A number of the prominent screen stars requested her to handle their publicity. The business took on such proportions that she was compelled to engage several assistants and open an office in Hollywood.

The Mabel Condon Exchange handles motion picture publicity, motion picture and dramatic plays, and personal representation of authors and players. It has a play department and an engagement department. Ernest Shipman, well known in film circles, is the manager of the play department. During the past month alone over eight hundred photodramas were handled through this department and 48 sold.

William Colvin, formerly with Universal, is in charge of the engagement department. The exchange personally represents a great number of photo players and through this department secures their clients engagements with the various film companies. One of the best known and highest salaried directors in the business today was placed at a fabulous contract through this exchange.

Miss Condon's latest enterprise is Coast representation for Eastern film companies, and the handling of State rights.

HELEN WARE TO APPEAR IN "THE GARDEN OF ALLAH."

Helen Ware, the well known actress, has been engaged by William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope company, to assume the leading feminine role in "The Garden of Allah," a spectacular 12 reel film production now being rehearsed at the Selig Western studios by Director Colin Campbell. Miss Ware arrived in Los Angeles a few days ago.

Helen Ware made her debut with Maude Adams in "The Little Minister." She appeared in "An American Centleman," "Under Two Flags," "Quo Vadis," "The Third Degree," and starred in "The Price," "Within the Law," and was a member of the all-star cast in the New York revival of "A Celebrated Case."

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Thomas Holding, who had the lead with Pauline Frederick "The Eternal City," has been engaged by the Morosco Photoplay Company, to play opposite Kathlyn Williams in the forthcoming production of "Naomi," on which work was commenced September 6. Mr. Holding has starred in several features for the Famous Players, notably with Pauline Frederick in "The Eternal City," and has an international reputation on the legitimate stage.

Wyndham Standing, who has been playing important roles at the Morosco theater, will also be included in the cast.

We are informed by the Golden Gate Film Company, 121 South Broadway, this city, that they intend to build a first-class studio for motion picture, portrait, publicity, reproduction and commercial use. The studio will be located in Hollywood and a two-story building of artistic design erected. The plant will cover 3,000 square feet and have a very complete light equipment. Nelson F. Evans is the manager.

Clarke Irvine, "Movie Mascot" manufacturer, scenario writer of some fame and, last but not least, our own co-correspondent, is taking a well-earned vacation and has gone to San Francisco, accompanied by his cousin, Mr. Jeff Irvine. Mr. Irvine will be gone, we hope, not more than two weeks.

We are in receipt of another invitation this week from the "Screamers," with the kind request to wire, write or 'phone our reservations Saturday morning to Kenneth McGaffey, the genial publicity director of the Lasky studios. Among the attractions on the bill-of-fare are stewed sphinx, camel's milk, chopped cheops, pickled pyramids, and other Egyptian delicacies, including Oriental and Occidental dancing. Kenneth, my boy, we shall be there with bells on!

Fred J. Balshofer, president and general manager of the Metro-Yorke studios, closed negotiations this week with Little, Brown & Co., the Boston publishers, for the motion picture rights to "Big Tremaine," the novel by Marie Van Vorst, author of "The Girl from His Town," and several other fiction successes. Production will be started in a few days by Henry Otto, with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the stellar roles.

The entire story of "Big Tremaine" is laid in a picturesque southern environment, within the pictorial bounds of Virginia. Special settings will be built at the West Coast Metro-Yorke studio under the supervision of Henry Otto. Charles P. Stalling, of the American Company, has been engaged to act as Otto's assistant.

Director Chet Whitney is now engaged in adding the finishing touches to the Tringle Fine Arts feature, "Old Folks at Home," featuring Sir Herbert Tree. Rupert Hughes wrote the story. Josephine Crowell plays opposite Sir Herbert. Mildred Harris, the 15-year-old Triangle star; Elmer Clifton, W. E. Lawrence and Lucille Younge are included in the cast.

"The Rescuers" is the title of another Triangle feature now receiving its finishing touches at the Fine Arts Studio. It is a two-reel comedy play featuring Tully Marshall, under the direction of Tod Browning.

A realistic hand-to-hand fight between Richard Cummings and Howard Gaye is one of the features of this comedy. Tables and chairs were overturned and after battling for almost 15 minutes, both Gaye and Cummings looked as if they had just arrived from the siege at Verdun. The fighters had to lay off for several days to get back to normal condition. They trained like pugilists for two weeks before putting on the fight scenes.

Others in the cast are Lillian Webster and Jack Bramhall.

Co-directors, C. M. & S. A. Franklin and their entire company, went to Sunland, California, to stage the big extensive scenes for a new Triangle Fine Arts production, the working title of which is "The Defenders."

Seven ranch buildings, of the adobe type, of the early California style of architecture, including the main ranch building, bunk house, secondary buildings, and corrals, were built especially for the production. A night battle between Mexicans and cowboys for the possession of the ranch, in which several hundred horsemen participate, is one of the features of "The Defenders."

A corps of electricians was sent to Sunland to erect arc lights for staging the night scenes.

Bessie Love.

Frank Bennett plays opposite Bessie Love. The other principals in the cast include Ralph Lewis, A. D. Sears, Charles Gorman, Charles Stephens and Alberta Lee.

An entire street of the early California period was also built for the production.

Hyman Sims has been placed in charge of the extensive property rooms at Universal City. Mr. Sims was transferred from the production department with which he has been associated for several months. He has been connected with Universal for about three years and was for two years manager of the purchasing department of the company.

An unusually well staged and realistic scene was completed this week at Universal City, for the sixth episode of the serial "Liberty," under the direction of Jacques Jaccard.

The scene is an exact duplicate of the meeting room of the President's cabinet at Washington, D. C., showing the cabinet in session with Mr. Wilson presiding.

The meeting is being addressed by the Mexican Envoy, who explains how many troops can be placed in the field and suggesting that the two countries remain friends.

It was Mr. Jaccard's desire to have every member of his picture cabinet resemble the real cabinet members, and to this end he spent several days looking over the various types of the Universal lot, his choice in each instance has resulted in a perfect characterization, but the greatest of these is that of President Wilson, which is portrayed by Orlo Eastwood, who is an exact double of the President, in looks, speech and actions, and to those who witness the episode it will be hard to realize that the scene presented is anything but a real cabinet meeting in Washington.

J. P. McGowan, Helen Holmes and their company of Signal players are now in the little town of Arcata, which is located near Mad River, one of the most picturesque spots in California.

While it was the intention of the company to remain in Eureka, it was thought by Director General J. P. McGowan, after a careful survey, that it would be better to push on to Arcata.

Although the Signal Company has only been in the little city a short time, the members have already become exceedingly popular with the townspeople and there is nothing apparently too good for any of the players.

The city has granted a number of concessions and donated a large lot on which a stage measuring 75 by 40 feet has been built. In fact, the temporary quarters erected there are more complete than the permanent equipment of many studios.

To show their appreciation of the hospitality extended them, the members of the company are contributing in every way to the social pleasure of the town.

The Empire Feature Film Company is the name of a new film producing concern to be located at Monrovia, California. The company will produce a series of nine reel photoplays, the first of which will be "The Silver Arrow," from the play of the late Elbert Hubbard. It is expected that within the next three weeks the filming of pictures will be under way. The studios of the Monrovia Feature Film Co. will be temporarily used by the new company.

Gardner Sullivan. This play is being directed by Reginald Barker and has Clara Williams, Charles Gunn and George Fisher in its cast. The costumes are to be used in the making of several spectacular battle scenes necessary to the action of the story.

Director Walter Edwards and his company of twenty-four Ince players returned to Culver City this week from Cullinsville, on the Sacramento River, where they have been filming scenes for the new Triangle play by John Lynch, in which Frank Keenan is being starred. The trip, director Edwards declared, was highly successful and the company had obtained about 56 picturesque scenes in and about the quaint river town. Margery Wilson plays the lead opposite Frank Keenan.

William S. Hart is the central figure of a mob of 500 persons this week, at Inceville, where he is appearing as the star of a new Ince-Triangle play by J. G. Hawks. The noted Western character actor is playing the role of an ex-bandit of the plains who figures in a number of thrilling episodes over the love he has for a girl, and the unusually large number of people are serving as townsfolk. Alma Reubens, borrowed from Fine Arts, Nina Byron and Walter Perry are included in the cast.

Doreas Matthews, of the Ince-Triangle forces, is being congratulated this week upon the sucess of a serious operation she was compelled to undergo just before commencing an appearance in a new play. Miss Matthews was stricken, while "making up" in her dressing room, and was rushed to the Clara Barton Hospital in Los Angeles, where the surgeons placed her under the knife. While the operation is declared to have been highly successful, Miss Matthews will be confined to the hospital for a month, say her physicians. She will be remembered particularly for her work in "The Captive God," in which she played Maya in support of William S. Hart.

A baby show will be staged at the big Labor Day picnic to be held at Selig Zoo Park, Monday, Sept. 4. One of the many animals to be entered in the show is a puma cub, which has been raised by a dog.

A motion picture burlesquing local conditions and prominent Los Angeles personages, will be another feature of the program, in which union men and their families will take part. Eugene Lowry will be director, while Miss Brownie Brownell, of Selig studios, will have the leading role.

The Orpheum circuit will include during the coming season several new houses, also some cities that have not been links in its chain for a year or so are once more in the list. Prosperity and general demand for the Orpheum class of vaudeville are given as the causes responsible for the expansion.

A new subdivision for the purposes of management has been created, with Charles Bray as manager. This will be known as the southern division, and will include New Orleans, St. Louis and one or two other cities.

One of the new houses announced is in Vancouver. This will open shortly and the Calgary, Canada, will reopen after being closed two years because of the war. Acts will jump from Winnipeg to Calgary, play part of a week, and go thence to Vancouver. Seattle will be the next city, and from that place acts will go to Portland. Houses in both these cities will reopen, rumors to the contrary notwithstanding.

Des Moines and Duluth are both restored to the circuit, after two years. A new theater is building in New Orleans, also one in St. Louis.

Close affiliation with the Texas field now exists, but it may come about that the Orpheum circuit proper will take over the houses in several cities there and give them regular Orpheum shows.

The Norbig studios have sent a company of players to the top of Mt. Baldy for the purpose of filming five one-reel comedies. William Bertram, formerly with the American, is the leading man. Others in the company are Harry De Vere, Nita Davis, Joe Melville, William Silsby and Clifford Silsby.

W. A. Norton, formerly with the American-Europa Company, will produce pictures here for the Ivan Company of New York at the company's old studio at 2500 Allesandro street.

Rat Rooney has completed his contract with Universal and returned to New York. We are informed that Mr. Rooney contemplates building a studio at his Long Island home and producing pictures of his own.

Irene Hunt, Universal screen star, and Lester Scott, assistant to Director Oscar Apfel of the Fox studio, surprised as well as disappointed their many friends Thursday last week when they were secretly married and ran away to San Diego for a few days' honeymoon. Mr. and Mrs. Scott will make their home in Hollywood near by the Fox studios.

Ollie Kirkby to Star with Larkin

Well Known Leading Woman Secured for Kalem's New Series, "Grant, Police Reporter."

THE acquisition of Ollie Kirkby to share honors with George Larkin is the latest step in Kalem's plans for the new one-reel series telling the adventures of "Grant, Police Reporter." Miss Kirkby's most recent success was in "The Social Pirates," in which she co-starred with Marin Sais. Since the conclusion of that series Miss Kirkby has been enjoying a well-earned vacation at her beautiful Los Angeles home.

The extent to which Kalem is working in order to assure the success of the new one-reel series by Robert Welles Ritchie is shown by the fact that it was necessary to bring Miss Kirkby on a journey of close to four thousand miles in order to secure her services for the new feature. Miss Kirkby last week completed the final lap of the long trip form Los Angeles to New York and then to Jacksonville, and is now at work in the Florida city.

Ollie Kirkby.

Coincident with the announcement of the signing of Miss Kirkby Kalem also made public the news that the "Grant" stories would be staged under the direction of Robert Ellis. Director Ellis has been responsible for many of Kalem's most successful dramatic features, while recently he scored with the Sis Hopkins and Ivy Close comedies.

Others who will be seen in the cast of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series include such favorites as William McKey, Arthur Albertson and Mary Taylor-Ross. The Jacksonville studio has been enlarged to almost double its capacity to handle the new compay and increases made in the technical staff in preparation for the large sets and spectacular scenes planned for the one-reel series.

Ollie Kirkby, now announced to share the honors of the series with Dare-Devil George Larkin, has been in the front rank of screen stars for well over three years. Her success in the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel" series and numerous Kalem multiple reel features is also well remembered. Miss Kirkby was born at Roxborough, Pa., but as her parents migrated to California when she was very young she considers herself a daughter of the Golden State. Robert Welles Ritchie, author of the new series, has arranged for a novel pre-release showing of the early episodes by inviting his former fellow workers, the police reporters of the leading New York dailies, to see the productions. There are some surprises in store for the newspaper boys as some of them will find their own adventures portrayed in some of the early episodes which are founded on fact.

Work is already under way in Jacksonville on "The Code Letter," the first episode of the series. Like all the succeeding episodes, this one reel will tell an absolutely complete story. It is the intention to have each of the episodes contain spectacular thrills of the sort which gained George Larkin his Dare-Devil reputation.

British Notes

THE annual report of the British Board of Film Censors for 1915 has just been issued and shows amongst other figures that only 22 of the 4,767 films examined have been entirely rejected. The stated reasons for the rejection of subjects submitted vary considerably from "the materialization of the figure of Christ," at one end to "First-night scenes; Prostitution; Confinements; men and women in bed together; scenes depicting the effect of venereal diseases, inherited or acquired," at the other and upward of 200 films have been modified upon the recommendation of the board. Perhaps the most important finding in the report is in reference to the picturizing of notorious books, in many cases quite harmless pictures, but which seek to exist upon nothing more than the title of the book they profess to illustrate. "The board has come to the conclusion," says the report, "that it must only examine what is projected on the screen, irrespective of the notoriety of the work, otherwise it might be argued that the board is overstepping its duties by indirectly becoming censors of literature. Having regard to the misconceptions and misconstructions placed on the facts it has been decided that no film in future shall be passed of the same title as a book generally acknowledged as questionable. If such a book is filmed and even the result be inocuous the title will have to be changed to dissociate one from the other."

Originality in the choice of a name for a motion picture theater is becoming something of a rarity. A new structure at Birmingham has been designated the Futurist theater. It is to be hoped it will not be an incentive to Marinetti to enter the producing ranks. Belfast, also, is to have a new hall, by name the New York Cinema.

A proposal to film the British War Cabinet in session has been active during the week, but at fifty minutes past the eleventh hour the whole affair collapsed, to the amusement of the press and the disgust of the promoters. Mr. Cecil Hepworth, of the manufacturing concern of that name, had clearly been at great pains to assure the success of the innovation and when the members of the cabinet had individually consented to the scheme elaborate preparations for converting rooms at the Premier's residence and at Winchester house into temporary studios were put under execution. Portrait sittings had already been secured at the latter place of some of the King's Ministers, including Mr. Asquith, Earl Gray and Mr. Lloyd George, and the most important scene, a group showing Britain's War Cabinet in session, was to have been taken today (Tuesday, August 22). To this stage the undertaking had proceeded in secret when the news leaked through to the newspapers providing the journalistic cynics and cabinet critics with a new target. It was announced in Parliament today by the Premier himself that the scheme had been dropped.

The rearrangement of the distributing plans in America of the Thanhouser Co. will not, Mr. Paul Kimberley informs me, be reflected on the London market. Thanhouser films will still be handled by him in this country.

One by one the London offices of American film manufacturing companies are opening up their own renting exchanges. Following the Selig Company's departure in this direction the American Co., Ltd., now announces the inauguration of its own distributing service. Additional premises in Wardom street, London, have been secured by Mr. W. C. Scott and the subjects handled will be those of the American, North American, Signal and Beauty companies, in addition to the Vogue comedies and certain other additions from the Mutual program.

Mr. Harry A. Spoor ran over to Paris last week-end and returned rejoicing with a two-years' contract for the services of Max Linder at a gigantic salary, exceeding, I am informed, half a million dollars per annum. Linder will not leave France for the windy city for six or seven weeks yet and from the orders he has given his tailors it might be a six weeks' job for the U. S. customs officials to examine his wardrobe.

One of the largest British exhibiting companies some time ago established in one of its theaters a symphony orchestra of picked musicians as an additional attraction to the public. The idea of an orchestra of fifty "caught on" immediately and appears, from the company's point of view, to have been eminently successful. Another step has now been taken to further embellish the musical program by the announcement that Zacharewitsch, the famous Russian violinist, will play daily at the company's Glasgow theater. The move is undoubtedly an enterprising one, but in the minds of many encroaching upon the territory of the stage and concert platform. The fundamental purpose of an orchestra, it is argued, is to accompany the pictures, not compete with them for the stellar honors of the show. A number of exhibitors are loud in their protests against the exhibition of super-films at regular theaters or public halls in preference to motion picture theaters, yet one can readily conceive that the engagement at motion picture theaters of high salaried artists, even if they be confined to the orchestra, will be used by theatrical interests as evidence of justification in encroaching upon the exhibitors' ground.

This objection by exhibitors against the exhibition of "big" productions at places other than bona-fide motion picture theaters has already taken material form at Hull. The local branch of the Exhibitors' Association has already petitioned the city authorities to prohibit the renting of the public halls in the city to private firms for the occasional exhibition of pictures. It is unjust, they say, to the resident exhibitor who pays rates and taxes for the maintenance of such halls and unfair competition against those who, in accordance with the demands of the authorities, have laid out money in the provision of places erected expressly for that and no other purpose, and finally tends to ferment disaffection between the professional exhibitor and his manufacturer or renter, or both. It is the professional exhibitor, not the amateur, who has made such "big" productions commercially possible, and why should not he be given the benefit of them? they ask. The defense is that the exhibitor will not pay the price, and in the majority of instances this is quite true, but in a few cases he has not had the chance. Particularly does this apply in the former to subjects like "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "Cabiria," Williamson Submarine Pictures, and "How Britain Prepared," and in its latter application to "The Birth of a Nation." With due allowance for the very tempting offers frequently made to exchanges by legitimate theaters for super-productions the backbone of the industry, the motion picture theaters are entitled to first consideration and perhaps when conditions become normal they will get it as of yore. Elaborated theatrical presentations of super-films are not regarded with favor by all our exchanges. The Selig Co. might have made new records with "The Ne'er Do Well," had not the exhibitor had the first call and the Vitigraph Co., in considering their regular customers, declined an offer of many thousands from a vaudeville syndicate for "The Battle Cry of Peace." The special presentation of super-productions may, after all, be but an abnormality of the times.

Roscoe C. Spurin, late publicity man for Ruffells, Ltd., leaves London this week-end for New York. Mr. Spurin contemplates starting an exchange in London on his own account and his visit is most likely in search of one or two desirable acquisitions.

The annual conference of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association of Great Britain and Ireland was held this year at Newcastle. Ninety delegates were present from different parts of the country and Mr. A. E. Newbould presided. The opening statement of the chairman revealed the association in a flourishing financial state and an increased membership of six hundred. "Despite the fact," he said, "that the nation has for twenty-three months been conducting war on a vast scale the volume of business for the first twenty months of this period more than compensates for any increase in cost and after difficulties." Most of the officers of the association were re-elected and a motion to convert the association into a registered trade union bearing the name the National Cinematograph Exhibitors' Union was carried. The effects of the amusement tax were discussed spiritedly and at length and evidence of its hardships upon the smaller theaters was not wanting. It was ultimately resolved that the matter should be taken up with the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Another resolution passed unanimously of far reaching importance to any from which happens to come under its scope was the following: "This conference of exhibitors confirms that no films of enemy origin shall be shown in the halls of owners present during the war and for five years after." It was decided to notify all film exchanges in the country of the decision.

Artcraft Tries Experiment

Management of Pickford Pictures Distribution Says No Solicitors Will Be Employed.

IN the distribution of the new Mary Pickford productions Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, and his general manager, Al Lichtman, have decided upon a radical departure from the usual methods of handling special features. No solicitors, according to their announcement, will be employed to carry the Pickford doctrine to the exhibitor. This decision is due in large part to the spontaneous demand that has grown in volume steadily since the preliminary announcement of Miss Pickford's new plans, and in a measure to the firm belief of Mr. Greene and Mr. Litchman that live and loyal branch managers can accomplish better results by direct and personal communication than by the formation of a large organization of traveling subordinates.

In accordance with this policy every exhibitor in the country will receive from the Artcraft manager in his territory form blanks in which to make application for bookings of Mary Pickford productions. Accompanying these forms will be a letter, which reads as follows:

'This is to formally announce that this organization is now distributing all of the future productions in which the incomparable Mary Pickford will appear.

"There will be no less than four nor more than eight master productions featuring this celebrated artiste released during the year beginning October, 1916.

"Each production will be not less than six nor more than ten reels in length and will average about $250,000 in cost.

"It is Miss Pickford's desire that every theater in the land be given an opportunity to exhibit her pitcures and to fulfill that desire and to give you an opportunity to arrange for the exhibition of the Mary Pickford productions we are herewith enclosing application blanks which kindly fill in and return to this office immediately.

"It is our intention not to employ solocitors. Therefore, if you want to arrange for the exhibition of the Mary Pickford productions, give the enclosed application your immediate attention."

It is believed that only in this way can "the greatest good to the greatest number" be accomplished. The use of solicitors, in Mr. Greene's opinion, would only complicate the machinery by which the most complete and satisfactory distribution throughout Artcraft of Mary Pickford pictures can be effected.

Pioneer Picture Man With Unicorn

J. E. WILLIS, who has been engaged in the moving picture industry since its inception, has been appointed Western representative of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation. Mr. Willis is probably the best known exchange executive in the country, having been with the General Film Co. as manager of its offices and as special representative and division manager for several years, with the Mutual Film Corporation in a similar capacity, and with George Kleine prior to the formation of the General Film Co. He severs his connection with the Triangle Film Corporation to become affiliated with the Unicorn.

J. E. Willis.

More than twelve years devoted to catering to the needs of exhibitors in various parts of the country has given Mr. Willis a keen insight into the conditions surrounding a local house, and he will give his personal attention to Unicorn exhibitors and assist them in every possible manner.

In accepting the important post assigned to him by Unicorn, Mr. Willis said: "I thoroughly believe the Unicorn ideas and the Unicorn plan are necessary to every exhibitor in the United States."

CHRISTIE TO SHOW "BLIND JUSTICE."

Benjamine Christie, the director general of the Dansk Biograf Company of Copenhagen, which concern is now occupying American headquarters in the World's Tower Building, at 110 West 40th street, New York City, announces that on Thursday morning, September 14, at 10 a. m., he will give a private exhibition at the Strand theater, of his recently completed seven-part photoplay "Blind Justice."

Mr. Christie, wrote the story, is seen in the star role, and also directed the picture. "Blind Justice," its projectors are confident, is destined to create quite a sensation, as it deals very daringly with the modern penal system and the conviction of possibly innocent men upon circumstancial evidence. Invitations have been extended to practically every prominent publicist and philanthropist, including Thomas Mott Osborne, warden of Sing Sing prison, whose work in penal reformation has gained him a national reputation, and suffragist and other public-spirited citizens. The audience is expected to be a thoroughly representative one, including as it does, besides the trade, many eminent names of prominent people.

Mr. Christie is planning, after a tour of America, which will embrace a painstaking study of the California studios and American methods of production, to take back with him to Denmark an American company headed by a very noted emotional star. It is entirely possible, states Mr. Christie, that he may also build a studio in the United States, and alternate his Danish companies and the American company between the two countries. Plans are now in active formation to perfect an organization of this sort.

L. E. OUIMET IN TOWN.

Throughout the Dominion of Canada conditions among the exhibitors and exchange men are brightening daily, according to L. E. Ouimet, pioneer Canadian exhibitor, and present head of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., of Montreal, who was in New York one day last week. Mr. Ouimet said that indications were that this fall would see conditions better than they have been at any time since the beginning of the war. Mr. Ouimet, who was the first man to exhibit moving pictures in Canada, was seen at the office of Pathe, for whom he is Canadian agent.

"The Canadian soldiers at the front are, and have been for some months past, sending much of their pay home," said Mr. Ouimet, "and as a consequence their families have money to spend. Moving pictures are getting their full share of this money. Then again, there is a lot of money being made by workers in the munitions factories, and this, too, is responsible for a boom in all businesses.

"During this summer we had considerable hot weather, and many of the smaller houses were closed. I know of several instances, however, where theaters opened for one day just for a showing of Pathe's 'The Iron Claw.'

"Photoplays in series seem to be most popular in the Dominion at the present time—even more so than serials."

HERBERT GRIFFIN, NICHOLAS POWER REPRESENTATIVE, RETURNS.

Herbert Griffin, who covers the Middle West of the country boosting Power's Cameragraph No. 6B, returned to New York on Friday, September 8, after an absence of nine months from 90 Gold street. Speaking of trade conditions in that territory Mr. Griffin said, notwithstanding the prevalence of infantile paralysis and other unfavorable conditions the theaters in that section are doing exceedingly well, and that business would be great were things different. He speaks very encouragingly of the outlook and said that the prospect of a good fall and winter business brought him into New York to discuss some matters of importance with the chiefs of the Nicholas Power organization.

CHARLES P. STALLINGS ASSISTANT TO HENRY OTTO.

The latest acquisition to the forces of the Metro-Yorke Hollywood studio is Charles P. Stallings, who will act in the capacity of Assistant to Henry Ott, director of the Harold Lockwood-May Allison feature productions. Before joining the Metro-Yorke studio Stallings was affiliated with the American Company in Santa Barbara, during the time Harold Lockwood, May Allison and Henry Otto were making Mutual pictures. He then joined the Morosco studio in Los Angeles, as the technical director, where he remained until his present engagement.

"Shielding Shadow" Quartette of Stars

Grace Darmond, Leon Bary, Ralph Kellard and Madaline Traverse Are Seen With Celebrated Actors.

PATHE'S "The Shielding Shadow" features a quartette of stars. They are the charming and appealing Grace Darmond, whose work on the screen has met with immediate success; Leon Bary, celebrated as Sarah Bernhardt's leading man, whose acting in "The Shielding Shadow" is so good that he has been placed under a long time contract for future productions; Ralph Kellard, who has played in some of Pathe's Gold Rooster successes and also had a long and successful career on the stage; and Madaline Traverse, famous as the heroine of Elinor Glynn's "Three Weeks."

In "The Shielding Shadow" American screen audiences will have an opportunity of seeing one of the foremost actors of the French stage, Leon Bary, who has played with Bernhardt, Rejane and Jane Haddin.

Bary is noted for his finished character work. American theater-goers are familiar with him since he accompanied the Divine Sarah on three of her tours in the United States; those of 1900, 1909 and 1910.

His first motion picture experience was with Pathe in France. When the war broke out, he left the company he was directing in London to join the colors. He was in the trenches for the first seven months of the war. He escaped any serious injury from shells or bullets, but rheumatism was an insidious foe against which he could not guard, and was forced to leave the serivce on account of it. He returned to London to find war conditions prevailing and no motion picture productions being made. He was immediately engaged by Pathe to play "Sebastion Navarro" in the production of George B. Seitz's wonder serial, "The Shielding Shadow."

Beautiful Grace Darmond made her first appearance on the stage as little Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," when she was so small that she can hardly remember anything about the great occasion except the translation scene. She has been acting ever since. Miss Darmond is still in her teens. She was born in Toronto, Ontario, but came to the United States when very young. She is still a mere five feet of femininity.

In "The Shielding Shadow" Miss Darmond flees death through fifteen episodes. With it all, Miss Darmond has lost none of the dainty simplicity, modesty, and girlishness one demands in her age and sex; she is as demure as a nun, as honest and unspoiled as a nice young boy, and as womanly as any man could wish. She is destined to become one of the most popular actresses on the screen, owing to her own ability and to the strength of the serial in which she appears.

From law student to actor and from matinee idol and head of his own stock company to motion pictures, are the steps made by Ralph Kellard, whose work in "The Shielding Shadow" is so fine. He made his first stage appearance in "The Eternal City."

His varied career is interesting to exhibitors, who now have an opportunity of presenting his screen vehicle. It includes: Two seasons with David Warfield in "The Music Master" in New York, and on tour under the management of David Belasco; two seasons with the "Warrens of Virginia," also under Belasco; experience in stock with Charlotte Walker at the Belasco theater in Washington, D. C.; leading man with Virginia Harned in "The Land of Hope," and many others.

Madaline Traverse has been called the "Maxine Elliott of the screen." She has been featured in many productions and is one of the principal members of the cast in "The Shielding Shadow." She has had a varied career on the stage. Her first appearance was at the age of six, when she took child parts in her father's company and she became a regular member of that organization when she was twelve years old.

Miss Traverse is tall and very beautiful and she has a personality which gets over with screen audiences just as it did in the theater when she took important parts in "The Chorus Lady," "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "Joseph and His Brethern," and "The Woman's Law."

Her first big motion picture part was the lead in "Three Weeks." She has been deluged with letters from all over the world, praising her work in this photoplay. Later she was featured with Robert Warwick in "The Fruits of Desire," and "The Money Master."

These four players form a cast of principals such as has never before been seen in a serial motion picture and rarely on the screen at all. That they are supported by actors of unusual excellence is seen in the fact that Lionel Braun, who played the slave in Granville Barker's production of Bernard Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion," and Frankie Mann, well known for her work on the screen, are seen in minor parts, while all the types have been carefully picked by Louis J. Gasnier and Donald MacKenzie, under whose direction "The Shielding Shadow" was produced.

MARY PICKFORD IN "LESS THAN THE DUST."

Some idea of the story in which Mary Pickford will make her first appearance as an independent star by arrangement with Artcraft Pictures Corporation, and a roster of the principal members of the notable supporting company, which has been engaged for Hector Turnbull's "Less Than the Dust," were forthcoming this week. John Emerson, who is directing the picture, states that it may be described as a picturesque and appealing story of modern India, in which Miss Pickford appears as a little English castaway who is regarded by the superstitious natives as actually "less than the dust" beneath their feet.

There are nearly fifty important characters in the play. The principal roles will be played by David Powell, Frank Losee, Mary Alden, Mario Majeroni, Cesare Gravina, Francis Joyner, Russell Bassett, Walter Morgan and Mercita Esmonde.

VITAGRAPH VS. FORD TO U. S. COURT.

Henry Ford, millionaire automobile manufacturer and prominent exponent of peace, who is named as defendant in a suit filed in the Supreme Court by the Vitagraph Company of America to recover $1,000,000 damages, has succeeded in having the action removed from the State Court to the United States District Court which tribunal will have future disposition of the case.

In his application for the removal of the suit to the Federal Court Mr. Ford set forth through his attorneys, Crisp, Handall & Crisp, that the plaintiff corporation has its principal place of business in New York, while his domicile as well as his business enterprises is at Detroit. Conequently he averred that owing to the diversity of citizenship of the parties to the litigation the Federal Court was the proper tribunal to adjudicate the issues.

NEWS AND VIEWS OF PHOTOPLAY HOUSES EVERYWHERE

STRATFORD THEATER, DETROIT, MICH.

Architecture of the Italian Renaissance Has Been Employed for the Exterior, While the Interior Decorations Are of the Adams Period—Music Furnished by Wurlitzer Organ —Has Two Powers 6B Machines and Seats 1,200.

SITUATED at the corner of Dix and Ferdinand avenues, Detroit, Mich., is one of the finest outskirt houses of the city, the Stratford. This house is proving as popular, if not more so, than the promoters anticipated. That particular part of Detroit, the west side—is thickly populated with substantial middle class people.

The Stratford was started in the fall of 1915 and was opened for business Saturday evening, March 11. The policy is one matinee daily on week days, and three shows at night. The performances are continuous on Sundays and holidays. General admission is 10 cents; reserved seats in the rear are fifteen cents, while mezzanine box seats sell at twenty-five cents. At all matinees, except Sundays and holidays, every seat in the theater is ten cents. Children under twelve years of age pay only five cents at the evening performances, while at the matinees they are admitted free when accompanied by their parents.

E. V. McGrath.

To Fred A. Schneider is due a great measure of credit for the creation of the Stratford theater. The conception is his and he worked indefatigably to effect its realization. He early associated himself with prominent business men of the community, who like Mr. Schneider, felt that there was a lucrative field for a large modern theater catering to the big neighborhood element on Detroit's west side. Others who deserve praise for their foresight in casting their lot with Mr. Schneider are William H. Steffes, whose early connection with the Stratford classes him as one of its originators. He expressed his utmost confidence in its future by co-operating materially in its organization, and later, utilizing his knowledge of construction by actively supervising its erection. Mr. Schneider is president and Mr. Steffes, secretary. John S. Affeld is vice-president, Joseph N. Schneider, treasurer, and Ed. V. McGrath, manager.

And just a word or two about Mr. McGrath. The Moving Picture World's Detroit representative could say a lot of nice things personally about Mr. McGrath, with whom he has been in contant touch since the latter came to Detroit, but the modesty of Mr. McGrath prevents us from doing so. However, we are going to take the liberty of reproducing the remarks of the Board of Directors in the handsome booklet which they issued for their friends: "In choosing a manager, the company has considered not only general efficiency and wide experience in the realm of films, but a knowledge of the operation and requirements of a superior type of theater. Possessing these qualifications in a marked degree, Mr. E. V. McGrath was selected. He has gained extensive theatrical experience through his affiliations with Vernon C. Seaver's Chicago enterprises, and later through his successful direction of eastern photoplay houses. He came to Detroit from Cincinnati, and was associated with the late A. Arthur Caille before assuming the management of the Stratford. Mr. McGrath is rated as one of the most progressive photoplay men in the State, and Stratford patrons will receive through him the greatest measure of quality which the screen drama affords."

J. P. Jogerts designed the Stratford. The facade is of classic design, following the Italian Renaissance period of architecture. The structure fronts on Dix avenue, and is of fireproof construction with steel frame and reinforced concrete floors and roof. The exterior is faced with cream terra cotta and brick, with finely worked detail in ornamental terra cotta. A steel marquis projects well over the sidewalk, covering the entire entrance. Mahogany finished entrance doors and panel poster framed add to the rich appearance. The unusual effect created by the use of ornate plaster and its attendant decoration in the auditorium, justifies the use of the term, "Detroit's Most Beautiful," according to the management. Interior decorations conform to the Adam period, ivory, gold and old rose being the basis of the color scheme. Rose shades predominate, the wall panels are executed in light shades, accentuated by free handwork—their beauty enhanced by the use of applied medallions in Wedgwood blue, surmounted by a white figure. The beauty of design is especially striking in the ceiling and boxes. Artistically wrought ornamental grill work is effectively placed in the ceiling ventilators. The organ loft grill above the boxes, the elaborate frieze and cornice above, all add to the magnificance of design.

Draperies are in old rose and gold trimming, ornamented with the letter "S" in gold cloth, the lambrequin on the stage opening being embellished with applique work and fringe. The curtain, an idealistic conception of Shakespeare's birthplace, Stratford-on-Avon, and the stage setting is by one of the foremost scenic artists of the country, Melville Moran.

Stratford Theater, Detroit, Mich.

Ventilation is a subject of extreme importance in the construction of the Stratford, which is equipped with the Acme air washing and purifying system. In cold weather after being washed, the air is heated before being distributed into the auditorium; while, during the summer months, it is cooled in an ice chamber before being forced into the theater by a large motor-driven fan. In addition, ceiling exhaust ventilators draw out all vitiated air, so that patrons are assured of an ever-changing supply of pure dustless air, irrespective of weather conditions.

A Wurlitzer organ furnishes the music for the Stratford. Projection is another important feature at the Stratford. The equipment includes two Powers 6B projection machines, special stereopticon dissolvers, spot lights and a Wagner

From law student to actor and from matinee idol and head of his own stock company to motion pictures, are the steps made by Ralph Kellard, whose work in "The Shielding Shadow" is so fine. He made his first stage appearance in "The Eternal City."

His varied career is interesting to exhibitors, who now have an opportunity of presenting his screen vehicle. It includes: Two seasons with David Warfield in "The Music Master" in New York, and on tour under the management of David Belasco; two seasons with the "Warrens of Virginia," also under Belasco; experience in stock with Charlotte Walker at the Belasco theater in Washington, D. C.; leading man with Virginia Harned in "The Land of Hope," and many others.

Madaline Traverse has been called the "Maxine Elliott of the screen." She has been featured in many productions and is one of the principal members of the cast in "The Shielding Shadow." She has had a varied career on the stage. Her first appearance was at the age of six, when she took child parts in her father's company and she became a regular member of that organization when she was twelve years old.

Miss Traverse is tall and very beautiful and she has a personality which gets over with screen audiences just as it did in the theater when she took important parts in "The Chorus Lady," "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "Joseph and His Brethern," and "The Woman's Law."

Her first big motion picture part was the lead in "Three Weeks." She has been deluged with letters from all over the world, praising her work in this photoplay. Later she was featured with Robert Warwick in "The Fruits of Desire," and "The Money Master."

These four players form a cast of principals such as has never before been seen in a serial motion picture and rarely on the screen at all. That they are supported by actors of unusual excellence is seen in the fact that Lionel Braun, who played the slave in Granville Barker's production of Bernard Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion," and Frankie Mann, well known for her work on the screen, are seen in minor parts, while all the types have been carefully picked by Louis J. Gasnier and Donald MacKenzie, under whose direction "The Shielding Shadow" was produced.

MARY PICKFORD IN "LESS THAN THE DUST."

Some idea of the story in which Mary Pickford will make her first appearance as an independent star by arrangement with Artcraft Pictures Corporation, and a roster of the principal members of the notable supporting company, which has been engaged for Hector Turnbull's "Less Than the Dust," were forthcoming this week. John Emerson, who is directing the picture, states that it may be described as a picturesque and appealing story of modern India, in which Miss Pickford appears as a little English castaway who is regarded by the superstitious natives as actually "less than the dust" beneath their feet.

There are nearly fifty important characters in the play. The principal roles will be played by David Powell, Frank Losee, Mary Alden, Mario Majeroni, Cesare Gravina, Francis Joyner, Russell Bassett, Walter Morgan and Mercita Esmonde.

VITAGRAPH VS. FORD TO U. S. COURT.

Henry Ford, millionaire automobile manufacturer and prominent exponent of peace, who is named as defendant in a suit filed in the Supreme Court by the Vitagraph Company of America to recover $1,000,000 damages, has succeeded in having the action removed from the State Court to the United States District Court which tribunal will have future disposition of the case.

In his application for the removal of the suit to the Federal Court Mr. Ford set forth through his attorneys, Crisp, Handall & Crisp, that the plaintiff corporation has its principal place of business in New York, while his domicile as well as his business enterprises is at Detroit. Conequently he averred that owing to the diversity of citizenship of the parties to the litigation the Federal Court was the proper tribunal to adjudicate the issues.

STRATFORD THEATER, DETROIT, MICH.

Architecture of the Italian Renaissance Has Been Employed for the Exterior, While the Interior Decorations Are of the Adams Period—Music Furnished by Wurlitzer Organ —Has Two Powers 6B Machines and Seats 1,200.

SITUATED at the corner of Dix and Ferdinand avenues, Detroit, Mich., is one of the finest outskirt houses of the city, the Stratford. This house is proving as popular, if not more so, than the promoters anticipated. That particular part of Detroit, the west side—is thickly populated with substantial middle class people.

The Stratford was started in the fall of 1915 and was opened for business Saturday evening, March 11. The policy is one matinee daily on week days, and three shows at night. The performances are continuous on Sundays and holidays. General admission is 10 cents; reserved seats in the rear are fifteen cents, while mezzanine box seats sell at twenty-five cents. At all matinees, except Sundays and holidays, every seat in the theater is ten cents. Children under twelve years of age pay only five cents at the evening performances, while at the matinees they are admitted free when accompanied by their parents.

E. V. McGrath.

To Fred A. Schneider is due a great measure of credit for the creation of the Stratford theater. The conception is his and he worked indefatigably to effect its realization. He early associated himself with prominent business men of the community, who like Mr. Schneider, felt that there was a lucrative field for a large modern theater catering to the big neighborhood element on Detroit's west side. Others who deserve praise for their foresight in casting their lot with Mr. Schneider are William H. Steffes, whose early connection with the Stratford classes him as one of its originators. He expressed his utmost confidence in its future by co-operating materially in its organization, and later, utilizing his knowledge of construction by actively supervising its erection. Mr. Schneider is president and Mr. Steffes, secretary. John S. Affeld is vice-president, Joseph N. Schneider, treasurer, and Ed. V. McGrath, manager.

And just a word or two about Mr. McGrath. The Moving Picture World's Detroit representative could say a lot of nice things personally about Mr. McGrath, with whom he has been in contant touch since the latter came to Detroit, but the modesty of Mr. McGrath prevents us from doing so. However, we are going to take the liberty of reproducing the remarks of the Board of Directors in the handsome booklet which they issued for their friends: "In choosing a manager, the company has considered not only general efficiency and wide experience in the realm of films, but a knowledge of the operation and requirements of a superior type of theater. Possessing these qualifications in a marked degree, Mr. E. V. McGrath was selected. He has gained extensive theatrical experience through his affiliations with Vernon C. Seaver's Chicago enterprises, and later through his successful direction of eastern photoplay houses. He came to Detroit from Cincinnati, and was associated with the late A. Arthur Caille before assuming the management of the Stratford. Mr. McGrath is rated as one of the most progressive photoplay men in the State, and Stratford patrons will receive through him the greatest measure of quality which the screen drama affords."

J. P. Jogerts designed the Stratford. The facade is of classic design, following the Italian Renaissance period of architecture. The structure fronts on Dix avenue, and is of fireproof construction with steel frame and reinforced concrete floors and roof. The exterior is faced with cream terra cotta and brick, with finely worked detail in ornamental terra cotta. A steel marquis projects well over the sidewalk, covering the entire entrance. Mahogany finished entrance doors and panel poster framed add to the rich appearance. The unusual effect created by the use of ornate plaster and its attendant decoration in the auditorium, justifies the use of the term, "Detroit's Most Beautiful," according to the management. Interior decorations conform to the Adam period, ivory, gold and old rose being the basis of the color scheme. Rose shades predominate, the wall panels are executed in light shades, accentuated by free handwork—their beauty enhanced by the use of applied medallions in Wedgwood blue, surmounted by a white figure. The beauty of design is especially striking in the ceiling and boxes. Artistically wrought ornamental grill work is effectively placed in the ceiling ventilators. The organ loft grill above the boxes, the elaborate frieze and cornice above, all add to the magnificance of design.

Draperies are in old rose and gold trimming, ornamented with the letter "S" in gold cloth, the lambrequin on the stage opening being embellished with applique work and fringe. The curtain, an idealistic conception of Shakespeare's birthplace, Stratford-on-Avon, and the stage setting is by one of the foremost scenic artists of the country, Melville Moran.

Stratford Theater, Detroit, Mich.

Ventilation is a subject of extreme importance in the construction of the Stratford, which is equipped with the Acme air washing and purifying system. In cold weather after being washed, the air is heated before being distributed into the auditorium; while, during the summer months, it is cooled in an ice chamber before being forced into the theater by a large motor-driven fan. In addition, ceiling exhaust ventilators draw out all vitiated air, so that patrons are assured of an ever-changing supply of pure dustless air, irrespective of weather conditions.

A Wurlitzer organ furnishes the music for the Stratford. Projection is another important feature at the Stratford. The equipment includes two Powers 6B projection machines, special stereopticon dissolvers, spot lights and a Wagner converter, the operating room being as fireproof as it is possible to make it. An impressive mark of beauty is added to the Stratford by the lighting system; light is semi-direct self-suffusing.

The Stratford seats approximately 1,200 persons. Seats are roomy and comfortable, finished in mahogany and leather, with scroll arm rest and spring edge. The mezzanine is a distinct feature, and consists of separate, private boxes, attractively furnished and appealing strongly by reason of their exclusiveness. Each box contains six separate seats.

No thought or effort has been spared in making the Stratford as attractive as possible, and every means has been provided for the comfort and accommodation of patrons. It is a theater consistent with the taste and refinement of the home. It is strictly a theater for mothers, daughters, sisters and wives—a theater for the family.

RIALTO THEATER, INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Newest of Photoplay Houses to Be Opened in This City—Seats 1,000 and Has $10,000 Organ—Managed by Fred B. Leonard.

THE latest motion picture theater in Indianapolis, Ind., to throw open its doors is the Rialto, in South Illinois street, just as close to the center of the city as it is possible to get. Cars from every section of the city unload their burden of human freight at the front doors of this theater.

The Rialto should become one of the most popular theaters of the city. It is deserving of popularity. It has a combination of beauty and comfort. The color scheme of the Rialto to begin with, is green and ivory. The walls are ivory tinted with delicate frescoing, and along the sides are baskets of green glass, filled with ferns and other greenery, so lighted that the plants appear to be growing in water. The ceiling, both of the theater itself and the entrances—there are two—are covered with a white trellis supporting quantities of smilax. The lights are globes of a delicate green, set among the leaves; there are six hundred of these globes and the effect of the whole is cooling.

The theater is cool. The heat of the hottest day is forgotten after one enters the long passage with the mirrors and flowing brackets along the side, which leads into the theater proper. In the lower part of the theater half a dozen big electric fans keep going constantly, while in the gallery one immense fan, measuring sixty inches across, circulates 50,000 cubic feet of cool air a minute.

The theater seats a thousand persons. There are two stage boxes, also ornamented with white covered vine trellises, and a row of boxes at the back of the theater. In the ceiling of the gallery and in the ceiling of the lower floor big green and gold lamps are set in. The lower part of the boxes are draped with green curtains.

One of the attractions is a $10,000 pipe organ, operated from the center of the orchestra pit. This pit also has its covering of green and white trellis and its smilax.

The screen, of crystal gold fiber, is set far back on the stage and the out-of-doors effect is heightened by vine-draped pillars and pots of palms and other green things. Two rest rooms, one on each floor, top off the equipment of the theater.

Fred B. Leonard, manager of the theater, announces that the fitting of the theater cost between $50,000 and $60,000. Mr. Leonard says the theater, under his management, will become one of the highest class theaters in the Middle West if effort will do this. The opening of the theater saw the Blue Bird feature, "Shoes." The Blue Bird productions will be used regularly by the management of the new theater.

NEW MISSION THEATER, SAN FRANCISCO.

Elegant Picture House Built on Site of Old Idle Hour—Is a Splendid Monument to the Ability of Kahn & Greenfield, the Owners—Has 110 Foot Marble Lobby—Interior Decorations Are Harmonious and Restful—Superb Operating Room—Music Furnished by Giant Fotoplayer.

THE New Mission Theater of San Francisco, is located in the heart of the Mission section, taking its name from the district and from the old mission a few blocks away, which was erected in 1776 and which is still standing. It will be operated by the firm of Kahn & Greenfield, which also conducts the New Fillmore theater and the Progress theater in the Fillmore District. The manager is Robert F. Abraham, who has been with the concern for several years. He is assisted by Walter McGowan. The seating capacity is 1,800, most of the chairs being on the ground floor, the balcony seating but 300. The balcony was made small in order that all might enjoy the beauties of the house.

The main entrance to the house is on Mission street, but this conveys no adequate idea of its size or beauty, although it is most attractive. What was formerly the old Idle Hour theater is now given over entirely to the lobby of the New Mission, the old house having been used until the new theater was almost completed. This lobby is one hundred and ten feet long and is largely of marble and tile construction, with ten large wall frames for photographs and posters along the sides, together with twice as many mirrors. The women's rest room is located at the end of the lobby and this is handsomely appointed, with a maid in constant attendance. In the foyer there are a number of attractive illuminated, display cabinets, each with space for about a dozen photographs.

The main entrance to the balcony is by means of an incline from the lobby, and here is located the row of loge seats along the entire front, the executive offices in the rear, the projection room and storerooms. At the head of the incline is a mezzanine rest room where patrons may sit in case the theater is filled, this room commanding a full view of the spacious lobby. On the lower floor there are eight loges, four on each side of the house. As the theater was designed especially for moving pictures there is no stage, properly speaking, merely a narrow platform. The owners of the property, however, control the adjoining lots, and should it ever be found advisable to devote the house to the speaking drama this could be easily accomplished. In its arrangement and beauty the new theater of Kahn & Greenfield easily takes its place among the best houses of this kind in the country and it is doubtful if its equal is to be found in any other suburban district anywhere. The decorations are simple, but very effective, old ivory tones being used to splendid advantage on the walls and the beautiful Corinthian columns.

The projection room in the balcony is most commendable, nothing having been omitted to make it as complete as possible. It is nine by eighteen feet in size, with direct ventilation to the roof and to the side. Not a wire is visible in the entire room and all the cabinets fit flush with the wall. The motors operating the projection machines are mounted on marble shelves, supported by angle iron frames, the work shelves are of marble and not a bit of wood is to be seen in the room. Three late model Simplex machines have been installed here, with a number of attachments put on under the direction of Chief Operator Monte Fairbanks, including devices for starting and stopping machines from either side, pilot lights, and the like. The machines are fitted with Elbert & White speed controllers, the apparatus having been furnished through the Breck Photoplay Supply Company. A Powers stereopticon dissolver and a spot light, complete the equipment of this kind. The cove lighting system is controlled from the projection room by dimmers. Adjoining this room is a smaller one, where there are two Westinghouse motor generator sets, with current coming from two separate services. Here is also a workroom for making repairs, a storage room, toilets and lavatories and filtered water for drinking.

Music is furnished by the largest and finest orchestral pipe organ on the Pacific Coast, this having been made to order in the factory of the American Photo Player Company at Berkeley. This new style Fotoplayer is located in the orchestra pit, which is slightly below the level of the theater floor, from which is also operated two immense pipe organs on each side of the procenium arch. In connection with this, is used an echo organ, situated in the ceiling recess seventy feet from the main floor. Magnificent cathedral chimes, concert harp and orchestral bells distributed in various parts of the house, all lend to the many and wonderful effects obtained. Lee Meyer, well known to the motion picture fraternity here, is filling the position of organist. Mayor James Rolph, at the conclusion of the first performance, paid the instrument and its makers a splendid compliment when he declared that it was the finest instrument he had ever heard.

The heating and ventilating systems of the house are the best obtainable, the mechanical equipment being located in a separate building. Fuel oil is used for heating purposes. The ticket selling equipment consists of a battery of Caille automatic electric machines and automatic change makers, with a Caille ticket chopper also in use. An ornamental marquis, extending the full width of the lobby and reaching to the street, makes the entrance to the New Mission a distinctive one.

NEW LORIN THEATER, BERKELEY, CAL.

Beach & Krahn's Newest Picture Palace Represents An Investment of $50,000—Front Built Along Grecian Lines—Parquette Floor is Bowl-Shaped to Insure Correct Vision of Screen.

OVER 2,000 persons attended the opening of the New Lorin theater in Berkeley, Cal., when that house was opened on Saturday, June 24. Hundreds were turned away, not being able to gain admission. The Lorin is managed and owned by the Beach-Krahn Amusement Company, Messrs. Beach and Krahn being among the oldest exhibitors in the state. From a meager beginning with 144 camp stool chairs they now own two of the best theaters in the Bay section.

On March 5 the old house was closed and torn down and on its site now stands a beautiful theater, which at once gains the admiration of the public, and which is a credit to the community. The Lorin represents an investment of over $50,000 and was designed and built especially for motion pictures. The building itself is fireproof and equipped with every safety device for the protection of the public.

The Lorin is advantageously located, being at the intersection of many converging streets and is in one of the best populated districts in Berkeley. It also draws its patronage from North Oakland. The exterior is built along Grecian lines, with trimming of oxidized copper, blending with forest green, set off with a beautiful marquise, set with bronze trimming.

The auditorium presents many new features in modern theater building. With its high dome effect, one gets the immediate impression of spaciousness. The floor is designed after the manner of a bowl, thus producing perfect vision lines from every angle of the house. There are no posts in the auditorium. On entering the lobby, one is impressed with the good taste of the decorations. The color scheme carried out is ivory, blue and gold with velvet carpets and draperies of a soft tan and blue, blending into a delightful artistic effect. In the foyer is found an artistic drinking fountain. The lighting system is indirect. The fixtures are of brass and are massive in design.

There are two stairways leading from the parquette floor on each side of the auditorium to the mezzanine. Here are found the women's rest room, men's cloak and smoking rooms and the company's office. The mezzanine floor leads to the balcony, and from all seats on this level can be had a perfect view of the screen.

Music is produced by the latest model Fotoplayer. One of the most important systems in the modern picture theater is the heating and ventilating system. A large motor-driven heating and cooling fan has been installed. Every cubic inch of air is changed every ten minutes. Cool, pure air is circulated throughout the house. When necessary this air can be heated and the temperature can be changed to any degree of heat desired.

E. D. HORKHEIMER IN TOWN.

E. D. Horkheimer, secretary and treasurer of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, arrived in town this week on one of his numerous trips from the Coast. He brought with him the last episodes of "The Grip of Evil," the latest Pathe serial to be finished by the Balboa Company. At the present time two new serials are in process of production at the Long Beach studio of the company, and Mr. Horkheimer has just signed contracts for the production of two others, work on which will commence as soon as he returns to the Coast, which will probably be about the first of October.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company

TOM'S STRATEGY (Selig), Sept. 2.—One of the best schemes ever hit upon by Tom Mix to amuse the picture fans. The reel is full of snappy comedy and Tom throws in a sensational rescue scene, by way of good measure. His method of stopping a runaway horse is startling. Victoria Forde, Betty Keller, Howard Farrell and a well-trained bear all do good work.

THE REWARD (Vim), Sept. 2.—Popular melodrama is amusingly burlesqued in this one-reel farce. As a secret service man, Pokes gets on the trail of Jabbs the villain, and saves the heroine from some kind of a terrible fate. The acrobatic stunts performed by the two, while locked in a deadly embrace on the roof of a house, give the reel a strong finish. Aside from Robert Burns and Walter Stull, Robert Williamson, Mabel Best, Frank Hanson and Helen Gilmore are members of the cast.

IOLA'S PROMISE (Biograph) Sept. 4.—A strong western picture reissued by Biograph to meet the demand for subjects of this nature. Mary Pickford appears to advantage in the leading role, that of an Indian girl. She is supported by Alfred Paget and Dorothy Bernard.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 71 (Selig), Sept. 4.—Allied drive against the Kaiser's troops, Along the River Somme; Sergeant John Kirk, U. S. Army, leads a one-man parade on Pennsylvania ave., Washington; ninth annual international fly and bait casting tournament, Newark, N. J.; U. S. S. "Memphis," which was pounded to pieces off Santo Domingo barbor; largest searchlight in the world, Brooklyn; gasoline driven "go-devils" that make one hundred miles an hour, used for parcel post service at San Francisco.

IT'S A BEAR (Vitagraph), Sept. 4.—Mark Swan is the author of this one-reel comedy. A newly-married couple, a poodle, a janitor and a jag cause the comic complications. The bear is a stuffed one. The material is handled only moderately well. Mary Anderson and Archie Warren play the newly-weds. They are equal to the task.

HAM THE FORTUNE TELLER (Kalem), Sept. 5.—A review of this picture in the issue of Sept. 9, page 1686, sets it down as "a good comedy number, clean and amusing without being vulgar." Ham's impersonation of a gypsy fortune teller is along original lines and his skill at reading the future is nothing short of marvelous.

THE CHALK LINE (Vim), Sept. 6.—That Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby are determined to maintain a high level in their comedy offerings is amply evidenced in this very entertaining number. The plot concerns a domestic fight, owing to the wife's jealousy, which results in the house being divided into two parts indicated by a chalk line. An infant, idolized by both parents, is instrumental in effacing the barrier. Settings for this picture are in notably good taste.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 72 (Selig), Sept. 7.—Battlefields in France; surrender of German troops July 29; all that is left of Etoile Woods; Countess Von Bernsdorff, wife of the German Ambassador, arrives in New York; President Wilson signs the Army and Navy bill; parade of veterans of the Civil War, Kansas City; United States hospital train, San Antonio, Texas.; Chicago show girls ride aqueplanes on Lake Michigan.

SIDE-TRACKED (Vim), Sept. 7.—Plump and Runt are featured in this one-reel farce. While on his wedding tour, Runt falls asleep in the smoking car and is separated from his bride. Plump attempts to adjust matters and is nearly murdered for his pains. There is a lively chase at the finish, but the reel is not one of the best of its brand. Babe Hardy, Billy Ruge, Melba Andrews and Robin Williamson comprise the cast.

METER IN THE KITCHEN (Kalem), Sept. 8.—A review of this one-reel comedy is printed on another page of the present issue.

A VILLAINOUS VILLAIN (Vitagraph), Sept. 8.—Rapid-fire action and the work of Hughey Mack and Patsy DeForest make this one-reel farce comedy a laugh-producer. Thrills and humor are furnished when an automobile laden with crooks dives off a dock. The story is a burlesque on the time-honored melodramatic plot in which the daughter of a banker is kidnapped by the villainous villain. The denouement comes when she is rescued from the water by Sherlock Oomph, as he trails on a rope behind a motor boat. Besides Hughey Mack and Patsy DeForest, the cast includes William Shea, Harry Hammill and Ed Dunn.

A BLAZE ON THE RAILS (No. 96 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Kalem), Sept. 9.—A flaming freight car starts Helen and her trusty motorcycle to the rescue. The lady's nerve is still in the best of condition and she risks her life as calmly as ever. A review of the reel was printed in the issue of Sept. 9, page 1686.

General Film Company Special.

HIS STOLEN FORTUNE (Essanay), Aug. 29.—There is more comedy than drama in this two-reel reissue. The plot discloses a scheme by which an eccentric millionaire tests the honesty of his nephew, after the young man becomes his heir. There is plenty of life in the picture, and most of the situations are humorous. Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne head the cast. Thomas Commerford and John Cossar are also on the list. The work of the director is well done.

THE HIGHER DESTINY (Essanay), Sept. 2.—The clash of interests in this three-reel photoplay, is complicated enough to keep the attention of the spectator riveted on the screen. The story deals with the rivalry of two young men for the love of a young girl whose mother, years before, had refused to marry the father of one of her daughter's suitors. The other young chap tries to win the girl by unfair means. The picture has been carefully produced and given the benefit of a competent cast. Warda Howard, Sydney Ainsworth, Edward Arnold, Gertrude Glover and Patrick Calhoun have the principal parts.

A FOOL AND HIS FRIEND (Vitagraph), Sept. 2.—Agnes C. Johnson, the author of this three-reel photoplay, has taken an always trustworthy theme and handled it with skill. It is the story of the woman who marries the wrong man and, after trials and tribulations, finds happiness with the one who has stood every test. Corinne Griffith, as a dancer of the siren type, gives an excellent performance, and Louise Owen, Webster Campbell, Jack Mower and Otto Lederer are equal to all demands. Wm. Wolbert has produced the picture effectively.

ENOCH ARDEN (Biograph), Sept. 5.—This two-part production of Tennyson's poem was produced by Griffith a number of years ago and is being reissued. It is a very satisfactory release, even judged by present day standards. Wilfred Lucas, Alfred Paget and Linda Arvidson are in the cast. Photography and settings are of the best.

THE PACIFIST (Essanay), Sept. 5.—A mirthful farce comedy in two reels, featuring Harry Dunkinson and Camille D'Arcy. The action reveals how a "peaceful" man is browbeaten both in office and home, until he asserts himself in no uncertain fashion.

MAN'S ENEMY (Biograph), Sept. 6.—A three-part melodrama featuring Lillian Gish at the head of a cast including David Wall, Vivian Prescott, Franklin Ritchie and Thomas Jefferson. A taste for strong drink is represented as the greatest of man's enemies, in a picture containing a number of forceful, though not altogether reasonable, situations. Reviewed in the issue of August 26th.

THE ORE PLUNDERERS (Kalem), Sept. 6.—The fifth episode of "The Girl from Frisco" Series is a strenuous two-reel drama. Many of the scenes are laid in a mine, and the dramatic story is produced with realism. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Sept. 5, page 1686.

THE DELUDED WIFE (Knickerbocker Star Feature), Sept. 8.—A three-part Balboa drama, in which Virginia Norden plays the part of a wife who is led into a wealthy marriage by a designing mother, although she much prefers another man for a husband. She carries on a somewhat dangerous affair with this admirer until she is completely disillusionized on learning that in addition to being a thief he keps an insane wife in captivity. The story makes very passable melodrama as acted by Miss Norden, Joe Brooks, Edward J. Brady and others, in the supporting cast. Sharp photography and attractive settings are among the production's assets.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE EVIL WOMEN DO, Sept. 25.—A five-part melodrama based on the story of Emil Gaboriau. The theme is a morbid one, and but for the clever manner in which Elsie Jane Wilson has handled the role of the woman Ernestine Bergot, afterward Sarah Brandon, the production might not prove sufficiently interesting. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE UNWELCOME MOTHER (Fox), Sept. 3.—A very fine picture filled with things that the most critical will like to see. It is an offering considerably better than the average. A longer account of it will be found on another page of this issue.

International Film Service.

HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 71, 1916, Sept. 5.—Troops camped on Mexican border line; aviator flies from Atlantic City to New York to be present at luncheon; Harry Fox and Aviator Kendricks; tug of war at Berkeley, Cal.; Chinese fisherman catching and canning shrimp at San Francisco; gardens for poor children at Rockefeller Institute, New York; Water Meet, Waltham, Mass.; British in Balkans, advance near Salonika.

HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 72, 1916, Sept. 8.—Hydroplane speed records shattered at Detroit, Mich.; President Wilson accepts Lincoln farm and statue on behalf of Nation, Hodgenville; Members of Mexican Joint Commission go yachting on "Mayflower," New London, Conn.; Fashions De Luxe; Candidate Hughes rests at Denver, Col., from strenuous campaign; Theodore Roosevelt stumps Maine for Hughes campaign; Ninth Massachusetts Infantry fight imaginary battle at border; mountain at Los Angeles dynamited; mermaids dine in surf at Long Beach; Belgian King and family receive King George and family "somewhere in Belgium"; thousands walk during New York car strike.

Mutual Film Corporation.

THE BOOMERANG GOLD BRICK (Beauty), Sept. 6.—An amusing farce comedy in which Orral Humphrey plays the lead. A couple of country people entering the city bent on sight seeing get taken in in various ways through which they are fleeced of their money, the purchase of a fake gold brick being one of them. They succeed eventually in bringing their persecutors to justice, and in recovering their money.

MAKING THINGS HUM (Cub), Sept. 8.—This offering maintains the usual lively standard of the comedies featuring George Ovey. In this Jerry and the policeman become rivals for the hand of a flirtatious girl. There is much of the usual knockabout business. The scramble up and down the side of the house is a good feature.

REEL LIFE, NO. 19 (Gaumont), Sept. 10.—This number contains an interesting resume of the churches of Texas as well as other items of interest, including the usual comic climax.

THE HEART OF A DOLL (Thanhouser), Sept. 15.—A wholesome two-part story, nicely staged, which will please both children and adults. The sentiment of the picture is simple and charming, and the production can be recommended to any theater.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

FANTOMAS, NO. 1 (Gaumont), Sept. 7.—"The Phantom Crook" is the title of this first episode of an apaprently interesting serial. The opening episode has to do with a daring theft of money and jewels from a certain wealthy princess. About the same time a well known nobleman disappears and later his body is discovered in a trunk about to be shipped among the baggage of one Durn, who is arrested and sentenced to death. One of the thrilling moments of the story occurs when an actor who has been impersonating Durn is drugged, kidnapped, and substituted for the prisoner. The mistake is noted when the prisoner is being prepared for the gallows.

THE LIGHT (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe), Sept. 7.—Made at the American studios this five-part picture with Helen Rosson, Eugenie Ford, Geo. Webb, and Franklin Ritchie prominent in the cast will be found moderately interesting. The majority of the scenes are laid in the home of a Hindoo crystal gazer, who succeeds in luring into his power a pretty young woman, wife of an artist. He is eventually stabbed to death by another woman whom he has used as a tool in obtaining possession of the younger woman.

MACHIN' JIM (Mustang), Sept. 8.—This two-reel ranch comedy features Frank Borzage, Anna Little and Dick La Reno. It is an entertaining number, rather slight in plot, but maintaining the interest quite strongly. The hero is a young ranchman who matches coins before he takes any action. He matches with his rival to see who shall court the girl and finally matches with the father to see whether he can marry her or not. There is not much action in the first reel, but the story picks up well in the second and has an amusing and satisfactory close.

A FLAW IN THE EVIDENCE (Thanhouser), Sept. 22.—This production is based on a story of only moderate interest, and dwells on the fact that a baby can detect good and bad in individuals, shrinking from persons of evil intent and loving those of good purpose. A detective who tries to implicate the butler and nurse in a theft of jewels is discovered to be himself the thief.

THE JUNGLE FLASHLIGHT (Centaur), Sept. 9.—A first rate story of the African wilds, in two reels. The Bostock animals, particularly the trained elephant, are seen to the best possible advantage. Children will be sure to enjoy this. The plot concerns a young professor and his wife and child, who are photographing animals in the jungle. The child is lost and saved from harm by the elephant. There is also a side plot, in which the young chemist endeavors to steal the wife's affections. He is killed by the elephant. Wm. Clifford, Margaret Gibson and Al Blake play the leads. The views of the native village are pleasing. A good number.

ROLLING TO RUIN (Vogue), Sept. 10.—A two-reel knockabout comedy, featuring Paddy McGuire, Margaret Templeman, Arthur Moon and others. This begins in a grocery story and winds up at a beach, where the skating rink, merry-go-round and roller coaster are brought into play. The whole offering consists of a series of small incidents, many of them laughable. The action is swift and pleasing and this proves a successful offering of the kind. The plot is slight, but sufficient to hold the incidents together. The photography is also an improvement over the average.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE HOUSE OF LIES (Oliver Morosco) Sept. 14.—Edna Goodrich has the lead in this very romantic picture of modern social extravagance and lack of principle. The heroine stands out for better things and will please pretty widely. It is distinctly a pretty picture, beautifully staged and well acted. For a longer review see elsewhere in this issue.

GLASGOW TO EDINBURGH (Burton Holmes), September.—The trip starts on the top of a tram in Glasgow and proceeds along the River Clyde by steamboat, past the great shipbuilding yards, through several of the Scotch lakes and, once more by tram, through the main streets of Edinburgh. The reel is full of interest every foot of the way. A squad of the Cameron Highlanders, who perished almost to a man in the trenches a few months after the picture was taken, are seen drilling on the parade ground of Edinburgh Castle.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), September.—"Fresh Water Aerobats" is another name for two types of small sailing craft that do seemingly impossible feats when handled by experts. "Dining Automatically" shows the inside workings of the latest style in quick lunching. "Wonders of the Unseen World" contains novel examples of microscopic life in brooks and rivers. "Leather Footprints" illustrates the latest scientific method of making a pair of boots for the fashionable woman. These subjects form the contents of this number of Paramount's screen magazine. The production of the reel is excellent.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PEAR GROWING IN OREGON (Pathe), Sept. 11.—An interesting and instructive number showing in detail how the pear orchards of Oregon are cared for. On the same reel with "Historic Mobile, Ala."

HISTORIC MOBILE, ALA. (Pathe), Sept. 11.—Showing many interesting views in and about this old city which has thrived under three different governments.

BUSTING THE BEANERY (Rolin), Sept. 11.—Heinie and Louie are the comic figures in this comedy, which is rather amusing, and is essentially a slapstick number. The usual rivalry between the two occurs, developing in the present instance some very funny situations.

Pathe Exchange Inc. Specials

THE FEAR OF POVERTY (Gold Rooster Play), Sept. 11.—This five-part production was made by the Thanhouser Company from Agnes C. Johnson's scenario. Florence LaBadie is the featured member of the east and plays skilfully the double role of mother and daughter. The production has been staged effectively, and will be much enjoyed. A full review will be found elsewhere.

A CHANGE OF HEART (Pathe), Sept. 11.—A two-part drama of moderate merits made by the Whartons. The story of the picture is neither a strong nor a particularly interesting one, and shows how a crook suddenly reminded of his own mother by an old woman whom he has been employed to aid in swindling, turns from his life of evil and becomes regenerated.

THE GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 10, "Down to the Sea" (Balboa), Sept. 18.—This is an interesting number of the serial in which the trusted agents of a fisheries concern try to pocket considerable of the profits. The daughter of one of the employees figures largely in the story, and is loved by John Burton, the head of the firm. Some thrilling situations occur in the course of this number.

THE TEST (Gold Rooster Play), Sept. 18.—An absorbing five-part drama made from an original scenario. Jane Gray, who will be remembered in the production "Let Katy Do It," is featured in this picture, and does excellent work. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE SOCIAL SECRETARY (Fine Arts) Sept. 17.—A sparkling and very attractive high comedy, affording Norma Talmadge fine opportunity, to which she responds in splendid style.

THE WOLF WOMAN (Triangle—Ince), Sept. 17.—The story of an enchantress who ruins her victims through sex charm, but far above the ordinary in structure, treatment and interpretation, that of Louis Glaum in the title role being a revelation.

DIANA OF THE FOLLIES (Fine Arts), Sept. 24.—The story of a show girl who found married life dull and returned to her professional career in spite of the death of her child, made attractive by the brilliant characterization of Lillian Gish.

THE DAWN MAKER (Triangle—Ince), Sept. 24.—A rather slow tragedy of poetic tendency, featuring William Hart in the leading role. Capably handled, but too long drawn out.

Unity Sales Corp.

YELLOW MENACE (Unity Sales), Episode No. 4, Sept. 18.—Called "The Plot of a Demon," this installment keeps up a lively sense of interest. For longer review see Issue Setpember 9, page 1684.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

THE SMALL MAGNETIC HAND (Rex), Sept. 17.—The old story of the matinee idol and the innocent country girl. As his wife she is out of place in sophisticated society, therefore the actor becomes a very brutal cad. In a drunken rage he strikes a blow that almost causes her death. The near-tragedy brings him to his senses and we are asked to believe that he is transformed into a good husband and father. A mediocre number, acted by Gertrude Selby and Hal Cooley.

BRICK TOP (Big U), Sept. 17.—Because of his red hair and freckles—the physical indications of a fiery temper—a boy's life at home and at school is anything but enjoyable. He runs away and when night comes finds a resting place in a barn. It happens that two highwaymen seek seclusion in the same place and that the boy's father, hunting for the runaway, finds the same shelter. He is held captive by the highwaymen and the exciting part of the story concerns the boy's cleverness in outwitting the captors. When Red Head returns to school he is a hero. John McDermott wrote and directed this dramatic sketch, which carries a strong appeal in the character of the boy. A good program number.

SILLY SULTAN (Nestor), Sept. 18.—A comedy, by Ben Cohn, featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran as two young Americans who rescue a girl from a harem in Turkey. The harem costumes are rather breezy, but will pass. The action is not extremely funny, but contains a few laughs.

HIGH SPEED (Victor), Sept. 21.—An amusing little offering, by Harvey Gates, featuring Edith Roberts and Millard K. Wilson. The town belle is bumbled by a young man who understands her little tricks. This is cleverly presented and makes a pleasing light subject.

A MOUNTAIN NYMPH (Big U), Sept. 22.—A mountain story, in which a young millionaire and his friend capture a band of train robbers. There is a love interest in the story, which has a fairly strong plot. The mountain scenery is picturesque and attractive. Jack Nelson, Fred Burns, Burton C. Law and Mollie Malone are in the cast.

MUSICAL MADNESS (Joker), Sept. 23.—A funny character comedy, by Harry Wulze. This features Gale Henry, Wm. Franey, Milburne Moranti and Chas. Conklin, who produce some amusing homely types. The plot is also above the average for this type of film. A first rate character comedy.

Universal Film Corporation Specials

A SILLY SULTAN (Nestor), Sept. 18.—A two-reel comedy number, by Al E. Christie, which keeps the observer laughing much of the time. Eddie Lyons, Betty Compson, Harry Rattenberry, Lee Moran and Stella Adams are in the cast. The young clerk becomes peeved because his employer won't let him marry his daughter. He starts business for himself. His uncle in Turkey sends him his harem, consisting of five beautiful young women, which brings him no end of trouble. But he also sends valuable jewels and this helps adjust matters. This is a revival of a former success in certain features. It is a good comedy offering.

BLACK FRIDAY (Red Feather), Sept. 18.—A five-reel number, adapted by E. M. Ingleton from a story by Frederick S. Isham. This has not been clearly and consistently directed at all times, but tells a most entertaining story. The time is during the administration of President U. S. Grant, and the scenes change from this country to Paris during The Commune. Richard Morris does good work as the rugged railroad president, who can lead a battle among the money kings, but almost loses his wife's love. The scenes during The Commune are exciting and quite well staged. This is not without faults of construction, but has a story of refreshing interest. Dorothy Davenport appears as the wife.

A DESERT OF LOST SOULS (Special Universal), Sept. 18.—No. 6 of the "Liberty" series. This installment witnesses Pedro's fall over a cliff, on the back of a wild horse. He escapes death and, after freeing himself from the animal, takes up the pursuit of Liberty and her captors. Liberty overhears a plot by the brigands to blow up the hacienda when it is occupied by the troops. She spoils the scheme by creating a premature explosion. The number is not quite so thrilling as some of its predecessors, but carries the interest well.

TIMOTHY DOBBS, THAT'S ME!, NO. 6 (Universal Special Feature), Sept. 18.—In this two-reel number, by Bess Meredyth, Timothy dreams of making a big salary as a moving picture actor. He makes another effort, but it proves unsuccessful, as the others. Carter De Haven is amusing in this burlesque part, but the plot is so slight that the installment only proves mildly entertaining.

COLD HEARTS AND HOT FLAMES (L-KO), Sept. 20.—This two-reel number, featuring Billy Ritchie, contains a number of laughable incidents and is acceptable throughout. It is better staged than common and the settings and costuming are an improvement over the average knockabout comedy. These things all help to give a certain snap to a humorous performance, even of the purely nonsensical type. Billy sends himself a telegram announcing that he has inherited a million dollars, in order to win the girl. The marriage is conducted under difficulties, however, and winds up in midair. The fire scene is unusually good and the small business throughout is funny.

THE BROKEN SPUR (Bison), Sept. 23.—A two-reel subject, by J. Grubb Alexander, featuring Ben Wilson, Rosemary Dean and others. The story is laid in the Northwest. The hero doubles, playing the parts of a young surveyor and a road agent. Numerous complications ensue before the physical likeness of the two is discovered. The plot follows familiar lines, and while entertaining, is not very novel. There are some fine snow scenes taken in the pine woods.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

HIS WIFE'S GOOD NAME (Vitagraph), Sept. 11.—A good picture, produced by Ralph Ince, with Lucille Lee Stewart featured, supported by an excellent cast. It is in five parts. The subject is reviewed in another column.

World Film Corporation

FRIDAY, THE THIRTEENTH (Peerless-World), Sept. 18.—While this adaptation of Thomas W. Lawson's story of Wall street is not extraordinary, it makes a very satisfactory five-part picture, with Robert Warwick in the lead, supported by Gerda Holmes and other. Scenes showing a panic on the stock exchange are particularly worthy of comment. A review may be found on another page of this issue.

Auspicious Opening

More Than a Hundred Houses Start "The Fall of a Nation" on Its V-L-S-E Career.

THE V-L-S-E season of "The Fall of a Nation" opens on September 18 with bookings in more than a hundred houses throughout the country, according to L. G. Bamberger, acting assistant general manager of the Irwin organization. Mr. Bamberger, a popular official, is holding down the desk of A. W. Goff, whilst the latter executive is making a month's tour of the V-L-S-E exchanges.

"The demands for 'The Fall of a Nation,'" said Bamberger yesterday, "are even bigger than the Greater Vitagraph people or the National Drama Corporation had anticipated. A feature of the opening will be week stands in Minneapolis, Utica, Birmingham and Atlanta. Ten houses in Brooklyn have already contracted for the film, in addition to a dozen in Manhattan and a goodly representation in the best paying towns of New York State. Our Atlanta representative wires that he desires three prints and 15,000 more sheets of poster paper. Throughout the entire southern territory greater interest is being exhibited in this Dixon offering than in any other motion picture production since the same author's 'The Birth of a Nation' was presented."

Recent showings that have spread the fame of the play widely in state rights territory were those at the Hippodrome, Youngstown, O., week of August 27; Court theater, Wheeling, Labor Day week; the Dixie, Galveston, Tex., and the Kyle, Beaumont, Tex., both opening August 26. Most of these are legitimate first-class houses at which advanced prices were charged. The largest business reported was at Youngstown, where over a thousand dollars was taken in on the opening day.

"THE INSPECTOR'S DOUBLE" (Universal).

No, indulgent readers of the Moving Picture World, these are not Castor and Pollux, neither are they the gemini, the Siamese twins, nor the Gold Dust doublets. They are William Franey and Charles Conklin, the Joker bicuspids who cop all the honors in "The Inspector's Double," which will be released under the Universal banner on September 30.

This is a marvelous tale in which insane asylums, the doublets, their wives and a horde of cops all gyrate around each other in terrifying confusion. Gale Henry and Lillian Peacock are cast as the wives of the doublets and Milburn Moranti and Harry Mann also furnish their share of the funmaking. Harry Wulze and Charles J. Wilson, Jr., are responsible for the story and scenario, which were produced by W. W. Beaudine.

UNITY EXCHANGE IN HOUSTON, TEX.

Announcement is made this week that the Unity Sales Corporation has established its own exchange in Houston, Tex., to look after the distribution of "The Yellow Menace" and other features which are to be put out by the Unity Sales Corporation. A. G. Behring, Jr., is to be manager of this exchange and will handle all of Texas and Oklahoma.

Besides "The Yellow Menace" Mr. Behring has at the present time to offer exhibitors in his territory "The Marriage Bond," starring the distinguished actor, Nat C. Goodwin, in five reels; "The Lottery Man," with Thurlow Bergen, in five parts, and the Tweedledum comedies, with the famous Perez in a series of one and two-reel comedies.

"MODEL 46" (Universal).

The Universal Film Mfg. Co., Carl Laemmle president, hereby offers a prize of $50 to the reader of the Moving Picture World Manufacturers Advance Notices who names the Universal actor or actress who enacts the role of "Model 46" in the Universal production of the same name, which will be released on September 25.

One of the cleverest bits of acting ever done at Universal City completely fooled bystanders who stood on the observation platform while this picture was being filmed. The actor or actress who plays the deceptive role is sitting in the foreground of this picture at the table.

Is it Gretchen Lederer? Is it Lee Moran? Is it Eddie Lyons? Is it Priscilla Dean? Or is it Fred Gamble, They all appear in the picture. Or was it a Universal star who dropped his or her stellar role to appear for the once in back-parlor comedy with the Nestor Hoydens?

L. W. Chaudet, the producer of the picture, Tom Gibson who wrote the story, and Charles J. Wilson, Jr., author of the scenario, refuse to reveal the secret, so there's no use writing to Universal City regarding the mysterious young woman or young man's identity. All answers to this competition should be mailed in to Joseph Brandt, General Manager of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York, on or before October 1, 1916. Use one side of the paper and write legibly, typewriting preferred.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"INTO THE NORTHLAND" (Selig).

"Into the Northland" is another one of those noteworthy Selig Diamond Specials released regularly through General Film service. This photoplay, produced by Wm. Robert Daly, from the story written by David K. Higgins, features a very exceptional cast of artists, including Fritzi Brunette, Leo Pierson, Lillian Hayward, Harry Lonsdale and James Bradbury.

George Collins, in search of gold, penetrates into the Northland after extending some kindness to Moll McGuire, a woman of the underworld, who fleeing from the city, also goes into the North. No word comes from Collins, and his wife finally decides to follow him, and does so disguised as a boy.

How Moll McGuire returns the kindness shown her by George Collins, how Collins' wife finally finds him, and how Collins, striking it rich, makes happiness for all concerned, are just details in a very unusual drama, replete with exciting action and carrying beautiful scenic effects. "Into the Northland" will be released Monday, September 18th.

IMPORTANT CHANGES IN THE GREATER VITAGRAPH PROGRAM.

Irvin Cobb's first photoplay, it has been previously announced, will be a Vitaraph production indorsed by the American Bankers' Association as a valuable asset to its national campaign on "Thrift." The title given out a few weeks ago was "The Adventures of Bill." It has been decided to change this title to "The Dollar and the Law," as one better calculated to attract the public. "The Dollar and the Law" will be a December release, with the popular Lillian Walker in the title role. Wilfred North is the director.

The Greater Vitagraph has determined to move forward the date of "The Combat," starring Anita Stewart, to September 18th. It has been announced as an October 9th release. By special arrangement with the New York exchange, the new Flatbush Theatre, Church and Flatbush avenues, Brooklyn, opened Labor Day night with "The Combat" and could not accommodate the crowds that flocked there to see America's daintiest star. It will not be shown again until the new release date, September 18.

PRESIDENT WILSON IN MUTUAL WEEKLY NUMBER 89.

The picture which naturally will excite the most interest in Mutual Weekly No. 89 is that showing the notification of President Wilson of his selection to head the Democratic hosts in the coming national election. The function took place at Long Branch, N. J., and the pictures show the leaders of the party as well as the nation's Chief Executive. Of national interest also are the pictures of the naval "rookies" as they return from their manoeuvres. There are included with these views the start of the "mosquito fleet" manoeuvres.

The world of fashion is represented by the efforts of Fifth avenue habitues to replace dogs with goats in public favor. Pretty girls leading goats have been caught by the Gaumont camera man as they stroll on America's most advertised thoroughfare.

Freddie Welsh retains his crown as lightweight boxing champion, and the Mutual Weekly has been fortunate enough to secure interesting pictures of the pugilistic victor at Colorado Springs, Colo. He is seen on the road, and engaged in a fast bout with his trainer, and just as he enters the ring, where he maintained his supremacy.

PATHE'S "THE TEST" DIRECTED BY FITZMAURICE.

No one has been identified with a larger number of successes in the spoken drama than A. H. Woods. He is a prolific producer and possesses an almost uncanny insight into that highly variable and intangible something known as "popular taste." There are styles in plays as well as in costumes. Mr. Woods, ever keen to catch the popular fancy, put out in "The Test" a play that did big business for two years. The public likes a story which shows a beautiful girl, forced to work for a living, assailed with temptations on every side, yet keeping mind and body clean. "The Test" has such a story. Put into a Pathe Gold Rooster play by George Fitzmaurice, of the Astra, it loses nothing of the life and color it had on the stage, and gains much by reason of the unlimited choice of backgrounds.

Jane Grey, the star, is a player with much personal charm, united with exceptional dramatic talent. She films beautifully. The supporting cast is excellent, comprising, as it does, Lumsden Hare, Claude Fleming, Carl Harbaugh and Inez Buck. Mr. Fitzmaurice, the director of the picture, earned golden opinions with his "New York," "At Bay" and "Via Wireless." "The Test" is worthy of being ranked with these productions, which, we are informed, have made much money for exhibitors.

"GRIP OF EVIL"—NO. 9 TELLS TIMELY STORY.

The ninth episode of Pathe's masterplot in fourteen chapters, "The Grip of Evil," released September 10th, is entitled "The Dollar King." It is characterized by an extremely timely story dealing with higher wages and better conditions for workmen and excellent acting on the part of Roland Bottomley as John Burton and Jackie Saunders as Janet Perkins.

The son of the head of the cardboard box trust desires to bring about reforms in his father's factory. The father turns him out and he appeals to John Burton, who builds a model factory and places the young man in charge of it. The workers are happy and contented and all goes well until the trust resolves to acquire Burton's property, or make it so unprofitable for him that he will have to give it up.

Will he, with all his millions, be able to fight the powerful combination of interests arrayed against him, or will he be forced to surrender. The film gives the answer in graphic manner.

GAUMONT RELEASES THIRD "FANTOMAS" EPISODE.

The third release in the Mutual series made by Gaumont—"Fantomas"—has to do with some of the most mystifying criminal acts ever depicted upon the screen. It is called "The Mysterious Finger Print." The release date is September 21. No better record of its effect upon spectators can be offered than the review of a trained viewer of pictures for the Moving Picture World. He was so struck with the admirable qualities of this frankly melodramatic picture that he wrote at length regarding it. Only quotations can be given from his editorial comment, prepared to give exhibitors some idea of the value of the episode:

"Where pictures with a decided punch are wanted, where startling and terrible sensations presented with logic enough to make them connect up for the time in a seemingly organic whole are desired, this third instalment of 'Fantomas' will be welcome, will even stir enthusiasm. It is a picture of impenetrable mystery until the end. The opening situation it presents is tremendous and holds until it is cleared up.

"The stage craft of the picture is admirable. The producer has handled his material in such a way that each blow it gives—the picture gives blows that can be felt almost with physical sense—comes home to the spectator with a thud. To crown it all, the acting is well nigh perfect.

"It is the producer's aim to keep the spectator wondering. The attention is kept in a state of stunned wonder."

"HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER" (Selig.)

"His Brother's Keeper," produced by William Robert Daly, from the story written by I. K. Friedman, will be released in regular service through General Film Company on Monday, September 4th, and will feature such Selig stars as Eugenie Scene from "His Brother's Keeper" (Selig).

Besserer, Fritzi Brunette, Leo Pierson, Harry Lonsdale and others.

"His Brother's Keeper" is frankly a drama of the underworld—of the endeavors of a notorious woman crook to keep her pretty daughter from the taint of sin. How she finally succeeds, sacrificing her life in so doing, and how the girl becomes the wife of the manly young physician who loves her, are only incidents in a very exciting film drama. There is plot and counterplot, treachery and many sensational climaxes in this wonderful production. The photography is clear, and the scenic effects are unusually good.

SELIG PLAYS WITHDRAWN FROM V-L-S-E.

Not only has the Selig Polyscope Company withdrawn from the V-L-S-E, but the Selig Red Seal Plays, which have proven so popular, will soon be withdrawn from that organization and will be released by the new organization. Among the Selig Red Seal Plays that have won universal popularity during the past year are: "The Prince Chap," "The Valiants of Virginia," "Into The Primitive," "At Piney Ridge," "The Cycle Of Fate," "Unto Those Who Sin," "Thou Shalt Not Covet," "No Greater Love," "Sweet Alyssum," "A Black Sheep," "The Circular Staircase," "The House Of A Thousand Candles," "A Texas Steer," "The Rosary," "The Millionaire Baby" and "The Carpet From Bagdad." The latest feature drama of the Selig Company, ready for release, is "The Country That God Forgot." This Selig Red Seal Play, written and directed by Marshall Neilan, features Tom Santschi, supported by an all-star cast including George W. Fawcett, Mary Charleson, Will Machin and Victoria Forde. It is a gripping drama of the Western solitudes.

"WHEN JUSTICE WON" (Essanay).

An example of the battle to be fought by the ex-convict who really desires to make something of himself is offered in this two-act drama, which gives Sydney Ainsworth an excellent character to portray, and affords friends of Marguerite Clayton another opportunity to see her in a likeable role in a short reel production. The plot is exceptional for a film of this length, being constructed on a sequence of events which permit of no lull in the action. The spectator follows with interest the rise to respected citizenship of the ex-convict, sympathizes with him in his fight against the blackmailers who were his former fellows, and applauds his final fight which wins the girl for whom he hitherto had not dared even hope. Equal with the fact that a capable cast portrays the piece is the story it tells, one decidedly unusual in a two-act film.

"THE WHEEL OF JUSTICE," STARRING EMILY STEVENS.

"The Wheel of Justice," a five-part Metro wonderplay, in which Emily Stevens, the well-known stage and screen star, has the stellar role, will be released on the Metro program September 18th. Miss Stevens is surrounded by a strong supporting cast headed by Frank Mills, who has been starred on both the screen and in stage productions.

The story of "The Wheel of Justice," written especially for Miss Stevens by Katharine Kavanaugh, deals with convictions obtained in capital offenses, based solely upon circumstantial evidence. It is a powerful and vivid picture of the abuse of over-ambitious officials, who are ruthless and unfair in their prosecution to obtain public favor and office.

The plot centers around Mona Mainard, a successful Broadway star, played by Miss Stevens, and John Morton, a District Attorney, essayed by Mr. Mills. Miss Stevens is seen at her best. Mr. Mills makes an ideal District Attorney. The supporting cast includes Raymond McKee, Edwin Holt, Harry Davenport, Jerome N. Wilson, Charles Eldridge and Roma Raymond. Miss Raymond has the part of an adventuress. It is her first appearance on the screen for two years in her well-known vampire roles.

"The Wheel of Justice" contains many thrilling and gripping scenes. There is a strong court-room scene and a novel laboratory setting, where the effects of certain poisons on a supposed victim are brought out in an interesting manner. The church scene in this production is one of the most elaborate ever staged in a studio. George D. Baker directed this picture. Charles Hunt is his assistant.

FRANK POWELL COMPLETING "CHARITY?"

"Charity?" the first feature of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., is rapidly nearing completion. This picture, which has been made from a scenario by Linda A. Griffith, will mark Mr.

Powell's initial effort as an independent producer. In it appear Creighton Hale, Linda A. Griffith and Sheldon Lewis. "Charity?" will shortly be ready for release on a State rights basis.

BURR McINTOSH HAS A NOVELTY.

The secret of the sudden and mysterious disappearance of Burr McIntosh is out. From a private letter a friend received yesterday, it appears he has been doing some remarkable work in the animated Moving Picture line for several weeks, and is on the return trip of his interesting journey "Through the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence," being now at Alexandra Bay and due in Montreal Wednesday. The trip began nearly two months ago, when Lucius G. Fisher, Jr., Yale, '97, steamed out of Chicago harbor on board his good little yacht "Dolphin." More than 10,000 feet of film has already been made. Scenic beauty, historic places, famous people and plenty of adventure have been perpetuated. The finish of the "Great Yacht Race" from Chicago to Mackinac Island, "Sea Planing," "Yachting and Fishing on the Great North Waters," Vice-President Charles W. Fairbanks "greeting the party" and scores of other scenes and events of great interest too numerous to mention. Mr. McIntosh has devised another original "stunt" in moving picture industry. He plays "Col. Calhoun Booker," of Kentucky and Miss Lillian Gilman, a new and attractive screen artist from Honolulu, his daughter, "Betty Booker." They receive an invitation in their Kentucky home to join "Commodore Fisher" on the "Dolphin," and from there on are shown everything of interest. Already the little boat has bumped rocks in McGregor Bay, been held up in the middle of Lake Erie in the dead of night and encountered other unexpected and startling mishaps, including the explosion of a steamer on Lake Michigan, and an attack by "home-made" pirates, but if all goes well before the end of the month and "the fogs don't bump her to the bottom," the "Dolphin" will drop anchor in New York harbor and a dozen or more "distinctly different" and most interesting reels will be ready for the market.

"ENLIGHTEN THY DAUGHTER" AN IVAN FEATURE.

For the past half year Ivan Abramson has devoted every spare moment of his time to the development of what he says is the master effort of his career. Taking a theme the subject of which treats of the follies of ignorance and the results sustained by the fact that sufficient enlightenment is not furnished the young by their parents, the result of six months' work of this famous dramatist should when filmed rank as one of the most sensational and powerful screen dramas of the year and one which points out so powerful a moral lesson that it is destined to create comment and controversy wherever exhibited.

There are eight principal acting roles in the new play, each one of which is as important as the next, and each giving the artist chosen to play the part ample opportunity to display artistry and character delineation in its portrayal. An exceptional cast is being assembled of artists of both the legitimate and the silent stage.

Contrary to the usual custom, this play will not be released as a regular Ivan feature, but will be exploited as a special feature employing all methods of publicity to create both exhibitor and audience demand. Its length will be a minimum of seven reels. October is the month set for its premiere at a leading Broadway theater which will be specially engaged for a long period to house "Enlighten Thy Daughter."

"THE SOCIAL BUCCANEER" (Bluebird).

Through an arrangement with Bobbs-Merrill Co., publishers for Frederick S. Isham, the works of that author will be translated to the screen through the medium of Bluebird Photoplays. The first of the series will be "The Social Buccaneer," to be released Oct. 16. Jack Conway directed the production from Fred Myton's scenario and the abundant possibilities in the Isham novel have been screened in interesting sequence.

Under the former system, when "names" were being featured by Bluebird, two individual stars were J. Warren Kerrigan and Louise Lovely, but under the new policy, which makes the play "the thing," personalities are a secondary consideration. Because they are best adapted to play the leading roles, Mr. Kerrigan and Miss Lovely join their artistry in "The Social Buccaneer," thus giving the play whatever advantage there may be to the exhibitor in advertising these former stars.

This is the first time Mr. Kerrigan and Miss Lovely have played "opposite," and Jack Conway is a new director for the pretty Australian girl. The stock organization the two stars formerly led have been merged, and from the enlarged company Maud George, Marc Robbins, Hayward Mack and Harry Carter have been selected to play the supporting characters in the Isham story. With the novel familiar to many thousands of fiction readers, the photoplay will have an immediate advantage, sure to mean increased patronage for the theater manager.

METRO-YORKE CO. TO PRODUCE "BIG TREMAINE."

Fred J. Balshofer, president and general manager of the Metro-Yorke studio, closed negotiations this week with Little, Brown & Company, the Boston publishers, for the motion picture rights to "Big Tremaine," the popular novel by Marie Van Vorst, author of "The Girl From His Town" and several other fiction successes. Production will be started in a few days by Director Henry Otto, with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the stellar roles.

Mr. Lockwood will characterize the name part of "Big" Tremaine, who is so called by reason of his bigness of heart, mind and physical development. Miss Allison is cast to portray the role of an aristocratic young southern girl who idealizes "Big" Tremaine.

The story of "Big Tremaine" is laid in picturesque Virginia. Special settings for the feature will be built at the West Coast Metro-Yorke studio under the supervision of Henry Otto, who was born and raised in the south. This in itself is an assurance that the details will be accurate and the scenes will smack of the true, attractive South. A cast to support Harold Lockwood and May Allison is now being assembled in Los Angeles at the Metro-Yorke studio.

"AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS" (Herald).

Of interest to exhibitors everywhere is the announcement that the Herald Film Corporation will on October 1st release "Around the World in Eighty Days," the immortal story of that world wide famed novel by the peer of fictionists, Jules Verne. The book was read by millions, both young and old, and the demand to see the picturization will undoubtedly exceed even these figures.

"Around the World in Eighty Days" is in six parts. No expense has been spared in the making of the picture, which will be booked direct to the theater by the Herald Film Corporation, the sole distributors.

An extensive advertising campaign has been planned. Its radical feature will be the open and frank method adopted of announcing a booking price of fifty dollars a day to exhibitors.

NETTER IS PARTNER WITH LESSER.

Leon D. Netter, who so successfully handled Selig's "Spoilers" in Philadelphia, and distributed "Cabiria" and Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter" as a states right exchange man, and who previous to that had a wide and active experience with Sol Lesser's enterprises in the west, has taken over joint interest in Lesser's latest ventures in the east. Netter, who will make his office at 1325 Vine street, Philadelphia, where he can best supervise the distribution of "The Little Girl Next Door," the rights for which he and Lesser recently purchased for Pennsylvania, will also be in a better position here in the east to give the proper service to exhibitors in Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Indiana, West Virginia and Kentucky for the Audrey Munson film "Purity," which they also jointly own for this territory.

"NE'ER-DO-WELL" TO CONTINUE WITH V-L-S-E.

In view of the fact that the Selig Company has withdrawn from the V-L-S-E, Sol Lesser, head of the All Star Features, Inc., located in San Francisco, desires to make it known to the film world that "The Ne'er-Do-Well," which he purchased outright from Selig, will continue to be released on the Vitagraph V-L-S-E program.

The absorption of the V-L-S-E by the Vitagraph Company will in no way affect the distribution of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," inasmuch as it is expressly understood that while V-L-S-E becomes a department of Vitagraph, its plans, policies and sales force will in no way be altered by this merger.

BESSIE BARRISCALE IN "PLAIN JANE,"

Bessie Barriscale returns to the Triangle program in "Plain Jane," a comedy drama from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, and scores another in what is now a long succession of personal triumphs. More, critics agree that the story, photography, directing and settings for "Plain Jane" make it one of the decided hits of the year.

The picture serves to introduce Miss Barriscale in a decidedly new and different role than she has been seen in for many months. Ably seconding all of Miss Barriscale's efforts is Charles Ray, who plays the part of the poor young college boy working his way through school, and cherishing, as he thought, lofty ideas of his ultimate mission towards mankind.

The settings for the story, and, in particular, those which show the campus of a college, are realistic and artistic. Not a little care was exercised in order to impart an atmosphere of accuracy, and those memories of college days are either dim or vivid, welcome the picture as a touch of real life, all too often flashed on the screen.

A particularly well-balanced and capable cast supports Miss Barriscale in the minor roles, and the picture makes a decided addition to the wealth of achievements placed to the credit of the cinema. Miss Barriscale, once revealed in all her charming beauty, makes a decidedly attractive picture, and her acting throughout the story leaves nothing to be desired.

Timmerman Building in Chester

Philadelphia Film Men to Have Another Fine Theater—Will Be Called the Edgemont and Cost Quarter of a Million—M. W. Taylor Will Be Manager—Details.

From Philadelphia News Service, 326 Real Estate Trust Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

CHESTER, PA.—Plans have been completed for the new Edgmont theater, Chester, Pa., to be devoted to vaudeville and high class moving pictures, and ground will be broken early in September.

The Edgmont theater will be the fifth built by J. Fred Zimmerman. It will be on Edgmont avenue, facing Fourth street, and will cost $250,000. It will probably be one of the finest appointed and equipped in the state. It is to be absolutely fireproof construction.

According to the plans of the Hoffman Cmpany, the architects, the exterior is of the Rennaissance period. The front will be terra cotta construction with matglazed finish. There will be four stores fronting on Edgmont avenue, each 17 by 60 feet, with a ballroom on the second floor 90 feet long, 55 feet wide and 16 feet high.

The main entrance to the theater is 34 feet wide and it is shielded by a marquise of ornate design extending to the street. The vestibule is large and roomy and there are two 28-foot inclines to the mezzanine floor, while there is a 17-foot wide incline to the auditorium floor. The orchestra will seat 1,425, including eight private boxes, each seat being twenty inches in width, while the balcony capacity is 1,075, a total of 2,500. There will be no posts and there is a clear span of 100 feet.

M. W. Taylor, who is general manager of the J. Fred Zimmerman, Sr., Orpheum, Fairmount, Keystone and Liberty theaters, and the Broadway and Towers, Camden, will be in sole charge of the Edgmont theater, while Frank G. Zimmerman will look after the financial interests of the house.

Has New Wrinkle to Show Exhibitors.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Local exhibitors should be extremely interested in the new Johnstown automatic pay-as-you-enter machine which is now on exhibition at the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street. This machine is certainly a wonderful time, labor and money saver and should prove of exceptional value to exhibitors. It is operated along the most plain and staple lines and will no doubt prove a great seller in these parts.

Pine Tree Notes

By John P. Flanagan, 147 Park View Ave., Bangor, Maine.

J. W. Greely Reopens the Jefferson.

PORTLAND, ME.—The Jefferson theater reopened with a new manager in the person of James W. Greely, who for the past year has held a similar position at the New Portland theater, and has made it one of the most popuar amusement places in this city. Mr. Greely says that the policy of the company will be high class motion pictures, featuring Metro productions, which up to the present have not been presented in Portland. High class vaudeville will be put on also. The house has been thoroughly renovated and is in the best of condition. Young lady ushers escort patrons to their seats, a novelty in Portland. There are 12 musicians in the orchestra.

Probably no one is better known or more universally liked than James W. Greely, who has been for many years connected with theater interests in Portland. It was he who first introduced motion pictures to theatergoers of Portland, when he opened the cosy Dreamland theater in 1903. From a very much forgotten amusement place to one of the most popular in Portland, Mr. Greely brought Greely's theater to a high standard. Since giving up the management of the New Portland house at the beginnnig of the year he has given the public fine vaudeville acts. Mr. Greely is a member of the Elks, Shriners and other societies and a prominent member of the Maine legislature.

Mr. Hutchinson's familiarity with every department of a playhouse is thorough, he is especially happy in dealing with men under his direction and he has a personality well calculated to favorably impress patrons.

Johns Hopkins to Teach by Films.

Baltimore, Md.—Great should be the rejoicings of those men in the moving picture industry who have always stood up and fought for the betterment of the trade when they learn that the Johns Hopkins Medical School, which is one of the best in the country, is about to introduce into its curriculum the teaching of students by means of moving pictures the details of surgery. The demonstrations of operations by this means was brought about by an instructor who had been abroad during the summer and it is understood that the officials will give a trial of the new method during the coming medical school term.

The officials of the institution have in their possession more than 15,000 feet of film which one of the instructors states is very clear and can be used with great benefit to the students. Of course, the pictures can only be projected by a proper type of machine especially designed for this work, as the smallest details must be clearly shown. The cost for instituting this new method will be great, as the actual operations will have to be photographed, but it is presumed that this cost will be offset when it is taken into consideration that the students will be able to closely watch every move of the surgeon's knife while operating and at the same time the effect of the severe strain on the organs of the body can be observed.

Mary Boland in "Sport of Law."

Baltimore, Md.—Mary Boland, who starred in "Sport of Law," which was given its premier at Ford's Opera house last week, stated that she likes acting for the moving pictures, but not as a profession.

District of Columbia's Tax

Four-tenths of One Per Cent. of Value of Intangible Property Such as Cash Value of Monies or Credits Loaned or Invested Must Be Paid as Tax to Cover the Expenses of Running Government of the District.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth St. N. E., Washington, D. C.

The Leader a 15 Cent House.

Washington, D. C.—When George Mann took over the Leader theatre on Ninth street, in which to run Paramount pictures, he pushed a step ahead by putting up the price of admission to fifteen cents. The Leader is a small house, but it is looked upon as a good money-getter. It was not very long ago that the admission charge was but a nickel. The owners foresaw the end of the nickel show on Ninth street, and the Leader became a ten-cent house—although gossip said it could not continue as such. Now it's fifteen cents, with Corbin Shields as manager, and the outlook is that it will be a bigger success than ever. Every crack at the ten-cent shows in the business section means a step further towards the elimination of the nickel shows in the residential section.

Washington, D. C.—The many friends of Leo Garner are wishing him success in bidding him good-bye, in a new undertaking which comes about by his designation as manager of the new film exchange of Sidney B. Lust, in Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Garner has been in the employ of Mr. Lust for about three years. He started in as shipping clerk when the former was manager here for Warners' Features. He was later made booking clerk, and some time ago he was designated as assistant manager of Mr. Lust's interests in Washington. He will have entire charge of the Atlanta branch, which is located at 146 Marietta street. Mr. Garner is a young man with a very bright future ahead of him, and, Mr. Lust says, he will have excellent opportunities to make a fine showing.

Belmont Theater to Reopen.

Washington, D. C.—The Belmont theater, on Fourteenth street, near V street, northwest, is to be reopened, it is said, as a colored house. This location is right on the edge of a thickly populated section, and in all probability would make good if devoted to that purpose. The house has been closed for some few weeks.

Enlarging the Alamo Theater.

Washington, D. C.—It is reported that proposals have recently been invited by Charles Bedell from local contractors for bids covering the enlarging of the Alamo theater, on Seventh street, northwest, of which he is the manager. A considerable amount of work will be entailed by the change.

Harry Coffey to Manage Exchange.

Washington, D. C.—Harry Coffey, well known to local exhibitors by reason of a former connection with the General Film in this city, has returned to Washington to take charge of the Imperial Film Exchange, at Sixth and F streets, northwest, recently opened by Marcus Notes. Mr. Coffey is the son-in-law of the latter. He has had a considerable amount of film experience.

Upon leaving the National Capital he became associated with the Buckeye Film Exchange, in Cincinnati, Ohio, as assistant manager, later going to the Unicorn Film Exchange in that place. As previously noted in this column, this concern will handle "The Unborn," "Pavlowa" and "Where are My Children?" in this territory, and will add other pictures on the State rights proposition from time to time.

Back from Vacation Trips.

Tom Moore, owner of the Garden, Strand and Plaza theaters, on Ninth street, northwest, with Mrs. Moore, has just returned from an extensive automobile trip taken by them in their new Pierce-Arrow, which included stops all along the east coast and a run through the beautiful Bretton Woods. They have been absent from the city this time for about three weeks.

Charles Plunkett, manager of the Strand theater, has returned from a two weeks' vacation. During his absence from the theater, Mr. Plunkett made a series of automobile trips through Maryland and Virginia.

Full Program of Features.

Washington, D. C.—Richard Waldron has reopened the Princess theater, on H street, northeast, for its regular fall schedule. This contemplates an entire change in policy, for the price of admission will hereafter be ten cents for adults, with half price for children, and instead of the program previously used, big features will be the entertainment offered. Up to the present time, and through the heated season, the Princess theater has only been open two or three nights each week to permit of the conclusion of a serial.

Messrs. Crandall and Morgan are very busy changing things around a little at the Avenue, Grand and Apollo theaters in preparation for the fall business. Both houses are being made cozier by the addition of "cold weather" hanging, large framed photographs of motion picture stars, etc.

Buffalo Plans in Case of Strike

Local Exchangemen Arrange Ways of Getting Pictures to Exhibitors in Case of Railroad Tie-up—Automobiles Might Carry Film as Far East as Syracuse and Elmira—Exchanges Concerned.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The members of the Buffalo Screen Club are rejoieing that the nation-wide railroad strike has so far been averted. However, had the tie-up come they would have been prepared for the emergency. Plans to meet the expected crisis were made at a reeent meeting of the elub.

There are fourteen film exchanges in Buffalo and these supply upward of 800 theaters as far east as Albany and in the Southern tier as far as Binghamton. Manager W. A. V. Maek of the General Film was chosen ehairman of the committee of arrangements for the transportation of films by motor trueks, if neeessary, to the various theaters in this territory. Manager J. M. Sitterly of the Popular Film was deputized to secure the cars. Fortunately the calling off of the strike made the carrying out of these plans unneeessary. Automobiles were to have carried films to Roehester, Syraeuse, Jamestown and Elmira to supply the houses in these and surrounding plaees.

It is thought that the expense would have been $150 a day, but the exehange men were determined to take no ehance on disappointing the exhibitors, now that the fall rush is here. Among those who made these plans were W. A. V. Maek, General; D. J. Savage, Paramount; F. S. Hopkins, Universal; J. M. Sitterly, Popular; C. R. Rogers, Essanay; James K. Morgan, Pathe; J. R. Levy, World; F. J. Willis, Merit, and H. E. Hughes, Unicorn.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Lady Maekenzie Film Company, whieh has work rooms at 29 Franklin street, has also opened offices at 220-221 Chamber of Commerce. Buffalo will be the headquarters of the company and another office may be opened shortly in New York.

"We eonsider we have the greatest eollection of animal pictures in the world," said Lady Maekenzie. "We expeet they will be used by many sehools and eduеational soeieties as well as by exhibitors in all parts of the eountry.

"I am now editing the pictures and assembling them, so they will be ready to offer to the public," said Lady Mackenzie. "I have already gone through 80,000 feet of film. Before the European war I had four operators in British East Africa."

Some Happy Mutual Visitors.

Buffalo, N. Y.—E. O. Brooks and D. A. Poueher of the Mutual Film's home offiee in Chicago, reeently visited the Buffalo offiees of the eompany. They were aeeompanied by Mrs. Brooks and Mrs. Poueher. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks visited Niagara Falls, where their stay was brief but enjoyable. Mr. Poucher's marriage took place three days before his visit to this eity. G. H. Christoffers, manager of the local offiees of the Mutual, expressed regret that J. C. Graham, assistant to John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual, did not visit Buffalo on his way to Chicago.

Triangle Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. E. Willis, manager of the Triangle offices, Buffalo, reeently visited the company's New York headquarters. G. A. Woodward, traveling representative of the Triangle in this territory, has returned from a visit to the exhibitors of Northern New York. He says the business of theaters of that section has been hurt by the rigid quarantine.

"Children have not been allowed out of their own yards and when they couldn't go to the shows the grownups would stay away," said Mr. Woodward.

Mr. Woodward's experience as an exhibitor aids him on the road.

World Film Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The sales and offiee foree of the World Film have returned from their vaeations. Morrie Cohen is eovering the towns along the main line of the New York Central for the local office and John Child is visiting the "lower tier" exhibitors. Both are sending in some satisfaetory orders. J. R. Levy, manager, has returned with his family from their summer home at Crystal beach.

"Brady-made pieures are proving very popular," said Mr. Levy, "and prospects for fall business are very bright."

Other Business Jottings.

Depew, N. Y.—Robert B. Alberts of the Pastime moving pieture theater of Depew, N. Y., was a reeent ealler at the Triangle offiees, Buffalo. Mr. Alberts has the only theater in that village. During the hot weather he was not compelled to elose his house on aeeount of poor business. Aeeording to his new poliey he will specialize on features. The Pastime has a pipe organ, whieh is appreciated by its patrons.

A general conference of sales men of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company, distributors of the Paramount pietures in western New York, was held recently by Daniel J. Savage, manager of the Buffalo offices. Conditions of the film business in the territory were discussed. The new advertising plans outlined by Adolph Zukor at the recent Chieago convention were also fully considered.

Louis Guntrup of the Bijou theater, Salamanca, was a reeent visitor in Buffalo. He uses a transparent glass screen on his stage and his purpose here was to seeure a eireular traek on whieh he ean shift the screen to the side whenever he wants to elear the stage for vaudeville.

Charles R. Rogers of the Rogson Film Company, with offiees in the Chapin Block, Buffalo, is releasing Mutt and Jeff cartoons and will release Hans and Fritz eartoons in a few weeks. He is also releasing the B. S. Moss produetions, "Salamander," "One Day" and "The Heart of New York."

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.—Jake Wells, widely-known theatrieal magnate, spent several days in the city last week, having arrived from Eastern points to take definite steps toward opening the Bijou theater. Mr. Wells has not yet reached a final decision as to the exact opening date of the Bijou, and stated that he could not announee just at present whether he would run moving pictures exclusively, or pietures and vaudeville, but that he would be in a position to make formal announcement of the faet within a very short time. While in Knoxville Mr. Wells was in lengthy conferenee with Riehard B. Tant, of Augusta, who will assume the management of the new house. It is planned to make the Bijou one of the handsomest houses in the city, and the Knoxville public may be assured of high-class entertainment at all times under the Wells regime.

If Strike Had Come to Nashville

Exchange Laid in Stock of Films to Last a Week—Several Exhibitors Had Made Arrangements to Exchange Pictures.

NASHVILLE, TENN. — "Prepareaness" was the watehword of the Nashville exhibitors in the face of what appeared to be an impending railroad strike of large proportions. Carrying out this policy, one Fifth avenue amusement eompany took immediate steps to proteet the interests of the several houses under its eontrol, and placed in stock some fifty reels of film, or enough to maintain its programs for approximately one week. Another showman immediately laid plans to use his own automobile to a point intermediate to the nearest film exehange eenter, at which place the exchanges were preparing to deliver films by truck at regular intervals. While several of the theater men, especially in the outlying districts, claimed they had no further recourse than to close their houses should the erisis assume a serious aspeet, other suburban owners planned a system of eireulation whieh appeared to be the most logieal solution of a momentous problem. For instanee, had a general paralysis of transportation facilities of the country beeome a reality, with no possibility of railroad delivery, these exhibitors proposed to exehange films among themselves, forwarding the reels from each house to other houses in distant parts of the city. This plan would have worked to advantage, so far as temporary relief was eoneerned.

Hippodrome Opens September 16.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Hippodrome, operated by the Crescent Amusement Co., will open its season on September 16, and indieations point to the most prosperous year of its existenee. During the past seasons it has been the custom of the management to bring to the handsome Winter Garden prominent photoplay stars from the leading companies, and this will probably be eontinued during the eoming winter. Bryant Washburn of the Es-sanay Company was in the city on one occasion, at which time a reception was given on the Hippodrome floor. A recent Essanay release was put on in which Mr. Washburn was featured, and the audience greatly enjoyed seeing the famous actor simultaneously in real and screen life. John H. Murkin, who succeeded Billy Bordeiser last season, has been retained as manager of the Hippodrome.

Knoxville Advocates the "Kick-Box."

Knoxville, Tenn.—With a view looking to the betterment of the service, certain of the houses here are preparing to revise the custom of placing "kick-boxes" in the lobbies. These boxes are for the benefit of the patrons, and complaints, criticisms and suggestions are received from the general public by the management through this means. The system has formerly been found to be of much assistance to the theater managers, as such things as drafts, blinding lights, indifferent usher service, etc., are brought to their attention which would otherwise go unnoticed, but which at times become so objectionable that patronage is inadvertently lost.

Tennessee Topics.

Memphis.—The Strand theater, the finest suburban house in the city, has been closed.

Memphis.—A meeting of the Associated Film Exchange Managers has just been held, at which time important business was discussed.

Nashville.—William Wassman has returned to the city again after a recent business trip.

Asks Tax Concession.

Bangor, Me.—P. J. Feeney, of Bangor, owner of the lot on Main street, formerly the site of the old Opera House, burned in January, 1914, has offered to build an opera house in Bangor that will seat 1,700 people if the city will place a nominal valuation for ten years on the Opera House property. This offer is to be accepted within a reasonable length of time. Mr. Feeney says that he paid $20,000 for the lot and that the present valuation of $29,000 is too high. The Bangor city government has the proposition under advisement.

Some Cleveland Houses Sign

Arbitration Thrown Out and Question of Whether Increase in Wages Shall Be Granted Is Now Up to the Individual Exhibitor—No Strike as Yet—Operators Consider That They Have Won a Victory.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND, O.—A deadlock in wage negotiations between moving picture machine operators and Cleveland exhibitors has been followed by a break, and further negotiations are now up to individual exhibitors.

Following a demand of the operators for a wage increase of $3.50 a week to $20.50 as a minimum, a special committee of the Cleveland Exhibitors' League undertook to adjust the differences. After both sides discussed the demands in joint and individual sessions, the exhibitors demanded arbitration.

According to a report of the exhibitors' special committee, headed by Ernest Schwartz, the operators have not only declined to arbitrate, but are now ignoring the organization and endeavoring to treat with the exhibitors as individuals. As a result, a number of houses have already signed the new scale, granting the increase.

Members of the special committee which conducted the negotiations up to the time of the break, besides Chairman Schwartz, were: Samuel Bullock, W. J. Slimm, S. F. Deutsch, William Miller, Samuel Aubrey, John Sliney and Henry Lustig.

Following this committee's report at the meeting of the league on September 5, Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the league, told the members that it was now up to them as individuals to treat with the operators. He recommended that they pay the wage increase demanded rather than permit a boycott on their houses, but urged them to meet the increase without making any contract in writing.

The league members have also determined to compel the operators to hew to the line in the future in the matter of the time for reporting for work and quitting, and have announced their intention of discharging any operator who violates any rules about the theaters.

The operators regard the recent turn of events as a victory for them, and predict that every house will sign the new scale.

Thus far the operators have not carried out their threat to call a strike and no instances of shows being closed for lack of an operator have been reported.

Many members of the league have announced their intention to operate their own machines in the future.

Pictures at Art Museum.

Cleveland, O.—Directors of the new Cleveland Art Museum are negotiating with George Kleine for the showing in the museum of a number of big historical and educational features. This is in line with the policy of the museum directors announced several months ago, when it was declared that moving pictures were to be a permanent feature of the municipal institution. The pictures will be presented free to the public, but are particularly intended to aid school children in their studies.

Pictures which the museum directors are seeking now are "Antony and Cleopatra," eight reels, "Sparticus," seven reels; "Othello," six reels, "The Merchant of Venice," six reels; "Julius Caesar," nine reels, and "The Last Days of Pompeii," seven reels. Lectures by authorities of national reputation are to accompany the showing of the moving pictures, according to the plans of the museum directors.

F. E. Johnson Opens the Manhattan.

Cleveland, O.—The Manhattan moving picture theater, Superior avenue and E. 105th street, closed since early in the summer, was reopened this week under the management of F. E. Johnson, formerly manager of the New Y theater. The house has been thoroughly renovated and is splendidly equipped. Paramount pictures are to be shown.

Checks for Babies at the Reel.

Cleveland, O.—J. E. Sliney, manager of the Reel theater, on E. Ninth street, in the heart of the shopping district, has inaugurated a "check your babies" plan which is proving popular with women shoppers.

Mr. Sliney has equipped a modern nursery in connection with the theater where women may leave their children while shopping. The children in charge of a trained nurse may either play or watch the pictures from boxes. The Reel is making a special effort to show pictures of interest to children. The mothers are permitted to leave the children at the theater as long as they desire.

H. B. Day Comes to Local Fox.

Cleveland, O.—Harvey B. Day, formerly manager of the Fox exchange in Montreal, has just come to Cleveland to succeed Joseph Williams as manager of the Fox branch here. Mr. Williams returns to newspaper work. Paul Mooney, district manager, announced that during the six months Mr. Williams was in charge of the office a big increase in business was shown.

Other Fox changes are the installation of C. G. Kingsley, of Detroit, as manager of the Cincinnati office, and the promotion of N. D. Thompson, former booker in the Detroit office, to the position of manager.

A. M. Muller, former Cincinnati manager, has resigned to go with the Clara Kimball Young Corporation.

A Theater in a Health Resort Town

Dawson Springs, Ky., Exhibitor Successfully Faces the Problem of Making a Go in a Small Village with a Floating Population—Changes Daily and Sees to It that Every Patron in Town Knows What the Bill Is.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—An excellent example of common sense management of moving picture theaters in small towns is shown at Dawson Springs, Ky., a town of about 1,500 inhabitants, but with a good floating population, due to excellent springs and a health resort. Due to the mild climate, there is a fairly good proportion of visitors at Dawson the year around, and two theaters are thriving.

The Auditorium, a brick house, seating about 750 people, is a square from the big hotel, but in order to overcome this handicap the management circularizes the entire town and the hotels daily with handbills, and the program is changed daily, something unusual for a small place. However, visitors at Dawson are generally looking for amusement, and want good amusement. The theater is showing World, V-L-S-E and other high class feature material, and also a few good comedies. With the daily announcements of change in program the house has been playing to capacity crowds all summer.

The Kentucky theater, while smaller, is located directly opposite the entrance to the hotel; in fact, about the best location that could be wished. This theater is playing the Paramount program, and is also packing them in. Dawson is now considered one of the best of the small picture show towns.

Buys State Rights for New Features.

Louisville, Ky.—Col. Fred Levy, president of the Big Features Rights Corporation, of this city, has returned from the East, and announces that the company has secured state rights for "Maciste," in Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee. This company has had state rights for some time in West Virginia, Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee on the feature "The Little Girl Next Door," but now announces rights on six additional states, namely: Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Alabama. The company booked this picture last week at Wheeling, W. Va., where it made such a hit that it has already been ordered for a return engagement.

Putting Ban on Carnival Shows.

Louisville, Ky.—That the moving picture theaters of Kentucky will have less opposition from traveling carnival shows in the future seems to be assured. Not less than eight towns in the state have passed ordinances during the past few months in which the ban has been placed on such shows. One of the most recent recruits to the band wagon was the city of Newport, Ky.

Children's Shows in Jeffersonville.

Louisville, Ky.—President M. Switow, of the Switow Amusement Co., of Louisville, has been working with the women's clubs of Jeffersonville to show pictures for children at the Dream theater. The club has asked that motion pictures that will appeal to children be shown at the theater, and that they be censored by a committee representing the club. The women take the position that pictures now being shown are designed for grown-ups, and in many instances are injurious to younger minds.

The Cosy Theater Opens.

Winchester, Ky.—The Queen theater, formerly operated by the Irvine Amusement Co., but which was recently closed by that concern, has reopened as "The Cosy," under a new organization headed by leading business men, including M. D. Royse, D. S. Haggard, C. H. Bowen, Matt Bean, J. F. Winn, Dr. W. A. Bush, J. E. Grubbs, A. G. Lockname and J. N. Renaker. F. A. Ogden, former manager of the house under the old company, has been given the active management.

But One Show Now in Glasgow.

Glasgow, Ky.—Glasgow now enjoys but one moving picture theater, the management of which is greatly pleased with the outlook since the Lion and the Dixie withdrew from the field. The new house will operate as the Trigg Theater Co., with Bruce Aspley at the helm.

New Shows and Changes.

Paris, Ky.—It is rumored that Harry Mitchell will shortly open the Columbia theater as a picture show house.

Slaughters, Ky.—W. B. Pettus has opened a picture show which has a very promising outlook confronting it.

Murray, Ky.—The Dixie Theater Co., of Paris, Ky., has finally completed and opened the Woodruff Opera House, of this city, as a picture theater.

Midway, Ky.—A new moving picture theater has been opened here by the Midway Amusement Co.

Pleasure Ridge Park, Ky.—H. G. Jones is offering for sale the Pleasure Ridge theater, including electrical and other equipment, and the chairs. The house seats 250 people.

Business Notes.

Louisville, Ky.—Percy L. Smith, manager of the local Mutual office, recently returned from a good road trip out through the state, taking in Bardstown, Shelbyville, Lagrange, Campbellsville and Carrollton. He made heavy bookings on "The Secret of the Submarine," and stated that he found most of the rural exhibitors optimistic.

Owensboro, Ky.—The Kentucky Electric Co., of this city, has received nearly all of the specially designed machinery for manufacturing its new auto arc machines, which will be used in connection with moving picture machines. Some of the local exhibitors are interested in the manufacture of this new machine, which gives promise of being a big thing.

Consider School Film Programs as Failures

Hamilton County, Ohio, Teachers' Institute Hears That Their Educational Programs Have Failed to Hold the Children.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CINCINNATI, O.—A lament which is not without its humorous side, which is by no means a real "knock" at the educational value of pictures, and which should be of some comfort to exhibitors who have worried about the influence on their business of free pictures in schools and elsewhere, has been voiced by teachers in attendance upon the Hamilton County Teachers' Institute. It was declared by the teachers that the experiment of showing so-called "educational" and "instructive" pictures in the schools was a failure, because it proved impossible to hold the children in competition with the regular moving picture houses. Lack of interest in the programs shown was admitted, and the fact that the children prefer pictures with a flavoring of story and adventure pointed out. The teachers thus in effect confessed their inability to prepare interesting programs which are at the same time educational, and as many exhibitors have shown themselves able to do this satisfactorily in preparing children's programs, it seems that the exhibitor who knows his business has little to fear from the average free school program.

MEETS UNION DEMAND.

Youngstown Theaters Give 15 Per Cent. Salary Raise.

Youngstown, O.—Most of the "Class A" theaters of the city, after mature consideration, have met the demands of moving picture operators for an increase in wages equivalent to about 15 per cent. as compared with last year's scale, and have signed an agreement accordingly. Other exhibitors will probably take similar action, and the threatened strike, which was never seriously anticipated, will not occur, as all parties concerned have at all times evinced a desire to settle amicably the wage question.

Veritas Film Not Bankrupt.

Cincinnati, O.—On the application of President Andreas E. Burkhardt, of the Veritas Film Co., and other officers of the company, to the United States District Court, the bankruptcy proceedings which has been filed on behalf of the company have been dismissed. President Burkhardt showed to the court that arrangements had been made to take care of the company's obligations, and all of the creditors except one filed their consent to the dismissal of the proceedings, a bond being made to take care of the exception. The company intends to continue the preparations which were under way for the production of feature films, and no reorganization will be necessary, as the people interested are amply able to take care of the work and the financial arrangements involved.

Notes of Interest Hereabout.

Cincinnati, O.—On the urgent application of many exhibitors, who made fruitful suggestions regarding ways and means of handling business in the event of a railroad strike, Cincinnati film exchanges supplying a wide territory, made arrangements to get films to exhibitors throughout Ohio, southern Indiana and eastern Kentucky by means of interurban cars, special messengers and automobiles, so that the theaters would be able to operate as usual. However, the measures contemplated were fortunately unnecessary when the strike was called off, and the film men and exhibitors were deprived of the dubious pleasure of seeing how well their plans would have worked.

Cincinnati, O.—The big eight-reel Vitagraph film production of James Oliver Curwood's novel of the North, "God's Country and the Woman," filled a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House beginning September 3, with considerable success, giving the theater one of the best pictures of its season in the moving picture end of the drama, now about to give way to the usual winter season of the spoken drama. The management continued the high prices which it found people would pay for a big production during the several engagements of "Where Are My Children?" and therefore charged 25 cents for the lower floor and 15 cents for the balcony.

Cincinnati, O.—Following a very hot, very trying and withal very successful summer, Manager Charles Weigel, of the Alhambra theater, took a vacation during the latter part of August, spending several weeks on the Great Lakes and at various resorts in that section of the country. He has returned to Cincinnati much refreshed by his rest.

Traveling Picture Show in Difficulty.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—Jones Brothers Railroad Moving Picture Shows, which started out to tour the middle west, have been switched into the courts.

As a result of a petition in exparte proceedings filed in the Sangamon county circuit court here, Judge Norman L. Jones appointed as receiver for the affairs of the shows William E. Fain, an attorney of this city. The petition which alleged that the picture concern was indebted to a number of business houses, and asked that the courts untangle the financial affairs, was signed by Jones Brothers, O. C. St. Clair, Edward F. Hartman, a local printer, and the Capitol Engraving Company.

The Jones brothers who have made several ventures in the amusement field purchased a Pullman, remodeled it into a traveling moving picture theater, and after purchasing several thousand feet of film began a trip through Illinois.

Referendum Election Opens Picture Theaters for the People—Manager Blair McElroy's Compelling Statement Helped.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

TRAVERSE CITY, MICH.—Sunday picture shows won at an election here, the voters showing 993 to 780 that they wanted them. The fight was spirited.

In the course of the campaign Blair McElroy of the Lyric theater made the following compelling statement: "We feel that there will be no injury to society, no step of retrogression and no harm to the man in his automobile, on the tennis court, in his country home or on the yacht, if he assists or allows the less fortunate man and his family to enjoy themselves on the same day."

A Beautiful Stage Set.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—A Venetian scene is the new stage setting for the pictures at the Majestic Gardens. Mountains at the rear have been replaced by a reproduction of a canal in Venice and at the beginning of each show the leader of the woman's orchestra will glide onto the stage in a gondola. Cages of singing canaries and climbing vines also play important parts in Manager Kline's new efforts to enchant his patrons.

Advertised Film Failed, So Free Show.

Menominee, Mich.—"Step right inside, folks. Don't stop at the box office. This show is free tonight. We are showing pictures other than the ones advertised." This greeting to would-be patrons of the Grand theater on a night when a much-advertised feature failed to arrive explains the kindly feeling towards Manager Campbell's house.

Two Women Start Picture Theater.

Greenville, Mich.—Two more young women have joined the ranks of Michigan exhibitors. The Misses Edna and Hazel Allen of Holland have opened a show here. The former runs the box office and Miss Hazel, who was pianist at the Apollo theater in Holland, has charge of the musical program.

Dies From Motor Car Accident.

Owosso, Mich.—Fred. Brown, 40 years old, one of the first exhibitors in Owosso, is dead as the result of an auto accident. The car in which he was riding was forced from the road by the undimmed lights of another machine and went over an embankment into the Huron river. Brown was pinned under the heavy car in three feet of water for ten minutes. The widow and two children survive.

The Aladdin Reopens.

Bay City, Mich.—Redecorated, enlarged and newly equipped throughout, the Aladdin theater, Bay City, reopened on September 1. A feature of the Aladdin will be symphony concerts every Thursday evening, with no extra charge. L. R. Simpson, manager, is another of the live-wire exhibitors who belongs to the metropolitan type—always doing something new and original, always on the lookout for novel and unusual stunts. In this connection we want to make a personal comment about Mr. Simpson: he has just become the father of a baby boy. Now the "old man" will have an incentive to work harder than ever.

Galster-Parish Wedding.

Petosky, Mich.—Charles Galster, manager of the Palace theater, and Miss Roxie Parish were married here.

Michigan Notes Worth a Glance.

Owosso, Mich.—When Owosso exhibitors decided to join the other business men of the city and closed up for the Thursday half holiday, there was a general protest. Many of the clerks wanted to take advantage of the lay-off and visit the photoplay houses. The Strand theater decided to stay open in view of this fact, but Manager Tubbs of the Colonial, said he believed his employees were entitled to the only rest of the week.

Utica, Mich.—Two films intended for exhibition at the Progress theater were stolen some time during the day. Manager Robert Kepsel had to call off his show for the night.

Muskegon, Mich.—The Regent theater had the showing of "A Romance of Muskegon," which was made for the Chamber of Commerce by the S. & S. Feature Film Company.

Owosso, Mich.—T. J. Tubbs, who has sold the Princess theater at Ovid, will continue to operate the Colonial theater here.

Ovid, Mich.—T. J. Tubbs has sold the Princess theater here to Harold S. Beardslee, bookkeeper at the St. John's National Bank, of this city.

Jackson, Mich.—A new pipe organ is one of the new features of the new Rex theater, which house emerges from the consolidation of the Rex and Kuhl theaters. Manager C. A. Kuhl will present to his patrons a number of the important features which were released while his houses were undergoing the changes. In order to do this, he will change programs three times a week for a while.

Bay City, Mich.—The Star theater, which was closed three weeks following a fire in the operating room, has been reopened

TO EXHIBITORS.

If you are doing something new and interesting at your theatre let our correspondent know about it. It may help others and help you as well.

Helpfully yours,

The chain of Butterfield vaudeville and motion picture houses throughout Michigan is again in full operation.

Harry I. Garson, of the Harry I. Garson Productions, Inc., distributors for Clara Kimball Young productions, has returned from a ten-day trip to the Upper Peninsula of Michigan. In every town Mr. Garson landed contracts for his productions. He said he was treated a great deal better than he had looked for. J. O. Kent, manager of the Detroit exchange, has also been making a number of short trips recently through the state with good success. The exchange at 318 Woodward avenue will be ready in September.

Bay City, Mich.—Appropriate paintings of Washington crossing the Delaware and his home at Mt. Vernon grace the lobby of the remodeled Washington Strand theatre. The sum of $10,000 expended in refitting was distributed over the lighting, carpeting and decorating so that the house is practically new. A pipe organ has been installed. A playing fountain surrounded by palms and ferns is a part of the screen setting.

Marshall, Mich.—The Interstate Film company of Chicago made for the Garden theatre a home talent photoplay, "Marshall Adops a Baby."

Coldwater, Mich.—Bert Deardoff of Bryan, O., has purchased the Venetin theater from Dennis Vanes.

Detroit's Sanitation Ordinance

Full Hearing on Proposed Code Put Off—Exhibitors Concerned Asked to Look Over Requirements in Preparation—Temperature of Auditoriums—Minimum Floor Area and Air Space Called For.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—There was a large delegation of exhibitors at the City Hall on Tuesday morning, September 5th, to discuss the recently introduced ordinance relative to the heating and sanitation of play houses, which was fostered by the Detroit Board of Health. As members of the Ordinance Committee were out of the city, the full hearing was put off until a later date. Meanwhile, exhibitors are kindly asked to look the ordinance over thoroughly and pick out those sections to which they are opposed, so as to be ready to present their views when the full hearing does come.

The ordinance, as introduced, is very technical, and one that few exhibitors, if any, wholly understand. It refers in many places to the number of cubic feet per person—and exhibitors would like to know how to determine the number of cubic feet to each person. Some people are large, some are small; and then, what about boys and girls? The ordinance is in three sections—Heating, ventilation and sanitation.

Heating and Ventilation.

The "Heating" section requires that auditoriums during occupancy shall have a temperature at all times throughout the occupied space within the range of 60 degrees F. to 70 degrees F., except when the outside temperature is so high that artificial heating in the building is not required. Under "Ventilation" the ordinance says: "In public buildings hereafter erected, a minimum of four square feet of floor area as a seating space per occupancy, exclusive of aisles and public passageways, shall be provided in the auditorium. In buildings hereafter erected a minimum of ninety cubic feet of air space per occupant, shall be provided. A positive supply of outdoor air shall be provided at all times while the place is open to the public, and the quantity of this positive supply of outside air shall be based upon a minimum requirement of 1,200 cubic feet per occupant per hour. Enclosures or booths for a moving picture machine shall be provided, with exhaust ventilation having a capacity sufficient to remove at all times not less than sixty cubic feet of air per minute for a one-machine booth and thirty cubic feet per minute for each additional machine.

Sanitation.

Under "Sanitation" the ordinance says: "Protection against dampness. Every building hereafter erected shall have a basement, cellar or excavated space under the entire entrance floor at least three feet in depth, or if built directly on the ground, shall be provided with a concrete floor of six inches in thickness, properly sub-drained and water-proofed. Every building shall have a sufficient quantity of pure drinking water, and common drinking cups are prohibited. Individual drinking cups shall be provided, or sanitary drinking fountains shall be installed.". The ordinance gives the right to the Board of Health to enforce the provisions of these orders and regulations.

There are many good features about the ordinance, and exhibitors are in accord with the spirit of the ordinance, but they want it explained how to figure cubic feet per person, and other technical expressions used in the wording of the ordinance. Exhibitors should keep an eye on the proceedings of the Common Council for the next date of hearing.

New Detroit Theaters to Open.

Detroit, Mich.—From the office of C. Howard Crane, theater architect, in the Dime Bank building, we learn that contracts have been let for the new Colonial theater, Woodward and Sibley streets, which will play a combination of vaudeville and pictures, opening about the first of February. The Rialto theater, Gratiot and Mt. Elliott avenues, which will be amphitheater style, will open around the first of December. Contracts have been let for the new theater on Grand Circus Park, which will be leased to Gillingham & Harris. Permission has been granted the owner to tunnel the alley, as the entrance will be on Adams avenue west, while the auditorium will be on Elizabeth street. This house will seat at least 1,700. It will have a main floor, mezzanine and balcony. The building contract was awarded to the Frank Farrington Company, of Detroit, who promise to have the work completed by February 1st. Mr. Crane says the New Madison theater, also facing Grand Circus Park, will be ready around the first of December. He is architect for the new Iris theater on the East Grand Boulevard; the new Catherine theater, at Catherine and Chene streets, for Thomas Lynch, and a new theater for Paul Schlossman, of Muskegon, Mich.

D. J. Robson to Manage the Duplex.

Detroit, Mich.—The Duplex theater, East Grand boulevard near Woodward avenue, has been leased for a period of ten years to Fuller Claflin. Mr. Claflin announces the appointment of D. J. Robson as manager, who assumed his new duties on Monday, August 28.

Standard Film Service, Inc.

Detroit, Mich.—An exchange that has come right to the front in the past eight months is that of the Standard Film Service, Inc., located on the tenth floor of the Peter Smith building, Detroit. This exchange is managed by Jesse O. Fishman, who is also vice-president of the coroporation. Mr. Fishman originally came from Toledo, O., but drifted to the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, from where he graduated about four years ago. He then went to Cleveland and became associated with Harry Charnas in the local handling of Warners Features. This business finally became the nucleus of the Standard Film Company, headquarters being continued at Clevealnd. Mr. Fishman came to Detroit nearly two years ago and established a local office and then did special work through Michigan and Ohio. Last December another branch office was opened in Cincinnati. Mr. Fishman returned to Detroit in February of 1916, taking complete charge of local affairs, and has remained here ever since. While a good trade is reported on all releases, the Standard is fortunate in having three things which are in great demand—Mutt and Jeff comedy cartoons, the Jungle pictures, and the new serial, "The Yellow Menace." Mr. Fishman contends that the success of an exchange depends entirely upon one thing—the right kind of pictures—and that's why the Standard exchanges are proving successful.

J. O. Fishman.

Kunsky Prefers Federal to Other Censorship

Detroit Picture Theater Owner Talks About Petty Minds in Places of Power Over Great Film Productions.

DETROIT, MICH.—On the subject of "Censorship," John H. Kunsky, who controls eight leading theaters in Detroit, has to say: "I am opposed to a local censorship of motion pictures, just as any American citizen would be opposed to a local censorship of newspapers, books or magazines. The public morals are always protected by law. If the motion picture industry requires a stronger control, let new laws be made; but this constant interference with a big business by one or two small-brained reformers only ruins a great many beautiful productions and gets us nowhere in the end. In a former article, I favored a police or Federal censorship of motion pictures, as I felt, and still feel, that such a censorship might put a stop to the activities of the so-called reformers and bring about a more sane regulation of the motion picture industry, if such a thing be deemed necessary; and I would further a Federal censorship bill for that reason; but on principle, and in all fairness, I feel that such a bill should include not only motion picture productions, but all forms of literature, including the daily newspapers, magazines and books."

A Labor Day Sporting Event.

Detroit, Mich.—A trainload of motion picture men from Michigan went to Cedar Point, Ohio, over Labor Day to see the Kilbane - Chaney fight. Among the crowd were John H. Kunsky, George Weeks, M. S. Bailey, J. O. Brookes, Samuel Dembow, Jr., Paul Mooney, George Chenet and Bert Graham.

Local Drawing Power of Stars.

Detroit, Mich.—Statistics recently compiled by the Detroit correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD show the following screen stars to be most popular with exhibitors, from the standpoint of being able to draw patronage: Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Francis X. Bushman, William Farnum, Theda Bara, Charlie Chaplin, Clara Kimball Young, Douglas Fairbanks and W. S. Hart. There are dozens of other good drawing cards, but we list the above as hitting the highest average.

Dow Thompson Heads Local Fox.

Detroit, Mich.—Dow Thompson has been appointed manager of the Detroit exchange of the Fox Film Corporation, succeeding Neil Kingsley, who has been transferred to Cincinnati, where he succeeds A. M. Muller. Neil was sorry to leave Detroit and we are sorry to see Neil leave. (Don't forget to drop a line occasionally.)

New Quarters of Mutual Film Corporation of Canada, Calgary, Alberta.

I. H. Garson Publicity Man.

Detroit, Mich.—I. H. Garson, father of Harry I. Garson, general manager of the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, of which he has been doing the publicity and advertising for the past 18 months, has made a new connection—manager of publicity for the new Clara Kimball Young productions in Michigan. He will continue at the Broadway - Strand as heretofore. Mr. Garson should prove a valuable asset to the distributors of the Clara Kimball Young productions in this state, as he has conceived many novel and original advertising and publicity ideas during his connection with the Broadway-Strand.

I. H. Garson.

Grand Circus Under New Management.

Detroit, Mich.—The Grand Circus theater, 301 Woodward avenue, which was recently declared bankrupt and which was closed for a few days, has reopened under new ownership and new management. The Woodward Theater Company are the new owners. They already operate the Rosebud, La Salle, Woodward and Pallister theaters in Detroit. The Grand Circus makes their fifth house. The policy of the New Grand Circus will be daily change, standard features, with an admission scale of ten cents for the parquet and five cents for the balcony at matinees.

Letter from Quebec Province

By Lane McLean, 7 Phillips Square, Montreal, Que.

Montreal Visited by Screen Artists.

THREE of the most celebrated players from the Vitagraph Studios appeared last week in person on the stage of the Imperial theater. The popular Montreal actor, Huntley Gordon, who was last seen in this city in "The Conflict"; Lucille Lee Stewart, the leading lady in many productions of these studios and the sister of Anita Stewart, and also the impersonator of Abraham Lincoln and photoplay director, Ralph W. Ince, were here. The appearance of these artists attracted large crowds, the Imperial theater making no change in its customary prices.

Mr. West Heads Local Lair.

M. West, one of Canada's most popular film salesmen, who has been connected with the Fox people for some time, has been appointed manager of the Montreal branch of the Fox Film Corporation.

"In Self Defense" Seen Here.

Montreal, Que.—At a private screening held in Montreal for the benefit of a few invited visitors and exhibitors, the United Films Limited of Galt, Ontario, screened on Sunday afternoon their ten-reel patriotic subject, "Self Defense." This is a war picture pure and simple, and let it be said to the credit of the United Films that the production is a wonderful success with a well developed plot enfolded in a striking theme which might easily be likened to a "call to arms." The picture was produced entirely in Canada and will doubtless receive a hearty welcome throughout the entire Dominion.

One might conjecture that this chance of showing the new recruits what trench conditions are would be highly prized by training officers.

Mare Goes Under Pay-in-Advance

Toronto Exchanges Flooded with Realms Legal Tender for This Week's Shows, the Province's 350-Odd Theaters Had the Money Ready—Not a House Closed and Not a Reel Shown That Is Unpaid for.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E., Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO.—The pay-in-advance policy of the dozen film exchanges of Toronto went into effect on Monday, September 4th, as scheduled, and the money literally flowed into the offices from all parts of the Province. According to reports given out to the Toronto representative of MOVING PICTURE WORLD, every exhibitor in Ontario paid up all exchange accounts to the night of September 2nd and then started out the following Monday with films for which the rental had been paid in advance. The result was that every exchange office looked like the teller's wicket of a national bank.

The system adopted by the local exchange managers was so strict that, in a few cases, films were shipped C. O. D. to exhibtors, although the latter had sent checks for the consignments. According to the instructions sent out from all exchanges, these checks should have been marked by the bank before they had been offered in payment of the reels. The unmarked checks were returned to the exhibitors and the films were sent by the C. O. D. route to insure cash payment in advance.

Despite the threat of several managers that they would close their houses rather than submit to the new conditions, every one of the 350-odd theatres in Ontario remained open after September 4th and every reel screened on that date did not have an unpaid charge against it. Incidentally, every exchange in Toronto lived up to its agreement. Another feature of the situation was that not one exhibitor cut down the size of his show because of the new cash-basis system.

What a Few Feet of Film Did.

Parry Sound, Ont.—A few hundred feet of film set the Northern Ontario town of Parry Sound into an uproar recently. The greatest event of the whole year for this center is the Firemen's Tournament, and for a little stunt, Messrs. Gregory & Rice, owners of the Royal theater, brought a Strand Weekly cameraman from Toronto to film views of the annual celebration. Everybody crowded into the pictures and, on succeeding nights, the local theater was not large enough to hold the throngs of people who wanted to see themselves as others see them. The North Star, Parry Sound's newspaper, made the comment that "every person presented a real life-like appearance." These were the first pictures taken in Parry Sound.

New Firm to Exploit "In Self Defense."

Toronto, Ont.—A syndicate at Galt, Ontario, has been incorporated under the title of the United Films, Limited, with a capitalization of $49,000 for the purpose of exploiting the nine-reel feature, "In Self-Defence," which was made with the co-operation of the Canadian Government.

Hippodrome Reopens as Rialto.

Toronto, Ont.—The owners of the Globe theater, Queen street west, Toronto, have leased the Hippodrome building at Yonge and Shuter streets for the opening of a second photoplay theater to be known as the Rialto. A pipe organ has been installed and various other appurtenances to provide comfortable entertainment have been adopted. Pictures will be projected through two new Power's Cameragraphs, while the screen will be of the gold fibre type. A new ventilating system has also been constructed. There is seating accommodation for 750. The opening date has been fixed for Monday, September 11th, when the program will consist of Pathe and Fox subjects. The policy of the management will be to buy on the open market, it has been announced.

The Globe theater, which is the first amusement house to be operated by the Globe Securities, Limited, was opened about six months ago and its success has been admittedly great, in spite of the fact that it does not seat more than five hundred. Manager Cohen will have supervisory control of the Rialto, although a separate manager will be selected for the new house.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Two Interesting Camp Theaters.

Toronto, Ont.—There are two moving picture theatres at Camp Borden, Ontario, where thousands of Canadian soldiers are entertained nightly by the projection of the latest photoplays. The building is the Strand theater, with actual seating capacity for 2,200, owned by the Metropolitan Theatre Company, Limited, of which R. S. Marvin, Toronto, is general manager. The black tent theater is known as the Kitchener, and is owned by Stanley Adams, Toronto. This has accommodation for about 700.

Strand Theater.

The attractions at the Strand consist of multiple-reel features. The Universal program is used at the Kitchener theater.

The Strand is a permanent wooden structure and will be used in future years at the camp. It is frequently used for military lectures when staff officers address 600 to 800 battalion officers.

The Kitchener Theater.

The shows at Camp Borden include from seven to thirteen reels, and the soldiers frequently see themselves on the screen when a view of the camp is projected.

Montreal, Que.—Mr. Mitchell Bernstein, film salesman for the Famous Players Film Service in Toronto, was a welcome visitor in Montreal during the past week.

Celluloid Films by Parcels Post?

Exhibitors, Exchangemen and General Business Interests in the South Discuss a Campaign to Break Down Post Office Barrier and Have Uncle Sam Carry Picture Films—Is Result of Fear of Trainmen's Strike.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—The threatened railroad strike caused the Atlanta exchange men much anxiety during the past week; it would have meant a famine to the exhibitors in towns over the south. With an embargo put on by the express company, the exchange men turned to automobiles as a last resort, but gasoline would, within a very short while, have been out of the question.

Fearful of a cessation of express handling incident to the proposed strike, and confident of Uncle Sam's ability to keep mail matter moving, a delegation of local film men called upon the Atlanta postmaster Thursday and inquired if it were not possible, by some means, to have the mails opened to the celluloid film.

"They really should not be classed as combustibles," argued the men, "because they won't burn unless set fire to." Postmaster Jones was unyielding, however, and the exchange men declared they shall appeal to Washington for a new ruling of the clause under which films are now kept from being sent by mail. Films, being composed of celluloid, are classed by the postal authorities as "inflammables," and consequently are taboo at the mailing window. So they are shipped by express exclusively.

Business men throughout the state have notified moving picture exchange officials that they will use their influence to get special orders from the department to send films through the mail in case of a strike. Governor Trammell, of Florida, has taken the matter up for the Florida film exchanges, it is stated. Local motion picture film companies Saturday reported the receipt of telegrams from men in similar business in all sections of the southeast pledging cooperation in the movement started here looking to a departmental special order permitting the transporting of films through the mail.

New Exchange Building Ready.

Atlanta, Ga.—The new Exchange Building, being built on Walton and Bartow streets especially for the film exchanges, is nearing completion, and it is expected the film exchanges will be moving in by September 15. The building is absolutely fireproof, three stories in height, and modern in every respect. This building is located a very short distance from the new Southern Express building. The Postal Telegraph Cable Co. have leased space in the building for a branch office, and will also install their new long distance telephone service to each exchange office. Eleven different exchanges have leased quarters in the building.

D. A. R. Chapter Starts Children's Matinee in Cordele.

Cordele, Ga.—Fort Early Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution of Cordele, Ga., has secured children's productions in moving pictures for Cordele and each Saturday morning, beginning the first Saturday in October, a Saturday morning matinee for the children will be given at the moving picture theater under the auspices of Fort Early Chapter. The pictures will be selected by a committee from the chapter a week in advance. On Friday afternoon the story will be told throughout the grammar and primary grades of the city schools and on Saturday morning the children will see it on the screen.

C. W. Swain Managing Local V-L-S-E.

Atlanta, Ga.—C. W. Swain has been made manager of the V-L-S-E exchange in Atlanta.

Mr. Swain has been in charge of the Minneapolis exchange ever since the inception of the V-L-S-E. He has an engaging personality, and he possesses the faculty for getting in intimate touch with an exhibitor's necessities, so serving him to the best advantage.

Dan Webster With United.

Dan Webster, well known as advertising man of the Atlanta theater for many years, has joined the United Program Film Service, and is on the road with "The Yellow Menace." Webster is very capable and has thousands of friends over the south.

Items of Local Interest.

Atlanta, Ga.—"The Yellow Menace," first episode, began Monday at the Alpha theater on Whitehall street. It promises to be largely attended, if the first day is prophetic.

Atlanta, Ga.—"Liberty," the twenty chapter serial which has been planned to capitalize the martial spirit now sweeping over the country, began its first episode Monday at the Savoy theater. The management gave a free coupon for the evening showing. All during the day immense crowds filled the theater.

Atlanta, Ga.—Announcement has been made that W. T. Murray has sold his interest in the Alamo No. 2 to A. Samuels, who now controls the theater. Mr. Murray will retain his interest, however, in the Criterion theater.

New Theater in Las Vegas, N. M.

Las Vegas, N. M.—The new theater being built for the Las Vegas Amusement Company will probably be ready and opened by September 15. Manager Brown has a stage big enough for road shows, but it is his intention to devote the new house exclusively to the showing of motion pictures.

The theater will be called the Coronado and will be of the best New Mexico can show. The front will be of terra cotta and will have a beautiful high arched entrance flanked by massive pillars. The lobby is to be spacious, cool and decorated with markedly pleasing effects. Both the cooling system for summer and the heating system for the cold months are of the best that could be obtained. In warm weather a powerful electric fan forces outside air over an air-washer and frees it from dust and dirt and cools it. It will be possible to keep the temperature of the inside air 20 degrees cooler than that outside. In cold weather the heater provides fresh air warmed so that no matter what the weather is the interior will be kept always comfortable.

From outside the house will be imposing with classic lines and with its facade like a Roman arch of triumph.

W. C. Brandon Heads Southern Artcraft

Takes the Helm as Southern Manager with Headquarters in Atlanta—F. C. McTyer Will Continue with Him.

ATLANTA, GA.—W. C. Brandon, one of the best-known and most popular film men in the south, has accepted the position as southern manager of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, the concern recently organized, with headquarters in Atlanta.

Offices have been secured in the Moore building on Walton street, and furniture and fixtures are being installed, his force being organized and ready for business as soon as the offices are in readiness.

Mr. Brandon has been in the film business for the past four years, having had charge of some of the largest concerns releasing in the south, his last position being that of manager of the V-L-S-E, which branch he opened when the concern was organized about a year and a half ago. His success has been marked especially with V-L-S-E, and he has an acquaintance throughout the south that will be of great value in his new undertaking.

T. F. McTyer, who has been with Mr. Brandon for a number of years as assistant and salesman, will be connected in the new concern, which will be a matter of gratification to his hundreds of patrons and friends throughout the south.

"Bert" Brandon is one of those lovable and square business men who has won his business by fair dealings, and whose friends rejoice with him in his success. The Artcraft Picture Corporation is to be congratulated in securing his service.

KANSAS AND MISSOURI NOTES.

Among Kansas City Exchanges.

George P. Meek, Pathe traveller in Oklahoma, was in Kansas City a few days last week, reporting excellent business and even better prospects.

Charles Werner, in charge of the St. Louis office of Metro, was at the Missouri exchange headquarters, Kansas City, recently, reporting seventeen bookings of the "Crimson Stain Mystery" there. The serial starts in Kansas City at the Sapphire. Joe Warner, who is placing the serial in Kansas and Missouri, has been booking it in practically every town where he calls.

"Sin," the Fox production which was rejected by the Kansas board a year ago, has been viewed again, and passed, including the title. It will be released with the regular program.

Among Kansas City Exchanges.

The V-L-S-E at Kansas City has installed a projection room, where the visiting exhibitors may see the pictures they want to select from, under the open-booking policy.

C. S. Stevenson, well known among Kansas City film men, has been appointed publicity agent of the Universal at Des Moines, Iowa.

Harry H. Young, formerly with the Mutual at Cincinnati, is now handling Charlie Chaplin and star productions in the Mutual exchange, Kansas City.

New Theater Changes.

Galena, Kans.—Lytle H. Moore, Galena Amusement Co., is building a theater which will have a capacity of 800, and which will be opened October 1. One of the features of this house will be the special built style H, Wurlitzer organ, which will be installed at a cost of $3,-850. The organ will be supplied by the Kansas City branch of the Rudolph Wurliter Co.

Independence, Kans.—H. Heneing has purchased the Star theater, and is remodeling and adding 75 feet to give a seating capacity of 400.

Ft. Scott, Kans.—Ernich & Jordan have sold the Pictureland theater, one of the oldest in Ft. Scott, to Miss Marie Smith of Springfield, Missouri. A very thorough redecorating and remodeling is contemplated.

Independence, Mo.—Mr. Lewis has bought a half interest in the Auditorium theater, at Excelsior Springs.

Eldon, Mo.—A. B. Van Sant has opened a new theater.

Prints Directory of Current Films.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Post, one of the local papers, has originated the plan of running a moving picture directory for the benefit of its patrons. A reporter makes the rounds of the different exchanges of the city each morning, getting the list of theaters and the pictures they booked. No money has been asked of the exhibitors. This list will be published every day, and will be a handy arrangement for the readers of the paper.

Just a Little Brains—It Paid.

Wichita, Kan.—L. G. Hicks, proprietor of the Novelty Photo Show, Wichita, Kan., executed a coup recently that illustrates the money value of "preparedness." The circus was coming to Wichita; and young and old were exelted over it. Without the knowledge of any one except his manager and the exehange, he booked the Hagenback pictures for one day, the day of the circus. Then he left town.

The morning of the circus, the "paper" was placed most flamboyantly; and it certainly drew the crowds! The show was opened at 8:30, and ran till 1 o'clock. The proceeds were $90. It was just what the crowd needed to keep it occupied, and to whet the appetite for the real circus of the afternoon and evening. Mr. Hicks arrived with his suit case from his trip shortly after noon, and ingenuously made inquiry of his manager as to whether that picture had been censored or not. It had not. Therefore, virtuously solicitous of the proprieties, he ordered the bills taken down, and the regular advertised program was put on at the usual time for afternoon shows. The Hagenback pictures were a complete surprise to the public.

Barrymore Theater Has Opened.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Barrymore theater, Thirty-ninth and Summit streets, Kansas City, Mo., has been taken over by the owner of the property, Mrs. Bertha Simon, who will operate it. Mrs. Simon built the Barrymore four years ago, according to the best ideas. But the art has improved and last spring she has made extensive alterations. Nine double door exits are now provided, front, rear, and each side; there are 14 windows, and six automatic ventilators. A new steel booth has been built, with concrete bottom, and concrete walls, the latter both for fire prevention and sound proofing. Two big new machines have been installed. The remodeling cost $2,500; and earned high praise from the building and the fire departments of the city. A $2,500 pipe organ has been installed, and a $650 pianola.

The opening night, August 26, 400 people were turned away; the suburban house seats 700.

Jerome Abrams Married.

Jereme Abrams, special representative of Bluebird, was married on August 29 at Oklahoma City, Okla., to the daughter of Manager Benjamin of the Blubeird Photo Play Company of Oklahoma. They passed through Kansas City September 1 on their honeymoon trip to Omaha. Miss Benjamin is known to most of the exhibitors and other film men of Oklahoma, and is said to be a competent mate for the very efficient Abrams.

Buys Bonaventure Theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. B. Tuteur, who heretofore has confined his activities to Fifteenth street, has bought the Bonaventure theater, on Independence avenue, and is remodeling and redecorating it. Mr. Tuteur has had fine success with the Empire, the Troost, the New Palace and the Kuloff, on Fifteenth street, and it is expected that his new venture will profit by his experience in the other places.

C. C. McCollister Motors Here.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. C. McCollister, proprietor of the Star, Wichita, Kan., motored to Kansas City recently with his wife in his Hudson Super Six. They visited the exchanges and some of the theaters.

Kansas City Screen Club Opens

Housewarming Reception in the Club's New Quarters on Evening of September 1—Much Good Fellowship and Cordiality Shown—The New Home One the Club Can Take Pleasure In—Coming Activities.

From Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Delighted with the success of its opening reception, at which some 250 people in the moving picture business and their guests were present, the Kansas City Screen Club is planning even more ambitious projects. It probably will hold an exposition in Convention Hall this fall, to last two or three days, to be concluded by a grand ball. Exhibitors in towns and cities of the territory who are members of the Screen Club will have as much a part as the Kansas Citians in this affair, with something in the nature of popularity contests, prizes perhaps of chances to act for producing companies, and the share in the general exploitation of the dignity of the moving picture business. It is hoped that stars of the moving picture world can be obtained as attractions for the ball.

The formal opening of the Screen Club's new quarters was held the evening of September 1. A large reception committee saw that the visitors who are not connected with the industry met those present who were in it, and one of the most enjoyable features was the "goodfellowship" that developed among the wives and daughters of the film men, and the "outsiders." Actors and actresses from local theaters provided special numbers.

The quarters of the Screen Club are handsomely decorated and furnished. The long ballroom has complete furniture as a large reception room. Adjoining it is the poolroom, behind which are the dining rooms, which can be used as card and committee rooms. There is a well equipped bar. More than $3,000 and a great deal of work by the moving picture men were expended on the quarters.

AN EXHIBITOR'S ENTERPRISE.

L. G. Hicks of the Novelty Gets Out a Daily Paper for His Home.

WICHITA, KAN.—L. G. Hicks, of Wichita, was formerly a printer and newspaper publisher, and has used his experience to profitable advantage in advertising his Novelty Photo Show here.

He had some printing equipment, the relics of a former newspaper enterprise, in storage. He dug out a linotype, display type and press, and began the publication of a daily, four pages, three columns, twelve inches long, of which he now issues 5,000 each day. The program for a week ahead is given on the various pages, the first page having a special display of the current attraction, the announcements being moved forward each day. The issue is distributed by 10:30 each morning.

Now, listen: The advertisements which come unsolicited more than pay the expense. The rate is 40 cents an inch—more than most dailies in small cities. But the space for ads is limited. On the first page only five inches are allowed for advertisements, and because of the demand this space is rotated among six advertisers during the week, each having it a day. The rate on this first page five inches is 50 cents an inch. The paper contains newsy brevities of the city, as well as moving picture news.

A Lively Small Theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Sapphire theater, the smallest in the city, seating 185 people, gets the "Crimson Stain Mystery" serial of Metro—and that suggests some facts worthy of recording. This theater runs consistently at 5 cents, despite its small capacity. But it makes money. And it pays the highest prices for serials, for it keeps serials going all the time, every day. It also runs a long program, usually seven reels. Manager Elliott "gets away with it" partly through opening at 8 o'clock every morning and keeping going until 11:30 at night. He always has a crowded house, even for the first show of the morning.

One of Pathe's Reel Salesmen.

Kansas City, Mo.—The exhibitors of parts of Kansas and Missouri are finding out what an optimist is, for a real one is traveling among them now. This is J. E. Foland, who represents the Pathe exchange of Kansas City.

Mr. Foland entered the moving picture industry by way of the censorship fight in Kansas, in February, 1915, undertaking to help in the campaign, and becoming later secretary of the Amusement Association of Kansas. His newspaper and publicity experience helped him there. For he traveled widely, and knew the Western public. He issued an automobile magazine for awhile, around 1910. This was the training that fitted Mr. Foland to go out through Kansas and Missouri and dig up seads of new business for the Pathe. He did it by straight, hard work, hitting numerous places and showing the exhibitors how they could make more money. Apparently it is his fertility in ideas that "cuts the mustard."

J. E. Foland.

Unfair for State to Tax and Compete.

Hays, Kan.—F. K. Fredorovicz is preparing to open his Crystal theater at Hays, Kan. This seats 300, and is not used in the summer because of the greater comfort in hot weather of the Opera House, which he owns also, and where he runs pictures. The business in Hays has been somewhat hampered by the opening of what is practically a commercial house by the State Normal School, which runs features and amusement subjects in addition to its educational subjects, charging 10 cents, and getting much local business. "I wouldn't object at all to a state institution or a school running educational films, even if they charged; but it looks like unfair competition for the state institution to compete directly for my business," said Mr. Fredorovicz.

Holt Feature Co.'s Studio.

Manhattan, Kan.—The Holt Feature Film Co. of Manhattan, Kan., is building a new studio there, which will have 4,000 feet of floor space, and will be one of the finest equipped in Kansas. The company has a large and increasing business in the advertising line. While it is equipped to develop its own pictures, it sends its work to Rothaeker, at Chicago. O. W. Holt, head of the company, is widely known as a photographer.

No Sunday Show in Wichita.

Wichita, Kan.—The culmination of the efforts of moving picture exhibitors of Wichita for Sunday theater openings resulted in defeat. The people of Wichita declared by their votes by a majority of nearly 2,000 in a total of 10,000 that they did not want pictures on Sunday. A little more than half of the registered voters turned out to vote—and it is said that practically all of the opponents of Sunday pictures voted.

Long Runs of Features in St. Louis

Only the Bigger Features Will Be Used—Indefinite Runs While Waiting for Other Suitable Offerings.

By A. H. Giebler, 236 Vanol Building, St. Louis, Mo.

WM. SIEVERS, manager of the New Grand Central theater, one of the largest first-run feature houses in the Middle West, has announced a change in the policy of his theater.

"In the future," says Mr. Sievers, "we will run only features of the bigger class, and at advanced prices. We will, of course, select such subjects as will justify the advance in admission. These features will be booked to run indefinitely, and will be held on until another film of equal strength and character can be secured to replace it, if the patronage justifies it; and in the event of not being able to book another picture of equal strength we will darken the house rather than show an inferior picture, or one that we do not consider worthy of offering at advanced prices.

"There is a need for a house of this kind in St. Louis, a house where the public can know that they will see the first run of the bigger films, and we feel sure they will not object to the advance in admission price, as they know such subjects cost more to exhibit. We have thought the situation over very carefully, and feel confident that such a policy will win recognition and appreciation from the public.

Mr. Sievers inaugurated his new policy with an indefinite booking of "Where Are My Children?" at 25 and 50 cents. The feature is in its fourth week and has been playing to capacity houses at each of the five performances that are given daily.

Fox Manager Returns from Trip.

St. Louis, Mo.—Joe (Live-wire) Levy has just returned from a general round-up of the territory controlled by the Fox Exchange. He says things look bright, and exhibitors are all enthusiastic about Fox films. He brought back a number of new contracts, and one of the finest cases of hay fever the season has produced so far. But it doesn't seem to worry him much, and at last account he was getting ready to take a trip to East S. Louis, and on Labor Day at that, when most of the offices along Film Row were closed and their managers marching in the big Labor Day parade.

Another Prize to S. J. Baker.

St. Louis, Mo.—S. J. Baker has just pulled out another feather from a Bluebird and put it in his cap in celebration of the fact that he has won another hundred-dollar prize for record business during August. Of course, Sidney feels a little puffed up, but who wouldn't over winning two prizes so close together. He says, and with becoming modesty, which is his chief characteristic, "Don't fail to give credit to the boys who helped bring home the bacon." So here are the boys: Roger Thompson and Leo Levy. The boys say the boss himself did Trojan service in bringing in the side meat. Baker says that the "Play's the Thing" policy adopted by the producer is largely responsible for the popularity of the Bluebird features.

St. Louis Salesmen Top List for U. S.

St. Louis, Mo.—Introducing F. W. Gebhardt, of the Pathe exchange. What has Mr. Gebhardt done that he should break into publicity? Wait and listen. In June this man climbed to the top of the list of all the Pathe salesmen throughout the United States, and what is more, he stayed there. Gebhardt stood up at the top of the list all through June, and then just to show what he could do, and to discourage anyone who might try to climb up and try to shove him off the perch he increased his record for July, and now it is September and he is still sitting on top of the pole and daring anyone to climb up and knock him off. Mr. Gebhardt says he has no secret process or formula; he just goes out and gets the business. He is a very personable young chap with lot of get-up and go in him, and he has a habit of clenching his fists and frowning at you that convinces he means just what he says. Maybe that has something to do with it, and maybe it is the new automobile in which he drives around when he calls on exhibitors. At any rate, Gebhardt gets there!

Bigger Offices for Kline.

St. Louis, Mo.—I. P. Rosenberg, manager of the George Kline feature exchange, with offices in the Empress theater building, announces that the exchange will move into larger quarters very soon. The new location has not been definitely decided on yet, but according to the plans, the new exchange will be one of the most up-to-date film distributing offices in the city.

The necessity for larger quarters has been brought about by the fact that Rosenberg has been stirring things up with "Gloria's Romance" and other Kline features since he came to St. Louis, and to the further fact that in the near future all of the big features produced by Selig, Essanay and Edison will be released through the Kline exchanges.

Pathe Exchange Being Rebuilt.

St. Louis, Mo.—C. S. Edwards, manager of the Pathe exchange, at 3210 Locust street, is having the entire interior of the offices remodeled and changed to make room for the increase of business that the office has been making. Mr. Edward's office stands first among all Pathe exchanges for bookings on "The Grip of Evil" and "Who's Guilty?" serials.

St. Louis, Mo.—Things are looking up at the L. C. F. exchange at 3311 Olive street. Manager Fegan says the "Yellow Menace" is catching on like a house afire.

Film News from Denver

By E. C. Day, Denver Times, Denver, Colo.

Harry Lustig Steering Local Metro.

DENVER, COLO.—Harry Lustig, who was reported in these columns recently to be back in Denver on a visit, has returned permanently. The cat got out of the bag when Mr. Lustig took full charge of the Metro exchange here.

Mr. Lustig has been in Los Angeles for eight months as manager of the Metro exchange. Previous to this he spent several years in various branches of the film industry here. Before going to Metro he was Denver manager for the Mutual, a position earned by hard work in minor positions in the exchange. Because of his long association with the industry in this section he has a wide acquaintance among the exhibitors throughout the Rocky Mountain region.

Mr. Lustig succeeds W. J. Binford, a veteran moving picture man, who has decided to take a rest for several months, after being in the game actively for six or eight years.

Friday a Lucky Day When Trout Bite.

Denver, Colo.—Friday need have no terrors for one if he is an exchange manager. Ward E. Scott, boss of the Mutual, can bear witness to the truth of this assertion. Last week he received an express package from Ira Foster, part owner of the Colonial theater at Pueblo. It contained four beauties of the mountain trout species and the sender very proudly notified the recipient that they were trophies of a fishing trip on the Gunnison river. This week the same kind of a package, only of larger proportions, arrived designated for Manager Scott. It contained 15 fish together with a note from William Foster, brother of Ira, and a partner in the Colonial of Pueblo. The note called attention to the fact that the fish were bigger, better and more numerous than those previously sent by brother Ira. Scott has agreed to act as referee in any controversy that rival fishermen wish to start—he can avere that good fish taste equally good—the only requirement being that the fishermen send specimens of their catches. He might forget what the size and number were; but the delicious taste will be a lasting memory.

L. Bartel With Local Universal.

Denver, Colo.—F. Y. Langtree, manager of the Universal exchange, has announced the addition of L. Bartel to his office staff. Mr. Bartel comes from Des Moines to accept a position as assistant manager and chief booking clerk. New and improved systems for booking and shipping have recently been put into effect in the Universal exchange and Manager Langtree is more than pleased with the way they are working out.

G. R. Noble Buys Ozz Theater.

Denver, Colo.—J. R. Claypole, one of Denver's oldest moving picture theater owners, has retired from the exhibiting branch of the industry. He stepped out this week when he sold his Ozz theater in the outskirts of the city to G. R. Noble. Claypole will now devote his entire time to the advertising end of the business, and to the sale of theater supplies.

IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Clara Kimball Young Booking Big.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sol L. Lesser, who recently returned from New York, bringing back with him the rights to the Clara Kimball Young pictures in this territory, is delighted with the manner in which exhibitors are coming in to arrange for bookings. The first release will be made early in October and most of the early dates have already been taken. Irving Lesser, who recently went to Los Angeles to take charge of the All Star and Golden Gate film exchange interests, will be here shortly to discuss the plans for putting out these attractions. J. J. Moore is now representing the All Star Feature Distributors in the San Joaquin Valley and is doing well. Mr. Lesser is preparing to send a representative to China at an early date to investigate conditions and to arrange for the shipment of large quantities of film.

Progressive Exchange News.

San Francisco, Cal.—V. R. Moore has been placed in charge of the newly created publicity department of the Progressive Motion Picture Company and will commence active work along the line of assisting exhibitors upon returning from his vacation to Los Angeles. He has been succeeded as head of the single reel, travelogue and special feature department by D. Palmerton, formerly of the supply department, and H. Hershman has been appointed chief shipping clerk. Herman Wobber, manager of the Pacific Coast division, is making a visit to Seattle and the Northwest, accompanied by Auditor D. K. Shanks.

Apex Exchange Taken Over.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Consolidated Film Corporation, a concern recently organized with a capital of $50,000 and headed by Marion H. Kohn, president; S. Aronson, vice-president, and George P. Epstein, treasurer, has purchased the stock and business of the Apex Feature Service, 114 Golden Gate avenue, and is arranging to add largely to the list of films now on hand. Mr. Kohn is planning to make a visit to New York early in September, in case there is no railroad strike, and later will supervise the opening of offices at Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle.

This Film Took a Bath.

San Francisco, Cal.—The claims of superiority set up for Paramount films have been materially boosted since an accident which happened recently in Honolulu harbor when a box of reels, containing "Nearly a King," featuring John Barrymore, went overboard. After having been nosed around by the sharks for ten days it was recovered and is now in steady use, despite its submersion.

"Gloria's Romance" Going Great Guns.

San Francisco, Cal.—The final chapter of "Gloria's Romance" has been received at the local office of George Kleine and Manager W. O. Edmonds is delighted to have it in his possession before the threatened railroad strike materializes. This production has been a great success in this territory and is also making a great record for itself in the Northwest. Mr. Edmonds recently returned from a trip to Seattle and states that while the start there was made a little late the production is being booked heavily.

San Francisco Censors May Go

Abolition of City's Board of Censors Expected at September 11 Meeting of Board of Supervisors—Climax of Board of Trade's Fight—Picture Men to Be Given a Chance.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—At a meeting of the police committee of the Board of Supervisors, held on August 31, the abolition of the moving picture censorship board was recommended and this action will doubtless be taken by the board when it meets as a whole on September 11. This matter has been in the hands of the supervisors for more than eight months, but a settlement of the question had been postponed from time to time in order to feel out the sentiment of the general public. Not only has the police committee decided to recommend that the board of censorship be abolished, but it has gone on record as favoring the removal of the present restrictions surrounding the obtaining of permits to open moving picture houses. The Board of Supervisors is known to be favorably inclined toward these changes and there is practically no question but that they will be made.

The recent action of the police committee marks the climax of a fight that has been made for months under the direction of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, headed by Manager F. S. Peachy, and the local exhibitors' league, to have the moving picture business classed as legitimate. Under the present law theaters, like saloons, are subject to police permits and police supervision. The present ordinance was passed when there were but thirty-two moving picture houses in the city, while there are now one hundred and eighteen theaters where this class of amusement is featured. The censorship board, which is supposed to consist of five members, has for some time had but three active members and has not been regarded as a legal body.

Picture Men Should Be Given a Chance.

At the last hearing on this question before the police committee, Supervisor Hocks, one of the members, said: "I believe that the moving picture men should be given a chance. It is easy enough at any time to pass an ordinance and appoint a board of censorship if it is needed. If pictures are ever presented in this city that the public demands to be stopped, I feel sure that the Board of Supervisors will act promptly and put back a board of censorship with full powers to control any objectionable features that may develop. Supervisor Deasy spoke along the same lines and said: "The records of the board of censorship shows that it has practically died because it has had nothing to do. It has not censored enough pictures to make it worth while talking about. I believe that if an improper play is presented the ministers, the papers and the public generally will raise such a roar that the moving picture man who showed it might as well close his doors and go out of business. I believe in trying to be fair and do not see any difference between the moving picture house and the regular theater."

In the course of his address before the police committee at the final hearing on the question Attorney John T. Williams quoted extensively from the Moving Picture World, which he described as being the authority on all matters pertaining to the film industry. The list of arguments advanced against censorship, the unfavorable experience of other cities with this plan and the reports of various organizations against this form of suppression had a profound effect upon the members of the committee. The credit for the successful termination of this fight is due largely to the Film Exchange Board of Trade, which has worked steadily toward this end, and to the efforts of the Exhibitors' League.

Plans to Distribute Films During a Strike

San Francisco Film Board of Trade Has Mapped Out Means of Supplying Exhibitors by Automobiles.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Several special meetings of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco have been held of late to devise ways and means of serving exhibitors throughout this territory in case the threatened strike of railroad employees becomes a reality. If necessary automobile trucks will be placed into service and films will be taken to such natural distributing points as Fresno, Stockton, Sacramento, Salinas, Santa Rosa and Chico. Towns between San Francisco and these points would be served en route, while exhibitors in places near these distributing centers would have to make arrangements for the short haul. A number of exhibitors in the San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys have volunteered their services in case of a strike to assist in the movement of films. It will be impossible to serve a portion of the Northern California territory or Nevada with the usual dispatch, but the great majority of exhibitors will get their shows with little or no loss of time. Notices of the tentative plans of the Film Exchange Board of Trade have been sent to all exhibitors and Manager Peachy is prepared to arrange for transportation facilities on short notice.

Board of Trade States Policies.

San Francisco, Cal.—Owing to an evident misunderstanding of the aims of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco a circular letter has been mailed to all exhibitors in this territory setting forth its objects as follows: "Drawing together and cementing the film industry as a whole, the exhibitor and exchangeman alike, for the mutual protection of both. To see that all accounts between the exhibitor and the exchangeman are adjusted and settled satisfactorily to both parties. To take care of censorship, shipping and all other forms of legislation to the best advantage of all concerned. To do any and everything necessary, requisite and adequate for the mutual protection of our business."

San Francisco News.

E. R. Redlich, Western representative of the William Fox Film Corporation, is spending a week at the local branch of this concern, having just completed one of his regular visits to Los Angeles.

The Lux School of this city has installed moving picture equipment secured through Edward H. Kemp.

The many friends of Ben F. Simpson, manager of the local Triangle office, will be pained to learn that his father, to whom he was devoted, passed away recently.

Edward H. Kemp, who handles the Motiograph projection machine in this territory, plans to visit the Chicago headquarters of this concern at an early date.

Charles I. Luntz, manager of the Bluebird interests, recently made a successful trip to Eureka and the northern part of the State.

E. C. Woods, formerly with the musical instrument house of Kohler & Chase, is now manager of the American Photoplayer Sales Company, and I. H. Lyon, well known in this territory, has been appointed a special travelling representative in the West.

H. J. Gosliner, of the Edison theater on Powell street, returned recently from a quick trip to Portland, Ore.

Sacramento Censors Wins Fight

Local Censor Stops Showing of "Twilight Sleep" Film at the Turner & Dahnken Theater.

SACRAMENTO, Cal.—The Turner & Dahnken Circuit has lost its fight against censorship in the "Twilight Sleep" case without the matter reaching the courts, where it had been hoped that it would be thrashed out. When the announcement was made recently that this film would be shown at the T. & D. theater Commissioner of Education E. J. Carraghar, who is also the official censor, condemned the film without having reviewed it. When it became evident that a court action was impending he finally consented to see the picture but still refused to allow it to be shown as scheduled.

The management of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit decided to show it regardless of the censor, but at the opening performance, with women only in attendance, the police stopped the show by holding a hat over the light aperture in the operating booth and arresting E. B. Johnson, secretary of the firm; M. Naify, house manager, and C. A. Hatt, the operator. After being taken to the city prison all were released as no charge could be found upon which they could be held. It was still planned to show the picture, but when word was received that the city commission was drafting a resolution to revoke the license of the theater it was felt that it was time to capitulate. Manager Naify accordingly went to the commission and advised that no attempt would be made to show the picture if the contemplated action of that body be abandoned, which was agreed to.

Wage Proposal Inopportune

Request of Portland, Oregon, Labor Unions Declared by Theater Managers Unreasonable in View of Backward Year—Theater Employees and Managers Now Working in Harmony—A Continuation of Present Working Agreement Anticipated.

By Abraham Nelson, 809 Journal Building, Portland, Oregon.

PORTLAND, OREGON—The motion picture exhibitors of the city are unanimous in their opinion that this is no time for organized labor to make requests for a higher wage scale or different working conditions. Several meetings have been held by the managers' associations on the proposals recently made by the unions, and each exhibitor has said that the present business conditions make it impossible to accede to any requests that will increase the operating expenses of the theater. In most of the theaters business has not become any better since the last agreement with the unions was entered into, but the union scale has been followed in every respect, just the same.

The musicians and others affected by the new union proposals, employed by the theaters, have not agitated the proposed new scale strongly, the managers say, and there is a most pleasant feeling between the employees and the managers. It is anticipated that a satisfactory compromise will be effected soon.

The managers say that all theater help in Portland is paid as well, if not better, than most of the cities in the country, and that theater managers and employees here have a minimum amount of disagreements.

Mutual Territory Extended.

Portland, Oregon—The Portland Mutual office will hereafter serve Boise, Starr and Weiser, in Idaho, and all points in the State intermediate. These cities were formerly served out of the Salt Lake office. While they are nearer Salt Lake than Portland, the railroad connections by way of Portland are claimed to give better service, which is the reason for the change. A. S. Kirkpatrick, road man for Mutual out of Portland, has been getting the new territory lined up.

Prairie City House Sold.

Portland, Oregon—Harry Hiatt and wife were recent visitors here, coming from Prairie City, where they had just sold their theater, the Electric, to Fred Clift. The Hiatts are contemplating locating in the picture business at Ranier, Oregon.

Thompson Is Manager.

Butte, Mont.—H. L. Thompson, formerly traveling representative for Universal has been appointed manager of the branch office, succeeding Gus Hager, who has taken charge of the office in Seattle. Mr. Thompson started with Universal as road man out of Portland, and his rise to the position of manager has been rapid.

Pickford Manager Resigns.

Portland, Oregon—Louis B. Christ has resigned his position with the Peoples Amusement Company for whom he has been employed for the past two years as manager of the Pickford Theater. He left the Pickford to become manager for Kulolia's Hawaiians, who recently finished an engagement in Portland. He will take the troupe to Chicago. Mr. Christ has been in the legitimate and picture show business for twenty years, and has been a most popular manager at the Pickford.

At Coos Bay.

Portland, Oregon—W. A. Van Scoy, camera man for Pathe, returned recently from the Coos Bay country, where he photographed the formal opening of the new railroad. This was formerly the largest settled section of the United States without a railroad. Mr. Van Scoy reports three fine picture theaters at Marshfield, where most of the celebration was held. He says the Noble theater, owned by Bob Marsden, is a most modern house. Here the projection is furnished by two new machines, and the stage is equipped to handle vaudeville acts. Mr. Marsden is the pioneer theater man of the town.

George Maple in Portland.

Portland, Oregon—George Maple, the popular valley showman, has been employed by the Ideal Amusement Company to manage the Ideal theater here. Mr. Maple has recently been at Seaside and Astoria, leaving the latter town when the Sunset theater there was sold to Alex Tagg.

T. & D. Head Here.

Portland, Oregon—Fred Dahnken, the "D" of T. & D., came up from San Francisco and spent two weeks here making a thorough survey of the exhibiting end of the local film business. He made his headquarters at the local Turner & Dahnken theater. Mr. Dahnken is visiting all of the firm's theaters and is accompanied by Mrs. Dahnken. The Portland T. & D. theater is the largest controlled by the company.

Heard on Portland's Film Row.

The Richmond theater has been reopened by Freedman & Bullier.

Gus Metzger reports a good demand for features in Portland, and says that within the past few weeks he has signed up an unusual number of exhibitors for Bluebirds.

Ed Myrick, of the Columbia, left September 7 for the wilds of Cow Creek Canyon, where he will hunt bear and other big game that abounds in the southern Oregon mountains.

Frank McGettigan, a former newspaper man, has been selected as manager of the Portland Orpheum. Carl Ritter will manage the Orpheum in Seattle.

J. V. Lynn, former road man for Universal and now publicity expert for the Peoples Amusement Company, has opened a publicity office in the Chamber of Commerce building.

Edwin James, manager of the Majestic theater, and Abraham Nelson, of the Moving Picture World, were delegated by the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association to lay the motion picture men's side of the censorship controversy before a meeting of the officers of one of the big women's clubs.

Sol Baum has returned from Seattle, where he has temporarily been in charge of the Universal office. He will resume his duties in Portland as manager for Bluebirds.

Among the visitors on Film Row were Herman Wobber, vice-president of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, controlling Paramount in eleven Western States. Other visitors at the exchanges were: G. A. Metcalf, of San Francisco; A. Bettengen, Grand and Pastime theaters, The Dalles; J. B. Sparks, Heppner; F. C. Weskel, Bungalow, North Powder; E. M. McGann, Sheridan; O. F. Bergner, Ashland, and A. F. Edwards, Oakland.

The Week in Seattle

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

G. A. Hager Heads Local U. Exchange.

SEATTLE.—Following the resignation of J. B. Harrington as manager of the Universal exchange in this city, G. A. Hager, late manager of Universal's Butte office, has taken over the responsibility of looking after that company's interests here. Mr. Hager has been for years with Universal. He spent two and a half years as manager in Spokane and ten months in Butte, Montana. He says that better prices prevail in Montana than in Washington, and that there is better co-operation between the companies. The former condition he attributes to the unwonted impetus given to the mining industry of Montana by the European belligerent's demand for copper.

Universal Office Moves.

With Mr. Hager's coming the Universal offices were moved from their old home at Fifth avenue and University street to the new one-story brick building erected for film exchanges exclusively at Third avenue and Virginia street.

The Mutual offices occupy the Fifth avenue frontage, while Universal's rooms face Virginia street. This is one of the most modern and completely equipped film exchange buildings on the coast.

Ira J. Dodge Resigns Managership.

Seattle, Wash.—Ira J. Dodge, who has been for some time manager of the George Kleine exchange in Seattle, has resigned because of illness. He has been taking a vacation in the mountains and expects to return to the forces of Mr. Kleine some time later. His successor has not been announced.

New Manager of Strand at Capital.

Olympia, Wash.—Mr. Oswald of the firm of Rantz & Oswald, owners of the Dream and the Rex theaters, Bremerton, has gone to Olympia to take charge of the Strand. Mr. Rantz will remain in Bremerton to look after their interests there.

Coliseum Books Serial.

Seattle, Wash.—The Coliseum is to make one exception, at least, to its policy of never booking serials. This they have made in favor of Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance." They announce, however, that, instead of consuming the intended twenty weeks' time in showing this photoplay, they will complete the showing of the feature in five weeks. September 3 is the opening date.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

The Liberty Resumes Sunday Concerts.

Seattle, Wash.—Oliver G. Wallace resumed the Sunday noon concerts on the $35,000 Hope-Wurlitzer Orchestra at the Liberty theater on September 3. The opening program of classical and semi-classical music includes a Hawaiian Medley arranged by Mr. Wallace. The Liberty has a new lobby decoration of fifty autographed photos of stars who have been seen there in big features.

Metro Enters British Columbia

Western Canada Now Can See the New Program of the Standard Film Service, Inc., which Herbert Lubin Has Brought in with a Flourish—Vancouver's Dominion Books First Runs—Publicity Campaign Begun.

E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Herbert Lubin, of the Standard Film Service, Ltd., distributing the Metro program throughout Canada, dropped a bombshell in the local field when he signalized the arrival of the new program in British Columbia by closing with Manager J. R. Muir of the Dominion theater for exclusive first run of all Metro subjects at that house. The Dominion has for some time been doing a capacity business nightly, and the booking of the Metro productions indicates how strongly they appealed to Mr. Muir.

Mr. Lubin's promised publicity campaign has already commenced, with large space being used in the newspapers. Mr. Muir and Mr. Lubin have gone to Victoria, where the Metros have also been booked for first run at the Dominion theater there. This house is also controlled by Mr. Muir and associates, and has had the most prosperous business in that city. The new service at the Dominion theaters will start late in September, and two programs will be shown each week.

Health Board Showed It Was Sane.

Vancouver, B. C.—Dr. Alex. Robinson, provincial superintendent of education, has recently sent the following letter from Victoria to the Vancouver school board, in reply to that body's suggestion that the opening of the fall term be postponed for two weeks, on account of the discovery of a case of infantile paralysis in this city:

"The department will, of course, expect your health officer and your health committee to close all Sunday schools and other gatherings of school children, and to prohibit children under sixteen years of age attending moving picture shows and other exhibitions; otherwise I shall be reluctantly compelled to conclude that your health officials are animated merely with a desire to injure our public school system."

The health officials took no notice of the communication, however, and the theaters have not been interfered with. The schools will open one week later than originally intended.

Taking Canadian Northern Films.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Canadian Northern Railway has joined the large number of roads which have realized the value of moving picture publicity, and Cameraman John Murray, employed by the company, has just passed through this city on his way west, where he will take scenic pictures along the line in the Rocky Mountain region, and on through to the coast. Special attention will be given to harvesting scenes.

Mr. Murray was formerly a Metro cameraman and is accompanied on his present trip by W. H. Robinson, official photographer for the Canadian Northern.

Reopening of Winnipeg's Lyceum.

Winnipeg, Man.—Alterations at the Lyceum theater are now complete, and the seating capacity of the house has been increased to 1,500. The formal opening will be held on September 18 and 19, when a benefit will be held for the Returned Soldiers' Toy Factory, with the ladies' auxiliary of the factory in charge.

A Whale Hunting Film.

Vancouver, B. C.—Arrangements have just been completed with the Victoria Whaling Company through Industrial Commissioner Davidson, whereby A. D. Kean, the local cameraman, will shortly make a trip in one of the company's vessels for the purpose of obtaining a complete film record of the interesting work of whale hunting.

Notes for a Passing Glance.

Calgary, Alberta.—The American Company's serial, "The Secret of the Submarine," opened at the Empress theater on Thursday, August 31. To start the picture off with big houses, every person attending the theater on Monday or Tuesday was given a free ticket to be used during the showing of the first episode.

Calgary, Alberta.—Under a distress warrant for rent, J. F. Haynen recently held a bailiff's sale of the equipment of the Kings theater, situated at the corner of Portage avenue and Kensington street.

Vancouver, B. C.—A large number of 24-sheet stands are being used here advertising the opening of the Essanay serial, "The Strange Case of Mary Page," at the Columbia theater on August 31.

Extensive billboard space is also being used to call attention to the local advent of Metro productions.

Winnipeg, Man.—"Liberty," the new Universal serial, has been booked by the Starland theater and opened on August 30.

Calgary, Alberta.—Manager Aylesworth of the Princess theater announces that he has booked "Liberty" for showing at that house.

BIOGRAPH.

STRONGHEART (Reissue—Three Parts—Sept. 20).—The Cast: Strongheart (Henry Walthall); Dorothy Nelson (Blanche Sweet); Billy Saunders (Lionel Barrymore); Molly Livingston (Gertrude Robinson); Frank Nelson (Antonio Moreno); Dick Livingston (Tom McEvoy); Ralph Thorne (Alan Hale).

Frank Nelson and his sister, Dorotby, of New York, are on a hunting trip in the West. Soangataha—"Stronghcart"— an Indian chief's son, saves Frank from drowning. Frank and Dorothy arc grateful to him for his kindness. Strongheart is so impressed with Frank's tales of college life that he begs his father to send him East to acquire the wisdom of the white man for the benefit of his race.

Later Strongheart is on the Columbia College eleven and a great favorite with the boys. They are all enthusiastic over their big football game for which they are training. Ralph Thorne is in love with Dorothy Nelson, who treats him with indifference. Dorothy favors Dick Livingston, her brother's chum, and Thorne, insane with jealousy, plans to disgrace Dick by getting him intoxicated and persuading him to gamble. Thorne has an oportunity to do this when Dick, who is overtrained, is ordered to break training temporarily.

Dick loses $3,000. Thorne lends Dick $3,000 and instructs him to bet the entire amount on Columbia. Thorne then exchanges his list of football signals for Dick's and sends them to the opposing team. Billy Saunders makes love to Molly, Dick Livingston's sister. As a proof of his love she asks him to give her something he has sworn never to part with. He gives her the football signals (which are in Thorne's handwritng) and warns her of their importance.

Dick is devoted to Dorothy but she gives him no encouragement for she realizes that she has fallen in love with Strongheart. The signals are received by the opposing team, who arc too honorable to take advantage of the stolen information. Their manager, Farley, decides to take the matter up with Buckley, the manager of the Columbia team.

Thorne suggests that perhaps they can tell who sent the signals by the handwriting. Strongheart recognizes Dick's handwriting and refuses to show the signals till after the game, as he realizes that if Dick finds the signals are his he will go to pieces and Columbia will lose the game. In trying to shield Dick, Strongheart allows himself to be suspected of having sent the signals and is not allowed to play the closing half of the game.

Under the promise of secrecy, Strongheart allows Billy to see the signals for identification at the meeting later. Billy believes that Molly has double-crossed him. Dorothy and Molly, unaware of what has transpired, are astonished at not seeing Strongheart in the game. Strongheart is frantic with joy when Columbia wins the game through Dick's briliant play. Mrs. Nelson gives a dance in honor of the winning team. Billy accuses Moly of sending the signals to the opposing team. She denies this and gives the signals she has to Strongheart. They are astonished to find them in Thorne's handwriting.

Thorne attempts to make love to Dorothy, but she repulses him. He leaves her and meets Billy, who asks him to send a telegram—merely a scheme to compare his handwriting with the signals in Strongheart's possession. Strongheart is convinced that Dorothy cares for him and asks her to be his wife. Dorothy tells him to come the following day for her answer. Frank enters and Strongherat tells him that he loves Dorothy and wants to marry her. Frank upbraids him for daring to love a white girl and orders him from the house. The following day a banquet is given to the football team. Billy begs Molly to forgive him for ever having doubted her. She finally relents and when he asks her to marry him she consents.

Dick treats Strongheart coldly until he learns that the signals sent to the opposing team were in his own handwriting. He is overcome, and apologizes to Strongheart. The members of the team hold a meeting for the purpose of discovering the guilty man. Dick is unable to explain how his signals were sent. Strongheart is called next and he accuses Thorne of having sent Dick's list to the other team and produces Thorne's own copy which Billy had given Molly. Thorne realizes that he is caught and confesses his guilt. He leaves at once in disgrace.

Strongheart cannot be urged to join the dinner, saying that he has been taught that he is not one of them. He prepares to leave for home and Dorothy tells him of her great love and that she is ready to go away with him. Black Eagle arrives with the news of the death of Strongheart's father. He tells Strongheart of the great need his people have for him and forces Strongheart to realize that Dorothy could not live the life of his people. Strongheart struggles between love and duty.

Dorothy entreats him to take her with him. He begs her to leave him while he has the courage to do what is right and despite her pleadings decides to follow the path of duty and return to his people. Thus are two loving hearts separated by inexorable fate. The picture closes with Strongheart back in the West among his people. Alone he thinks of the woman he loves. The caption before the scene is: "They call me chief."

A strong friendship between Ed Wilson, foreman of the Diamond Circle Ranch, and Tom Orbig develops, after Blake tries to shoot Tom.

Grace tells Ed Wilson and Tom of this incident, and the two men make Blake apologize to the girl. Happy Jack, a cowpuncher, presents Grace a bouquet of flowers. Wilson becomes angry and the two come to blows.

HONEYMOON CAR (Sept. 20).—Featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby.

A money order arrives in a letter from Uncle. The recipient of the letter is advised to buy a car, get married and make the trip to the Uncle's home in the car. On the way the bridal pair run out of gasoline. The groom walks to the nearest gasoline station and while he is on the way, a tramp holds up the bride and an old maid nurse who was sent along on the trip by the bride's mother. He takes their jewelry and money and makes his getaway.

The returning groom is told of the affair and he starts in search of the robber, leaving the bride and maid to refill the tank. Not being able to locate the robber he returns to the car and everything looking to him "all right," they start off. While riding over the bumps, the gasoline tank is lost, the air pressure goes down and the car stalls. Unable to find the cap, he inquires who put the cap on the tank and learns that the old maid had, so the groom replaces the cap with the maid. She takes her place as the "gas cap." He gets up his pressure and they continue.

Through the gas station man they learn of the direction of the tramp and while following him, they enlist the aid of a constable. The tramp, who has been making his getaway safe by riding the trunk of another car, is discovered by the driver and treated to the "bum's rush." He soon tires and falls asleep under a tree where he is discovered by the bride as they almost pass him. In order to make the arrest, they have to chase him into a mud puddle. Eventually he is placed in a "one man lock-up" which he easily kicks over and makes his escape.

The honeymooners arrive at Uncle's home, but they are so dirty from the fight in the puddle that he refuses to recognize them. They return to the car and sit down on the running board where they try to think of a way to make Uncle realize his relationship to the groom.

Secure in his authority, the officer tortures poor Plump with unnecessary drilling and departs for the day's work. The colonel's daughter loves Plump. The lieutenant loves her. Plump's heart is given to the little pet of the regiment, so that things are rather mixed.

A trumped up charge places Plump in the court martial's hands and unthinkingly the colonel sentences him to death. Risking her life the pet aids him to escape. About this time the manoeuvers are taking place and the bursting of a cannon scatters the troops and sends the colonel's horse away on a mad gallop ending in a flying jump into the river. Plump sees this and rushes off to a crane, jumps into the scoop and with a mighty heave drags out the drowning colonel. Before the whole regiment the hero is now restored, decorated and promoted, and with the pet in his arms, his happy future is assured.

THE MAN HUNTERS (Sept. 22).—The cast: Pokes (Robert Burns); Jabbs (Walter Stull); Postmistress (Ethel Burton); Storekeeper (Frank Hanson); Outlaws (Harry Naughton and Robin Williamson).

Pokes, the village boob, who is a graduate of a correspondence school for detectives, volunteers to safeguard the town and arrest the outlaws, but his efforts are ridiculed by the populace. Pokes, however, follows the trail of every stranger who enters the town. When Jabbs, the famous city detective summoned by the local police to assist them in guarding the post-office, appears in town, Pokes follows him and observes Jabbs disguising himself as a woman. That is enough evidence for Pokes, and when Jabbs, dressed as a woman, enters the post-office to introduce himself, Pokes summons the police and despite Jabbs' protests has him marched off to the police station.

While Jabbs is establishing his identity, Naughton and Robin, the two outlaws, ride up to the post-office and overpowering the postmaster and his assistant, seize the safe and the contents of the cash drawer and gallop off to their cabin. Later when Jabbs and the police return to the post-office, they discover the robbery. Realizing that Pokes' act has been responsible for the affair, they rush to seek the would-be detective. Catching sight of him they give chase, but Pokes manages to elude them.

Just as he believes himself secure, Pokes blunders in upon the outlaws who are surprised at the sudden appearance and allow themselves to be captured by Pokes with the aid of their own guns. As Pokes marches his captives to the front of the post-office, as Jabbs is praising him for his wonderful feat, as the village belles rush to kiss him, fate steps in and instead of a hero, Pokes finds himself once again the village boob.

THE FABLE OF THE SLIM GIRL WHO TRIED TO KEEP A DATE THAT WAS NEVER MADE (Sept. 13).—Once there lived a Slim Girl who led a lonely life in a rube town, dreaming of her ideal. But the party failed to show up. Things went from bad to worse and from worse to Waukegan, where she married Ernest, who had been kicked in the head by a mule and believed everything he read in the Daily Sun. Ernest could put an auvil into a farm wagon if anyone wanted to bet him the segars, but every time he lifted an axe something caught him in the small of the back and he had to lie down. One day Ernest, being too lazy to move into the shade, was sunstruck and passed away without an effort. The widow put all the money into a marble shaft marked "At Rest." She was looked upon as a martyr. However, she became the wife of Mr. Gladden, who owned the general store. Gladden built a new house; they hired a girl, and had the washing sent out. She had everything she wanted. Consequently, the Slim Girl was very miserable, thinking of the jewel she had lost.

AFTER THE BATTLE (Special Release—Two Parts—Sept. 18).—The cast: Rebecca Wright (Victoria Forde); Gen. Phil Sheridan (Wm. Clifford).

At the Embassy ball in Washington, Phil Sheridan, then only a captain in the army, meets Rebecca Wright. He also meets her brother, George, and promises to help him if ever he can be of assistance.

Some time later the Wrights return home and a ball is given in their honor. Clem Shelby, an old friend, attends the ball and proposes to Carlyn Fairfax, a young Quakeress, who is visiting the Wrights. But Carlyn refuses him, and thus gives rise to bad feelings between the two families.

When the war breaks out, George enlists with the Union, and Clem gets up a Confederate company. George is given a commission and made a member of Sheridan's staff. The war goes on for three years with the varying fortunes of each side. The time comes when Sheridan's troops are stationed in the vicinity of the Wright homestead, and the old darky servant, Uncle Ephriam, gets into the Union lines, ostensibly to sell supplies, but really to give George a message from Carlyn, who is still at the Wright home. George sees his chance to use the old man as a spy, and gives him a message to take back. In this way Carlyn is enabled to tell him the disposition of the Confederate troops, and Sheridan at once wires to Washington.

Then comes Sheridan's famous ride. He is quietly dining with the other officers of his mess when word comes that the battle is raging in the front. Sheridan mounts his horse and with a band of his personal guard, sets out for the battle, twenty miles away. The little party arrives just in time to save the day, but in the fray George is wounded by a shell that explodes near him. Clem sees George fall, and is about to run his sabre into the prostrate man when a shell ends his life and our hero is saved.

Carlyn, coming out on the field of battle after it is all over to help care for the sick, finds George, and it is due to her care and nursing that he at last recovers and is made a Colonel for the distinguished services that he has rendered the Union. The couple then marry.

hears that the payroll is to arrive. He also meets "Red Ida," a former flame, and agrees to get away to the States after completing one more "job." So he plans to get the payroll.

In the woods Durand overtakes Dexter, and takes the gold. Dexter is dumbfounded as he thinks that it is Dayton who has robbed him, and goes to the camp to report the robbery. In the meanwhile Angel has seen Durand go into the cabin of "Red Ida" and, mistaking him for Dayton, is incensed at the thought that her lover has been untrue. So when Dayton arrives she accuses him of infidelity and orders him out of the house. The poor fellow leaves, dumbfounded.

When Dexter tells that he has been robbed by Dayton, the Mounted Police start out after him and soon overtake him and bring him back to the camp. Durand has gone to the saloon of the camp for a drink. There he is taken for Dayton and pursued, but he manages to hide in the cabin of "Red Ida." Here he is seen by Angel, and she tells the men looking for him where he is.

The Mounted Police with Dayton meet the men with Durand in the saloon, and it is only then that it is discovered that there are two men who look exactly alike. Of course, Dayton's name is quickly cleared, and when Angel sees her mistake she at once begs forgiveness, which is readily granted.

Small idolizes his wife and always thinks of her as the model of womanly virtue. One day one of the Chinese servants takes ill, and Lois goes to their cabin to see the sick man. There she sees an opium pipe, and upon smelling it the odor appeals to her. At last she is persuaded to try the pipe, and in a short time has become addicted to the habit. Her husband notices the change in her and writes her father and sister to come.

On the day that her father and sister are to arrive Lois goes to the hut of the Chinese to get some of the drug. But while she is there the two Chinamen quarrel over the disposition of the money she gives them, and in the struggle the lamp is overturned and the house is set on fire. Lois, thinking that it is better to have her husband think that she is dead than discover the truth, runs out and hides in the woods.

Later she falls lower and lower, until she ends in a low dive. Here her sister finds her and tells the husband, but when they arrive the poor creature is dead. Small is now sadder than ever, as he has not even the tender remembrance of his dead wife to comfort him.

HIS MOTHER'S BOY (Sept. 22).—The cast: Mother (Mrs. Witting); Marston (Kingsley Benedict); the son (Geo. Fernandez); sergeant (Chas. Dorian). Written by E. M. Ingleton. Produced by F. A. Kelsey.

He finally makes his way, badly wounded, to a Southern home, where he is taken care of by the lady of the house. When she has finished bandaging his wounds, she notes by his insignia that he belongs to the same regiment as her son, and questions him about him. But Marston cannot lie to her, and she finally realizes that he is a spy, and is torn between her duty to her country and humanity. While she is debating, they hear some soldiers approaching, and she hides Marston.

The officer and men bring in a body, and she, glad to be of service, starts to work over it when she discovers that it is her own son. She learns from the officer that he has been killed by a spy who was making his way through the lines. She asks the officer to remain outside the door for a few minutes, as she might need him.

Marston, having heard all, comes out and gives up his gun, telling her to give him up, as he regrets deeply what has happened. After a brief struggle with herself, she finally tells the officer that he can go, and she allows Marston to return to the mother who is waiting for him.

Mong); Henry, the butler (Ray Hanford); Hester Bayard, the usurper (Margaret Whistler); John Frugal (Edward Hearne). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Cleo Madison and William V. Mong.

Charnock seeks diversion with a rather fast woman called Hester, who keeps reproaching him because he will not divorce his wife for her. At last she gets exasperated and says that with all his money it ought to be very easy to get rid of the woman, and suggests a private sanitarium. Charnock takes the hint, and sees the head of a sanitarium. A few days later the attendants come and take Alice away.

Some months later there arrives a new assistant at the sanitarium, who is struck by the pathos of the case. He makes an examination and finds that the woman is entirely sane, but when he tells the head physician, the latter gets angry, and says that the subject should never again be mentioned. But the young doctor perseveres, and succeeds in helping Alice to escape. She gets in touch with Henry, the butler, who gives her bad news about the child. The other woman has been installed in the house, and the child gets nothing but abuse all the time. Alice determines to take the child away, and tells the butler to have her ready. Then she goes to a swell modiste and orders a stylish gown. Attired in this, she goes to her former home to confront her husband.

Charnock is astounded when he sees his wife transformed, and thinks that she has come to kill him. But she merely reproaches him, and leaves with her child. But the other woman is jealous, and thinking that she is no longer in favor, kills Charnock. Alice is then free to marry the young doctor.

The voices are tried out and Binks gets the worst of it. He is "blue" when he reads, a few weeks later that his loved one is about to become the bride of Ratto. But the article also says that if at any time before the wedding any one who can beat the tenor at his game he will get the bride. Sitting in the park, a great idea comes to Binks, and it materializes when he hears a tramp singing in the park.

So he takes Antonio and they rush in just as the knot is about to be tied. Binks challenges Ratto, and they prepare to sing. And he would have succeeded in the deception had not Antonio run off with the maid and left him flat.

COLD HEARTS AND HOT FLAMES (Two Parts—Sept. 20).—Mr. Rockabilt has been living on good prospects for the last six years, and owes about three thousand dollars for his board during that time to the proprietor of the hotel where he has been living. The proprietor tries to collect the debt and Billie gives him a bad check. When the man finds that it is bad, he says that Billie has a couple of hours to make good or out he goes.

But the proprietor has a comely daughter, and Billie has a plan. He sends himself a telegram stating that he has been left a fortune of a million dollars, and shows it to the proprietor. The latter at once offers his daughter's hand, and all arrangements are made for the wedding.

But Billie has not paid for the telegram he sent himself, and just as the ceremony is about to be performed the boy comes in and asks for the money. This of course gives the whole thing away and the proprietor is angry, to say the least. He decides that as he needs money he will burn the hotel to get the insurance. So he arranges to have the furnace filled with gasoline and stuffs the janitor in the fire so he cannot squeal.

At last the fire is started and all the guests are excited. But when the proprietor goes to look for the policy he cannot find it, as the rats have eaten it. The old man is frantic and rushes for the fire department to put out the fire. In the meanwhile the daughter has been caught in a top room of the house and is yelling for help. Billie is the only one who is brave enough to go to the rescue. He climbs up the side of the house, but when he gets up he is at a loss to know what to do.

Downstairs the firemen are helpless, and there seems to be no hope, when the gasoline explodes and the whole house ascends to the upper regions. Billie and his sweetheart and a minister all meet in the air and the delayed marriage ceremony is performed then and there.

HIGH SPEED (Sept. 21).—The cast: Irene (Edith Roberts); a drummer (Dana Ong); Steve (Malcolm Blevins); Albert Simpson (Millard K. Wilson). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Millard K. Wilson.

Irene is just a small town girl, but she is very wise when it comes to knowing all the tricks of designing drummers. And she has a big brother Steve, who looks after her. One day there arrives in town Albert Simpson, and he lingers, attracted by the charms of Irene. She is averse to going for motor rides, but Albert prevails and she at last agrees to go if he will promise to be back before dark.

On the road Albert has a breakdown, and Irene, thinking that it is a "stall," telephones Steve to come out. When he gets insulting, Albert gives him a licking and tells him to get out. Then he says to Irene that if she thinks the car is not broken, she can fix it. So Irene has to go under and fix the machine. When she comes out all dirty he makes her kiss him and then says that they are engaged. The poor girl has no alternative, so she agrees.

A few days later it is discovered that Albert is the son of the president of a large manufacturing concern that is going to open up in town, so that Irene is more than delighted with her forced engagement.

NESTOR.

A SILLY SULTAN (Sept. 18).—The cast: Eddie (Eddie Lyons); Lee (Lee Moran); Nita Priscilla Dean); secretary (Harry Nolan); sultan (Fred Gamble). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Eddie and Lee are two American reporters in Turkey. Their main task is to interview the Sultan, but just before the great ordeal, Lee decides that he wants to look at some curios, so Eddie has to go ahead to see the Sultan alone. At the palace he is well received by the Sultan, and is shown the harem. In the harem there is one girl, Nita, who particularly makes an impression on Eddie. And the strange part of it is, that just as he is going out, she slips a note in his hand, saying that she is held captive, and asking for help.

So Eddie makes Lee dress up like a girl, and to the Sultan they go. He is at once struck by her beauty and asks Eddie his price. Eddie says that he is reluctant to part with her, but is willing to exchange her for Nita. The Sultan balks at this, but finally they agree to toss for the two girls on the heads-I-win-tails-you-lose basis. Of course, Eddie quickly strips the Sultan of the girls and soon has the harem, and even the throne.

In the meanwhile, Lee, in the costume of a dancing girl, has fallen into trouble in the harem, when they discover his true sex, and one of the attendants is after him with a knife. Eddie at once pardons his friend, and after picking out a good-looking girl for Lee, they leave, after explaining to the Sultan that the heads-I-win-tails-you-lose game works only one way.

Later Dr. Diven, the family physician, calls; and the young people, seeing a chance to fill out their party, prevail upon him to accompany them and Mrs. Gyblin to the theater.

One of the Gyblin's club friends happens to attend the same performance, and sees Mrs. Gyblin and the doctor in the front seats of a box, without knowing that they are accompanied by the young people. Later, in the presence of his wife, he threatens to "get" the doctor, and rushes out of the house. Mrs. Gyblin, ill as she is, decides to go to the doctor's house and warn him. She arrives there shortly before her husband, and is immediately taken very ill from her exertion. The doctor puts her to bed and cares for her. Gyblin arrives, and breaks into the doctor's house in a fury. He is about to attack the doctor, when he learns that his wife has become a mother. Maurese); Chas. Dalton (Emory Johnson); Zoldene (Gretchen Lederer); Posie Stanton (Virginia Southern); Jim Fisk (Marc Fenton).

Elinor Rossitor, poor but refined, marries Richard Strong, a power in finance. While he is to be gone on his honeymoon, his enemies plot his ruin. They intend giving out false reports as to his dealings with his companies; they are also endeavoring to corner the gold market, and even to carry the plan so far as to bribe some of the Washington officials and to send a fake telegram to President Grant to get him out of Washington so that he cannot order the sale of gold.

One of Strong's clerks overhears part of the plan, and just as Strong is leaving on his honeymoon, manages to give him a tip as to what is going on, but Strong does not attach much importance to it. But telegrams, later, make it necessary for him to return, and this causes a breach between him and Elinor.

Arriving home before his enemies suspect his presence, he takes measures to defeat their plans. Charles Dalton, a friend, aids him, and Strong gives him employment in his office. Dalton becomes friendly with Elinor. When Strong learns of this, he accuses them both of wrongdoing. Elinor refuses to see Dalton, and so he yields to the charms of his wife, Zoldene, who left him soon after their marriage, when she discovered he had no money. Elinor and her father go to Paris, as the old man is failing rapidly.

Strong and President Grant have an interview, and the President wires the Treasury to sell gold, therehy breaking up the clique, and Strong makes millions. Rossitor becomes worse in Paris, and in trying to return with him, they are in great danger from the rioting. It is the time of the revolution. Rossiter sends for Strong, but when he arrives, he can find no trace of either. Then, one night, as he is watching a mob, he finds that it is Elinor who is the centre of the disturhance, and in trying to rescue her, he is injured. When he regains consciousness in his hotel, she is gone.

Dalton and Zoldene are also in Paris—dying, and Dalton sends for Strong, and again tells him the truth about himself and Elinor. This time Strong believes him, but thinks that Elinor no longer loves him. He returns to New York and, thinking to take a last look at the house which was the scene of his loveless marriage, he meets Elinor, who is on the same mission. She tells him that she still loves him and they are reconciled.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

LIBERTY (Episode 6—"The Desert of Lost Souls"—Two Parts—Sept. 18).—The cast: Liberty Horton (Marie Walcamp); Theresa (Maud Emory); Pancho Lopez (G. Raymond Nye); Pedro (Eddie Polo); Capt. Bob Rutledge (Jack Holt); Major Winston (Neal Hart); Manuel Leon (Bertram Grassby); Jose Leon (L. M. Wells). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Liberty and Theresa are still prisoners in the camp of Lopez. Pedro painfully makes his way across the desert toward the on-coming American columns. Rutledge is thus informed of what has occurred at the hacienda.

Lopez plans to lead the Americans into a trap, and carefully mines the hacienda. The Mexicans then vacate the hacienda, taking Liberty and Theresa with them. The man at the detonator is awaiting the signal from Lopez, when Liberty throws herself out of the saddle upon the Mexican, who is setting off the fuse. The explosion which follows does not hurt the Americans, as they have not yet entered the danger zone. Infuriated, Lopez retreats post haste.

Theresa faints and falls from her saddle during the mad rout. Through Manuel, Lopez orders Liberty to write a note, which will lead the Americans through a desolate and waterless waste of desert to her intended rescue. Thus he expects to get them at his mercy. The note states that the Mexicans are taking her to Los Alamos, fifty miles distant. The note is placed in the hands of the now unconscious Theresa, and she is abandoned, to be picked up by the Americans, who by this time are in close pursuit. Rutledge and Major Winston reach Theresa and discover the note. They are about to push on to the rescue of Liberty, when a government aviator arrives with orders from Washington to delay the invasion, pending "Diplomatic Negotiations." Meanwhile Lopez and his men, with Liberty, push on across the desert. In Washington, the President calmly and deliberately pursues his discussions. "Diplomatic Negotiations" while in Mexico the shedding of American blood continues unavenged.

THE GIRL WHO DIDN'T TELL (Three Parts—Sept. 19).—The cast: Doc Belgraff (Charles Ogle); "Silent" McKay (Paul Panzer); Judith (Violet Mersereau); Marshall Rand (Harry Benham); Mrs. Rand, his mother (Nellie Slattery); Helen Rand, his sister (Helen Slosson); James Norton (Johnnie Walker). Written by Harry Dittmar. Produced by Robert F. Hill.

Belgraff is the head of a hand of crooks, and has as one of his assistants an attractive daughter, Judith. In the hand there is a man called "Silent," who is secretly devoted to Judith. One day Belgraff decides to get the Rand diamonds, and orders his daughter to dress up in her swell clothes to do the job. Judith demurs, but her father is stern. So Judith dons her evening clothes and is driven to the Rand home in a car. The butler sees her enter the grounds, and does not know what to make of it, when he sees her faint. The whole household is summoned, and when the doctor pronounces it a case of loss of memory, they decide to take care of the girl.

Several days go by, and not a word has been heard from Judith. "Silent" becomes worried, but old Belgraff tells him that the girl is well able to take care of herself. But when a few more days go by and still nothing has been heard, they decide to look her up. Judith, meanwhile, has been living in a new world. And to add to the interest of the situation, young Rand falls in love with her, and they take long rides together. On one of these rides they meet "Silent" and Belgraff, who have come to see what is detaining her. They are almost caught talking to her by young Rand, but "Silent" has the presence of mind to say that her horse has run away.

But as a few weeks go by and Judith does not get the jewels, Belgraff decides to go after her. One night he and "Silent" enter the house and make their way to her room. They are seen by one of the people there, and an alarm is raised. In trying to escape, Belgraff is shot, and falls from the roof to his death, but "Silent" is caught. The butler then accuses Judith of being in league with these men. It is a tense moment, but "Silent," when questioned, says that he never saw the girl before in his life. So he is taken into custody and led away, and the girl is left to live our her days in happiness, as young Rand has asked her to be his wife.

TIMOTHY DOBBS, THAT'S ME (Episode No. 6, "He Almost Lands an Angel"—Two Parts—Sept 18).—The cast: Timothy Dobbs (Carter De Haven); Jeff (Robert Milash); Mr. Richman (Mr. Horne); Nellie, his daughter (Mina Cunard); The Director (Hayward Mack); Frenchman (Dan Duffy). Written by Bess Meredyth. Produced by Wallace Beery.

Timothy sets out for the studio. Nellie Richman, whose father has so much money it hurts him to carry it, is trying to learn to drive a new car. The chauffeur gets out for something, and Nellie, fooling with the levers, starts the car. She yells for help, and the car careens down the road. Timothy is crossing the street, and the car hits him. It is not a case of heroics, but necessity, that causes him to cling to the machine, and trying to get away, he pulls the emergency brake and stops the car. He is hailed by the crowd as a hero, and Nellie insists on taking him home to meet papa.

Papa is much interested in movies, and is almost begging some one to take his money. Timothy interests him, and wanting to show his appreciation, Richman offers to give him work at five thousand per week, and let him manage the concern. Timothy airily tells him to postpone the discussion until the morrow, as he wants to think it over. He makes a strong impression upon his new friends.

By strategy, Timothy gets in the gate, and his usual luck attending him, secures a part in a picture. It is a booh part, and he is splendid in it. Then the director decides to use him in a hero part, and Timothy makes a failure of the whole thing. Nellie and her father have called at the studio to look around and see him. At first his nonchalant air charms them, but finally they see what a sorry actor he really is, and give him the "go-by." Richman has brought the contract and tried to get Timothy to sign it when he first came, but Timotby, wishing to show off, declined. Richman now tears the contract into bits and Timothy, thrown off the stage, lands where the hits are scattered.

FANTOMAS (Episode No. 3—"The Mysterious Finger Print"—Three Parts—Sept. 21).—The cast: The Banker Nanteuil, The Man in Black, and Police Officer (Victor Navarre); Cranajour and Inspector Juve (James Breon); Fandor (Louis Melchior); Jack Dillon (Luitz Morat); Lady Beltham (Renee Carl); Princess Sonia Danidoff (Jane Faber); Elizabeth Dillon (Francine Fabreges).

After the explosion which destroyed the villa of Lady Beltham at Neuilly, Fandor was taken to a hosnital, where he recovered from his injuries. There was no trace of either Fantomas or Juve, the detective. A body was identified as that of Juve, and Fandor gave his friend up as dead.

Mother Toulouche kept a second hand store near the Sante Prison, which was a clearing house for thieves' plunder. She took into her house an idiot named Cranajour. A murder mystery filled the imagination of this half-witted fellow. An artist named Jack Dillon had been found in a stupor with a woman dead in his room. After being taken to prison he was strangled, and the body removed from the cell without knowledge of the authorities.

Fandor searched one of the sewers of Paris in seeking for clues. This sewer also served as a passage for stolen goods taken to Mother Toulouche's store from boats on the Seine. Nibet, a prison guard in league with the thieves, came upon Fandor in the sewer and attempted to kill him, but Cranajour pushed Fandor into the water where it was supposed that he had been drowned.

Princess Sonia Danidoff was a guest of honor at n ball given for her by n sugar magnate, Thomery, whom she was to marry. A guest known as n prosperous banker, Nanteuil, steals her penri necklace valued at $200,000, but when the finger prints found on the Princess' neck are examined, the authorities are surprised to find that they are those of Dillon, the dend artist. Nanteuil sent for Lady Beltham, and through her lured Thomery into his power. It was his intention to gamble in sugar stocks, using Thomery's name.

Elizabetb Dillon, sister of the dead artist, sent for Fnndor to help her decipher a code message sho had found in her brother's home. Fantomas attempted to kill the girl, since she possessed evidence against him. Ilis plan was foiled by Fandor, who introduced himself into one of the bandit's hiding places by concealing himself in n basket. In tbis room he found the body of tbe banker, Thomery, with fingerprints which would indicnte tbe man had been strangled by Dillon. THE SABLE BLESSING (American—Five Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: John Slocum (Richard Bennett); Mary (Rhea Mitchell); Bess (Adrienne Morrison); Steele (Charles Newton); Crow (George Periolat); Uncle Henry (Alfred Hollingsworth). Scenario written by Anthony W. Coldeway. Directed by George L. Sargent.

John Slocum has always been a worthy young man. When a boy of twelve his Uncle Henry introduced him to little Bess De Voe, telling them that when they grew up they should marry. John's uncle sends him to the New York manager of a publishing house with instructions to "give him a job at what he is worth, and keep him on until he makes good." John thanks him, but stipulates that he does not intend to marry Bess.

As the story opens, John is living in a New York boarding house. There is a waitress and general slavey there, called Little Mary, with whom John is in love. He tells her the "sad" story of his life, makes himself out good for nothing, and then proposes to her. They agree to start a joint bank account and save up to get married. For months they pinch and save.

As time goes on Uncle Henry pays a visit to the city. John insists that his uncle shall take lunch with him. John takes Uncle Henry to his room, and the "old boy" is amazed to find that John has pictures of motion picture actresses plastered all over his walls, and that his own favorite and ward, Bess, is the bright particular star of the exhibit. John, however, is unaware of the real identity of the actress, and is still in love with Mary. After lunch Mary is introduced, but the uncle only frowns and carries John away to Bess. Uncle Henry declares that they must marry or he is through with them.

Mary finds two tickets for a Belgian Relief Fund raffle, and with John she goes down to see what the ticket has won. To their great surprise he wins a sable overcoat. John puts it on. It feels fine, but he declares they will pawn it next day. John swells up in the coat. Everybody laughs at the contrast between it and his suit and shoes. Finally he gets a suit and shoes to match the coat in elegance, taking the money out of the "hope chest."

By this time the joint bank account of John and Mary has ebbed away until the original balance of $381.20 has shrunk to $103.06. At this dark moment John overhears his boss and a friend discussing stocks and predicting that American Airoplanes stock will jump a mile before night, and that a hundred dollars will make a young fortune. John takes the cue and buys American Airoplanes. He watches the market closely, pyramiding his stock, and while Uncle Henry is demanding of Bess that she marry John instantly John is piling up a fortune. The broker hands him his check. Bundles and packages commence to arrive for him at the boarding house. Mary surveys the pile in dismay as she wonders where the joint account has gone. When John comes, Mary tells him to go marry Bess with all her fine clothes. John hands her a fat roll of bills, and tells her to go and buy clothes.

John leaves the boarding house and Mary becomes despondent. She determines to dress up and win him back. John has gone to visit Bess in obedience to a request from her. He meets Bess at the tavern, and she takes a large amount of money from him. Mary, finely dressed, appears at the tavern. Crow, the boss of the publishing house, sees her and likes her appearance.

It so happens that Bess has prevailed upon John to take her to the Tavern also, and they occupy a booth near to the one in which Crow is trying to ply Mary with wine. Crow contrives to let Mary see John and Bess in their booth. Crow drags Mary away, but John has seen her and dashes after.

He locates Crow and Mary in a booth to which Crow has forcibly taken her, and John casts Crow violently aside and embraces Mary. Crow recovers sufficiently to beg Mary's pardon, while Bess departs. Late as is the hour, John finds a minister and marries Mary.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX (Episode No. 5—"Mimosa San"—Two Parts—Sept. 4).—Mimosa San is a little Japanese girl in love with Hako Satsu, a secret agent of the Japanese government. Satsu receives word from his government that it would like to secure the plans of a remarkable rifle sight that has just been invented by John Brayton. Brayton, however, has just disposed of them to the United States War Department.

Satsu contrives to get the plans. He calls in Anna Cortes, a pretty Spaniard, to help him carry out a plot for stealing them. They meet in a restaurant where Mimosa San is employed as a cashier. Mimosa sees them and becomes jealous. She writes a letter to Beatrice Fairfax asking for advice.

Jimmy Barton, a newspaper reporter, is given an assignment to interview Brayton on his invention. Brayton refuses to see him and Jimmy returns to the office. Beatrice Fairfax shows him the letter from Mimosa San and they go to the restaurant where she is employed. Mimosa shows them Satsu and Anna again talking together. Jimmy decides to go to Brayton's residence for another attempt at an interview. As he is nearing the Brayton country home, he notices an automobile hurrying away. He catches a passing glance of two persons he believes to be the Jap and the Spanish woman.

When he reaches the Brayton home, he finds it in a turmoil. Brayton is just returning to consciousness. His plans have been stolen. He tells about being called outside to give assistance to a woman hurt in an automobile accident. He had assisted her companion to carry her into his house. Once inside, the two turned on him, beat him into insensibility and stole the plans. The man, he believed, was a Jap.

Jimmy hurries to his office and writes the story of the theft of the plans. Then, with Beatrice, he again goes to the tea garden where Mimosa is employed. While they are talking to her, she receives a telephone message which changes her from despairing grief to radiant happiness. She refuses to answer further questions and hurries from the room. Beatrice follows the girl while Jimmy goes to a detective's office and meets Brayton. Beatrice sees Mimosa enter the apartment of Anna. Satsu is there. He explains that his friendliness for Anna was only for the good of their country and shows her the stolen plans.

Beatrice hurries away and phones Jimmy, who, with the detectives, swoop down upon the place. The detectives search Satsu, recover the plans and hand them to Brayton. While the detective's back is turned, Mimosa San seizes his revolver. She turns the tables on the detectives, including Jimmy and Beatrice. Holding them at bay, Mimosa San and Satsu escape through a rear door.

Jimmy, Beatrice and the detectives, after the departure of the Japs start in pursuit. The two reach the bay, jump into a launch, and are pushing away just as the pursuers, with Jimmy and Beatrice at their head, appear. Mimosa San is crouched in the stern, while Satsu is navigating the craft. Jimmy draws his revolver and is about to fire, when Beatrice stops him.

"Let her have him," she pleads. "We have the plans." Together they stand on the pier, as the launch drifts out to sea.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX (Episode No. 6—"The Forbidden Room"—Two Parts—Sept. 11).—Jimmy Barton, the reporter and amateur sleuth, is given an assignment to hunt down a gang of counterfeiters who have been passing spurious bills. He tells Beatrice Fairfax about it. She has just received a letter from John Miles, who writes her that his fiancee, who was to have met him at church, has mysteriously disappeared, and that Madame Gaillard, her employer, denies all knowledge of her whereabouts. After consulting with Moran, the United States Secret Service agent, about the counterfeiters, Jimmy and Beatrice start out to try to locate Jean Moore, the missing girl.

The scene reverts to the interior of Madame Gaillard's home. Jean is at work in the library and starts toward the door of a rear room. Madame appears and warns her never to attempt to enter that room again. Later in the day, Jean's curiosity overcomes her and she enters the room and finds various articles for making counterfeit money. While she is there, Madame surprises her. A desperate struggle follows, which results in Madame overpowering Jean, and locking her up in a deserted chamber. Then she circulates the story that Jean has left her employ.

Madame goes out and is seen travelling from store to store, making trifling purchases, and always paying for them in bills. In a drug store, where she stops, Jimmy Burton also happens to be making a purchase. He offers a large bill in payment and the clerk gives him, among his change, the bill he has just received from Madame. Jimmy thinks it looks strange, and follows the old woman, and is satisfied she is passing the spurious money. As she nears her home, Madame realize she is followed. She enters a small restaurant adjoining her home, from which there is a secret passage to the cellar of her house. Jimmy follows her into the restaurant, but the man in charge declares the woman never entered there.

Meantime Beatrice has gone to the home of Miles. She learns the location of the house where Jean was employed and together they go there. As they alight in front of the house, they encounter Jimmy, who has lost all trace of the woman he has followed. The three enter the restaurant. It is deserted. Jimmy goes into the back room, just in time to see a trap door slowly being raised. Concealing himself, he waits until the restaurant keeper, who is really one of the counterfeiters, emerges. With the assistance of Miles, he binds and gags the man. Then, he, Miles and Beatrice pass through the trap door.

In the dark passage where they find themselves, they hear a woman's muffled screams. The scene changes and shows Jean attempting to escape. Madame Gaillard loses her wig and is revealed as a man, the leader of the counterfeiters. Prior to this, Jimmy, satisfied that he was on the right trail, has Beatrice telephone Moran and the latter, with a force of his operatives, starts for the place.

Jimmy and Miles overpower the supposed Madame Gaillard, and rescue Jean. She tells them the story of the counterfeiters and they start for the cellar. After they have gone, Gaillard succeeds in freeing himself and starts by another passage-way to warn the other members of the gang. They arrive in the cellar about the same time. A battle follows: The counterfeiters are winning when Moran and his men arrive. Gaillard is shot dead in the fight, and the others overpowered. John and Jean are happily reunited, while Jimmy and Beatrice hurry away to tell the world, through their newspaper, of the capture of the counterfeit gang.

THE PATH OF DARKNESS (Five Parts—Norbig Film Co.).—Charles Bainbridge, a stock broker, incurs the secret enmity of his partner, Charles Taylor, by winning the favor of Madge Conners, a "girl of the white lights." Bainbridge goes to the mountains for a vacation and meets Marie Martin, a poor blind girl. The girl wins his heart, and when he returns to the city he breaks off his relations with Madge. Bob Summers, an artist, camping near Marie's home, meets her. She is a protege of the old priest, and Summers is inspired to paint a picture of her kneeling at the altar of the church.

Bainbridge goes back to the mountains to ask the girl to marry him, leaving a power of attorney with Taylor. He arrives as Summers is on the verge of proposing. He wins Marie, they are married by the old priest, and he takes her to his city home.

In the meantime Madge and Taylor have gotten together, and through the misuse of the power of attorney invest Bainbridge's money in worthless stocks and depart. When Bainbridge reaches the city with his bride he finds himself ruined. He takes to drink, is soon swallowed in the whirlpool of life, and drags Marie down to abject poverty.

Madge has been traveling the downward path, and occupies a room in a cheap tenement. Bainbridge and Marie, with their infant, rent the adjoining room. Bainbridge meets Madge in the hall and in a fit of rage attacks her, but Madge's companion—a burly longshoreman—gives him a severe beating.

A few days later, while looking for work, Bainbridge again meets Madge's friend, and the quarrel is renewed, resulting in Bainbridge's death at the hands of the ruffian. Summers sees the crowd of people watching the arrest and recognizes Bainbridge.

Marie's baby is ill, and becoming alarmed she asks Madge to lead her to a hospital. Still burning with vindictiveness against Bainbridge, Madge guides Marie to a dive. The sight of the innocent face of the baby and the contrast of Marie's purity finally touches her heart, however, and she takes Marie and the baby to a hospital. On the way home the women meet Summers, who does not reveal his identity to Marie. He accompanies them home, and when Madge goes to her room he tells her of the death of Bainbridge and the arrest of his assailant.

Madge is touched with remorse, and Summers arranges with her to lead Marie to his studio every day to pose as a model. As the months go by Marie learns to love the kindly man who has enabled her to earn a living for herself and child, and Madge realizes the folly of her past life and becomes religiously inclined. Summers finally reveals his identity to the blind girl and receives her consent to wed him. Madge takes the veil and devotes the rest of her life to deeds of charity and kindness.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (Chapter 18—"The Bitter Truth"—Two Parts—Sept. 18).—The cast: Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke); Dr. Stephen Royce (Henry Kolker); Richard Freneau (David Powell); David Stafford (William Roselle); Pierpont Stafford (William T. Carleton); Lois Stafford (Jule Power); Judge Freeman (Henry Weaver); Gideon Trask (Frank McGlynn); Nell Trask (Helen Hart); Frank Mulry (Frank Belcher).

Gloria Stafford, after forcing confessions from the lips of Doctor Royce and Judge Freeman as to what happened the night her fiance, Richard Freneau, was killed, learns that all the evidence points toward her own brother, David Stafford, as the murderer. She finds David and leads him to the upper room in which Gideon Trask, the man Gloria has seen choking Freneau to death, is recovering from injuries received when he was captured aboard his barge in the Hudson river. Gloria believes David must have hired Gideon to commit the murder, and that when he is brought face to face with the man he will confess.

David is puzzled as to why Gloria takes him upstairs, and Gloria is amazed to discover Trask gone—he having been aided to escape by Judge Freeman, who feared a confession would fasten the guilt upon David Stafford. Later Gloria mets Lois Stafford, David's wife, and shows her the packet of letters she had written Freneau, and which Doctor Royce had extracted from the dead man's pocket to return to her, but which had fallen into Gloria's hands instead. Gloria demands that Lois confess all to David.

Lois refuses and tries to hurl herself to death on a nearby railroad track, but is prevented by Gloria. Relenting completely, Gloria gives Lois her letters and the latter immediately tears them to shreds. Satisfied that only more unhappiness will follow her further attempts to solve the mystery Gloria confesses that she has given up her attempt to bring Freneau's murderer to justice, much to the relief of all. Later Frank Mulry, Freneau's partner, calls to pay back the $10,000 Freneau had borrowed from Pierpoat Stafford, and admits to Gloria that it was he who mailed Freneau's letters to her, the ones which had so puzzled her when she received them following her fiance's death. Satisfied that her former lover was as despicable as he had been accused of being, Gloria tears up Muiry's check.

WORLD FILM CORP.

FRIDAY THE THIRTEENTH (Peerless—5 Parts—Sept. 18).—The cast: Robert Brownley (Robert Warwick); Peter Brownley (Clarence Harvey); Judge Lee Sands (Charles Brandt); Beulah Sands (Gerda Holmes); Count Varnecloff (Montagu Love); Simone (Lenore Harris). Directed by Emile Chautard.

So phenomenal was the success of Robert Brownley on the stock market he was called "The Napoleon of Wall Street." Operating with him was his father, Peter Brownley, a long-time enemy of Judge Lee Sands of Virginia.

The story opens with Judge Lee Sands bankrupt because Peter Brownley had given him a false tip on the market. Sands had invested not only his own money, but funds of which he was the trustee. His daughter, Beulah, comes to New York to work and through mutual friends, secures a position as confidential secretary to the Brownleys, under the name of Beulah Lee, and Bob Brownley falls in love with her, but she steels herself against him because of the wrongs the Brownleys have done her father.

Peter Brownley's second wife, Simone, a woman much younger than he, is carrying on a secret intrigue with Count Varaeloff and later transfers her affections to her stepson, Bob, who has neither regard nor respect for her, and because of this, Simone becomes his bitter enemy.

Judge Sands comes to New York and playing upon Beulah's sympathy and love for him, turns her against the Brownleys until she is willing to betray all their business secrets, and spying upon the Brownley operations, she gives her father a tip on which he makes a new fortune.

Beulah gives her father a tip on Salanico Steel with the result that it nearly causes a panic, and Bob learns that Beulah has betrayed him, and when she tells him the reason for her deception was her desire to avenge her father, he forgives her and they elope, believing their marriage would end the feud between the two families.

Bob Brownley brings his bride home and going into the library finds the body of Judge Sands lying face downwards on the floor in a pool of blood. Bob hears a noise behind the curtains and drawing them aside discovers his father, and by the look of guilt on his face, Bob, heartbroken, believes he committed the murder.

Hearing the police coming, they stumble against a screen which falls to the floor, revealing Simone crouching in terror, pleading piteously that she is not responsible for the crime. The police enter, followed by Beulah, and in the same room discover Varneloff, hidden behind the portieres. The police sergeant refuses to allow anyone to examine the body. Just as they are all about to be arrested, Judge Sands himself enters holding by the collar a shabby derelict. Then, for the first time, the sergeant turns the body over, and it proves to be Wilder.

Judge Sands informs the police that while he was waiting in the library he heard an unusual noise. Turning down the lights, he surprised a burglar, who entered to pillage Brownley's safe. As Wilder enters the room, the burglar aimed at Judge Sand, but shot and killed Wilder. Jumping from the window, he was chased by Judge Sands, who called the servants and other police.

Daniels, the district attorney, becomes ill and Norton succeeds to his position. He convicts on circumstantial evidence an old man who obviously could not have committed the crime and is not guilty. As sentence is pronounced, the old man dies on the witness stand. Mona, in the gallery, is amazed at the injustice of it, and writes to a newspaper a scathing denunciation of the case under an assumed name.

The breach widens between husband and wife. Mona pleads with Norton to change his tactics, but he knows that his record has made him a favorite with the public, and that he is in line for the governorship of the state. Tommy has secured work as heli-boy in the Arcadia Hotel. In a jealous rage Ryan kills Pearl Le Claire, but the evidence points directly to Tommy. The boy gives the name of John Smith, not wishing to bring disgrace upon his sister, and is takeu to the Tomhs. Mona sees his picture in the newspaper. She rushes to him. He insists that he did not commit the murder, and convinces her of his innocence. She goes to her husband and begs him to give up this case, but he tells her that Ryan will make him governor of the state if he wins it. She confesses that Tommy is her hrother, hut even that does not influence him.

Norton has a laboratory adjacent to his library, where he experiments with poisons and chemicals in preparing for his cases. Among his bottles is one containing a harmless sedative. Mona changes the labels on some of the bottles. That night, while her husband is working wlth his stenographer in the lihrary, Mona feigns hysteria. Norton rushes to the laboratory, snatches up the hottle which he supposes contains the sedative, and gives her some of the contents. Mona now simulates an agony of pain. Servants and policemen rush in, and she accuses her hushand of having poisoned her. He swears that he did not, but all the evidence is against him. Circumstantial evidence proves that he has attempted to kill her. He begs her to forgive his hardness of heart—he promises to do anything in the world for her if she will only live.

Obtaining his promise not to prosecute her brother, Mona sits up, smiles, and makes him admit that circumstantial evidence may be wrong; also, that she is the best little actress in the world. Tommy is released, and as Ryan confesses, the real culprit is brought to justice wlthout the aid of circumstantial evidence.

Senor Garcia, who is the Nomonza diplomatic agent in Washington, has two daughters, Nina and Camilla, who live with him, and a son, Carlos, a lieutenant in Nomonza's army. Nomonza suspects Senor Garcia of treachery and sends Jose, his favorite spy, to Washington, with the orders of dismissing Garcia and charging him with treason.

The unjust accusation so humiliates Garcia that he dies of heart failure. Garcia's two daughters return to the family estate in Mexico and Nina undertakes to assist her brother Carlos in the servicc of Nomonza, believing that their efforts may clear the Garcia name from disgrace.

Jose, always willing to lend his sympathies to the stronger faction, has meanwhile joined the Torrenti forces, and one of his missions is to capture Carlos Garcia and take from him an important message which he is known to be conveying for Nomonza. The spy leads his forces to attack the Garcias at their home, and while Jose attempts to force his attentions upon Nina, other Mexican brigands attack Camilla wlth the purpose of carrying her away. Nina pleads with Jose that her sister may be spared and finally consents to his demands that Nina shall become a spy for Torrenti, while her sister is held as hostage hy Jose's mother.

Nina is forced, by Josc, to enter the Nomonza military hospital under the guise of a nurse. There she meets Dr. Ralph Hamiln, an American military surgcon. Whlle in the hospital, Nina is forced by Josc to proceed on various errands and secures a number of important documents which she turns over to the Torrenti spy.

Ultimately Nomonza discovers Nina's true occupation. Just as he is ahout to arrest her, the girl herself imposes an experiment upon her own system whereby she hopes to prove the value of Dr. Hamlin's serum. Nina remains in the hospital for some time lingering hetween life and death. Josc, moved by conscience, permits Camilla to visit her sister's hedside aud she remains there until Nina ultimately recovers sufficiently for Nomonza to arrest her and order her execution.

In the meanwhile, Nomonza has executed Jose and when Nina is led forth to be shot, Dr. Hamlin realizes as he has never done before how necessary the girl has become, not only as an assistant, hut because he now realizes he is in love with her. The American's pleas for clemency are unavailing and the firing squad is ordered to execute its mission.

While these events have heen taking place Mexican handits have raided an American town and involved the United States Army In the settlement of the difficulty. Thus it is that the American troops are approaching the town where Nomonza has his headquarters on the day that Nina is condemned to be shot, and at the moment the firing squad is to execute Nomonza's orders, a hrilliant cavalry charge brings the soldiers of Uncle Sam to Nina's rescue.

Harry Weatherby is a disappointment of his millionaire father, who hopes to make him a captain of industry. Instead, Harry is a ne'er-do-well. While visiting Dr. Cameron, a friend of the family, he sees Mary Ellen across the way, and a flirtation starts. It eventually results in marriage. Harry is afraid to break the news to his stern father; his mother does, and he does.

Enraged, Weatherby visits Mary and tries to buy her off. But she spurns his money, and he changes his tactics. He tells her he likes her, that he will give a party in honor of the marriage. He enlists the aid of Silk Harrington, who brings along a number of his smart tenderloin friends who pass themselves off as society. They influence her to drink, and soon she is acting very foolish. Harry arrives, sees her condition, and denounces her, thinking this is her true self.

Harry's father leaves her a check for $10,000 before he goes, if she will promise never to see Harry again. She crumples the check in her hand, when the truth dawns upon her, and it is later picked up by Silk Harrington, who plans to use it. Mary goes home, thoroughly crushed and humiliated. She tries to commit suicide, but a friend, Kate Weld, a trained nurse, who lives across the hall, and Dr. Cameron save her life. Learning she is a stranger in New York, Dr. Cameron takes her to his country home to recuperate. Harry plunges into business to forget, and his father is happy. Mary recovers her health, but her faith is shattered. She wants to go out into the world now and have a good time. Dr. Cameron argues in vain. He decides to take her sightseeing.

First he takes her to Cherry's, then to the Haymarket, where she sees the broken-down men and women. He tells her that is the price that must be paid. Lastly he takes her to his mission on the East Side. Here he tells her a story. He, too, was in love and lost. He tried everything in his pursuit of forgetfulness, and finally discovered solace for his sorrow in hrightening the lives of others. Mary tells him she, too, wants to do this work. Meanwhile Harrington tries to pass the check. Harry is summoned to the bank and learns the truth through Harrington. He goes home and a hig scene follows hetween him and his father. He eventually locates Mary. At first she does not want to forgive him, but she finally capituiates.

THE PHANTOM FORTUNE (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: Zalmon Pinsker (Barney Bernard); Mrs. Pinsker (Mrs. Moscowitz); Bob Deering (James Morrison); Ike Mandell (Lester Bernard); Ahie Lefkowitz (Edward Elkas); Molly Sherman (Adele DeGrande); Mrs. Gallagher (Mary Maurice). Scenario written by Samuel Tauher. Directed by Paul Scardon.

Bob Deering on his way to business meets his sweetheart, Molly Sherman. He arrives at Milliken & Co., stock hrokers, his place of employment, just in time to save Herman, Zalmon Pinsker's 14-year-old son, from a very rough voygagement with the other messengers in the office. For this act Herman takes him to his father's shop and obtains a suit at wholesale, and it is here that Bob meets Ike Mandell, who is in love with Dora, the daughter of Pinsker.

Previous to this meeting Pinsker re-engaged Mandell after having hired and fired him at least ten times, and also just previous to Bob's arrival with Herman, Moses Hecht and Israel Glassman had an argument with Mandell, who, trying to look after Piusker's business, tried to force them to pay certain notes which had been endorsed by Pinsker. Mrs. Pinsker and Dora arrive and realize that if Pinsker keeps up this pace of unorganized charity they will have little if any chance of obtaining the new dresses for which they came.

Later the stock market closes on account of the war, and hoth Herman and Bob are out of a job. Boh calls upon Molly, who is a telepbone operator in a hotel. There he meets "Red" Dorgan, who interests him in war orders. Clothing, sweaters, and shirts are needed for the allied armies, so Boh goes to Pinsker and agrees to get him a contract that will nt once make him a rich man. Pinsker is overjoyed. Bob returns to Dorgan, and it is arranged tbat the manufacturer shall meet tbe commission. Ike Mandell has a cousin, Abie Lefkowitz, another clothing manufacturer, and he feels that if he can give Pinsker the double cross and get the business for Lefkowitz he will he able to marry Dora.

Ike arranges with Dorgan to switch the order to Lefkowitz, who has to give Ike an advance commission of $6,000 for his work. Bob apprises Molly of what he has done for Pinsker; but she has her misgivings about Dorgan. The contestants for the big war order is requested hy the commission, which has quarters in the hotel in which Molly is a telephone operator, to have samples of their goods at the commission's offices. The different clothing manufacturers comply, and when each at different times receives a most encouraging reply concerning their samples each refuses domestic orders so that all time possible may he devoted to the commission's order. The hotel detective becomes suspicious and after a short conversation with a Scotland Yard man who has been on Dorgan's trail for months, they, with Boh, examine the commission's quarters. They are now firmly convinced that the scheme is a fake, and Bob conveys this information to Pinsker. He is greatly discomfited over the revelation, but Bob gets an idea which will net Pinsker a considerable sum. All the other clothing manufacturers are refusing domestic orders pending advices frou the commission, so Bob helps Pinsker to corner the home market. This scheme is successfully executed. Ike Mandell, jealous, is busy instituting a strike among the employes, but his plan is soon frustrated by Bob Lefkowitz scenting that something is wrong, goes to the hotel, where he is told of the fake affair The crooks are captured.

It is then that Lefkowitz tells of a $6,000 check and that it was made out to Boh. The police now go with Lefkowitz to the shop of Pinsker, where they try to fasten the check upon Bob, but he has given it to Dorgan, and Pinsker agrees that if his is the only signature on it, he, Pinsker, will make good for Bob. Molly goes to Pinsker, whc introduces her to his new partner, Bob Deering, and assures her that she need not "hello" any more if she will marry this live business man. Molly is pleased, and is further glad to know that Mandell has lost out with Dora, who is going to marry Glassman, who is now making his fortune through Bob's methods of wide-awake business.

They find a cabin and are compelled by the increasing storm to stay there all night. Beatrice calls Hardwicke to her room and with an impulse born of a feminine fear of the storm clings to him. Merriam, also marooned on the island, comes unexpectedly upon them and plans to use the situation as future blackmailing capital.

Merriam and Marion proceed to bleed them regularly, increasing their demands when John Burton falls in love with Beatrice. Merriam arranges his affairs so that should he die, copies of the blackmailing story will be placed in John Burton's hands and the editors of the papers. Merriam is killed by an auto and Hardwicke rushes to Burton's home and tells the story. Burton rises to his characteristic noble nature and prevents its being published. THE GRIP OF EVIL (Episode No. 8—Two Parts—Sept. 4).—John Burton, tenth Lord Castleton and multi-millionaire, remembering the happy life of honest poverty he led before he fell heir to his title and his millions, decides to live the simple life for a time and forget if he can, his belief that humanity is in the grip of evil.

Following this plan, he takes up quarters in a furnished flat in a poor part of town. In this tenement house are the Irrepressibles, three young art students, struggling toward fame and fortune. They are in funds the night he moves in and are having a feast. To welcome the stranger, they invite him to their spread and he meets Mary Ames, a struggling sculptress, who also lives in the house. Evan Parker, a successful artist, searching for a model of a certain type, comes to the Irrepressibles, hoping they can put him on the track of this model. By chance, he sees a statue Mary Ames made. He asks her who was her model as he wants the girl to pose for him. She tells him she was her own model, and posed for the statue in a mirror as she modeled it in clay. He asks her to come and pose for him, giving her his address.

The next day Mary decides to pose for Parker. She goes to his studio and Parker becomes infatuated with her. Finally, as he is going abroad, he proposes that she accompany him to Paris, where she can study under the best masters. It is understood they are not to be married.

Burton has taken the job as assistant to Brother Billy, a man who does not believe humanity is in the grip of evil, and who is doing his best to help the poor of his section of the city. He also becomes interested in Mary Ames and finding her in tears one evening asks her to marry him. She, thinking he is a poor man, tells him that the grind of poverty will crush the joy out of their lives. She shows him Parker's letter asking her to accompany him abroad, and when John tells her she cannot go, she says she will not decide until Parker comes to call. She says this in such a manner that John knows the answer will be "Yes" and he decides to stop Parker from calling.

John goes to Parker's studio and finds him about to start for Mary's. He pleads with the artist, but the latter resents the interference with his plans and says he will take Mary abroad with him, if she will go. Burton then resorts to physical force to prevent Parker from seeing Mary and in the fight that follows he breaks Parker's arm. Burton is arrested, but he feels happy to think that he has prevented Parker from going to Mary, who has decided to accompany the artist to Paris. Burton still thinks humanity is in the grip of evil.

THE FEAR OF POVERTY (Gold Rooster Play—Five Parts—Sept. 11).—A struggling family lose their toilsome savings of years with the failure of a savings bank. With it all hopes are lost of leaving the sordid city behind and of building a cottage in the country. The shattered dream instills within the heart of the daughter the fear of poverty, which clings to her throughout her life. Even after she has married and wealth comes to her the constant fear haunts her.

A daughter is born, and surfeited by every luxury, she develops a narrow and selfish nature. Two men come into her life—an artist whose love is real, and the other, a wealthy social butterfly with a nature narrower than her own. But the artist is not destined for worldly riches, as he paints the truth—people's souls—and he paints a sleeping pose of her because, as he tells her, "Your soul has never been awakened." The mother, prompted by the old fear, forces her to marry wealth.

With the fear of poverty comes a poverty of the soul. Then through her great sorrow her soul is finally awakened to the realization that happiness can spring from humbleness and a true love's redeeming rays finds its saving way to the clouded depths of her heart.

TRIANGLE FILM CORP.

DIANA OF THE FOLLIES (Fine Arts—5 Parts—Sept. 24).—The cast: Diana (Lillian Gish); Phillips Christy (Sam de Grasse); Don Livingston (Howard Gaye); Marcia Christy (Lillian Langdon); Jimmie Darcy (A. D. Sears); Theatrical Manager (Wilbur Higby); Butler (William de Vaull); Bijou Christy (Wilhelmina Siegmann); Girls from the Follies (Adele Clifton, Clara Morris, Helen Walcott and Grace Heins). Directed by W. Christy Cahanne.

Phillips Christy, a millionaire aristocrat, is a man of delightful theories, one of which is that environment is the sum and substance of life. He is writing a book promulgating this theory, which his ambitious sister, Marcia, urges him to finish. His chum, Don Livingston, coaxes him to join a theater party. At a supper after the performance he meets Diana, the gayest of the girls of the Follies. To Diana, Phillips Christy falls captive. He tells his sister he will lift Diana of the Follies to their level—to the heights.

After a few years of married life, Diana wearies of life on the heights. Her husband, engrossed with his studies, does not realize this. She pines for her own people of the theater. Even her child's exquisite charm fails to interest her. Hungry for applause, Diana invites some of her former chums to visit her.

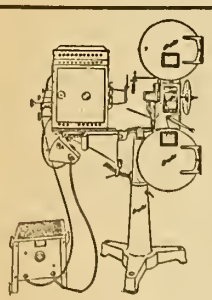
Phillips Christy realizes that his theory has proved false—his wife, after the most careful training toward the uplift, has sought her level in the chorus and filled his house with cigarette-smoking, cocktail-drinking women of the theater. Resentful at her husband's attitude regarding her friends, Diana deserts her husband and child and is immediately installed as the star of the Follies. In the midst of her triumph a message comes to her from her husband requesting her presence at the sick bed of their child. Before she arrives little Bijou, the child, has passed away.

After the sad rites over the little child are performed, Phillips Christy asks Diana if she desires to remain in this home under the protection of his name. She answers him truthfully: "I am going back to my own life, to the people who understand me. You and I walk different paths and talk different languages. Our paths need never cross and we have nothing to say to each other. The one interest that bound us together, our little girl, is no more. Neither of us has anything to forgive, nor to remember. I wish you success and happiness I am going now to seek them for myself."

The husband and wife separate and each knows that the separation is as final as if the world had ceased being.

THE DAWN MAKER (Ince—5 Parts—Sept. 24).—The cast: Joe Elk (William S. Hart); Alice McRae (Blanche White); Bruce Smithson (William Desmond); Walter McRae (J. Frank Burke); Chief Troubled Thunder (Joe Goodhoy).

Joe Elk was a half-breed Indian and greatly admired by Walter McRae, factor of the Big Otter Trading Station, the farthest north of the outflung posts of the Hudson Bay Fur Company. Joe Elk, despite his white blood, had been accepted by the Indian tribe of which his uncle, Troubled Thunder, was chief, and it was settled that upon the death of the uncle, Joe Elk would become chief. Joe Elk had a great longing to visit the cities of the white men and above all worshipped at the shrine of McRae's daughter, Alice. She, unaware, of the feelings she inspired in the Indian, liked him impersonally, as did her father.



Joe Elk visited Montreal with McRae, and when the factor, his daughter, and the Indian returned to the north, they were accompanied by Bruce Smithson, an acknowledged favored suitor for the girl's hand. Joe Elk brought back with him a determination to erect schools and give the children of his tribe the advantages of the white men he had seen in Montreal.

The ideals of Joe Elk were not received in any too friendly a spirit by the Indians, however, and he met with no assistance in his desire to erect his school house. Moreover, he learned that the feelings of the white girl for him were not the same as he held for her, but that, instead, it was Smithson who was the favored suitor for her hand. The unwillingness of his people to aid him in his desire to uplift them embittered Joe Elk, but encouraged by his white friends he stuck doggedly to his task and completed his school house. His determination to follow up the ideals of the whites, caused the tribe to cast him off. Then, he in turn, apprised by Alice McRae that he could never hope to win her, turned from the whites and sought to revert back to the ideals of the Indians.

There came a blizzard. The Indians, shut off from their food supplies, robbed the storehouse of the company, leaving the factor, his daughter and Smithson without food. The protests of Joe Elk were unheeded and in the middle of the night, he was bound captive and forced to desert the outpost with the other Indians. A day's march away he was given his share of the stolen food and then offered the choice of accompanying the tribe or of returning to the whites. He chose the latter course.

McRae, in attempting to protect the food, had been killed. The girl and Smithson faced death from starvation when Joe Elk suddenly appeared and took command of the situation. Followed many days of privation and untold suffering while the three walked many miles across the frozen lands of the north. Unknown to the others, Joe Elk saved his own meager food supply for them. When all three faced death, he forced his food on the man and the girl, sending them on, while he remained behind to meet his Maker.

The girl and the man were saved and Joe Elk, though he died, was the Dawn Maker for his tribe, for the ideals for which he had really died were eventually carried out by the whites, whose devoted admirer he had been.

Quality--Not Footage--Draws the Big Crowds

The show that draws the full house is the one with the sharp, clear pictures that let the interest of the story "get across." All films are improved by projecting through

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses

They are scientifically computed to give clear, snappy detail, with even illumination all over the screen. That's what the public are educated to these days—and what they will pay to see. Ask your operator his opinion of Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers.

Procurable through all film exchanges—and regularly supplied with Edison and Nicholas Power machines.

"SUN-LIT PICTURES"

PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING

The voltage of the "MARTIN" poly-phase converter is maintained constant, so that the starting of the second arc does not disturb the light given by the first, making the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district. Our emergency panel does away with expensive compensarcs and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

You don't need to ring the bell in the operator's booth for "better light on the screen." You can have a perfect, continuous light without ringing at all. You ring, ring, ring, now, because you don't get a steady light on your screen—a clear continuous, perfectly focused, white light. Every bell, you know, is a "call down" for your operator, although he may be doing his best—doing as well as any operator can do by hand—to keep a perfect light on the screen.

Install the Auto-Arc

It stops bell ringing and rejoices your operator's heart—yours, too, for it automatically feeds the arc with unvarying evenness, preserves the focus with absolute precision, floods the screen with a continuous white light, frees the operator for attending to other important details in his booth. Pays for itself in saving of current. Adds to reputation of your house. Fits any standard lamp. Sent on 30-days' trial. Money-back guaranty. Price $60.00 f. o. b. factory, Owensboro, Ky. Why Is It All the Best Theatres Use FEDERAL Signs?

WHEREVER you go — wherever you see a really striking and clever electrical display on a moving picture theatre — it's nine chances out of ten you're admiring a FEDERAL electric sign.

How FEDERALS Are Made

It takes more than a lavish use of lights over a big area to make a display that attracts interest and business continually. FEDERAL displays are always built up around an idea—yours or our own—carefully worked out to create a strong and original effect. That's why they make good—why FEDERAL electric signs enjoy such country-wide popularity.

Cooperation with the Client

Every man on our staff of designers is an expert. Together they form a great creative force, an unfailing spring of originality, which is constantly at your service. They will gladly cooperate with you or submit their own new and exclusive design — and there will be no obligation unless the design is accepted.

You will be interested in our special theatre bulletin No. 140 showing unusual FEDERAL displays now in operation. Sent free on request. Write for it today.

SELIG'S

The Country That God Forgot

A five-part drama of the arid West, featuring

THOMAS SANTSCHI

and

MARY CHARLESON

"THE COUNTRY THAT GOD FORGOT" tells a vitally human story of the master passions, threading a series of exciting scenes with an intensive psychological study of a woman's soul.

The Country That God Forgot

is a story "Different from any that has been read—it grips at the elemental life that is in each one of us"—"very well directed and sustained." Thus writes conservative James S. McQuade, veteran reviewer, from whose pen praise is praise indeed.

In offering this splendid Selig Red Seal Play we believe we are presenting an attraction of unusual box-office value. If a strong, novel story, spirited action and stirring scenes count for anything—and we believe they do—"The Country That God Forgot" will fill your theater.

To Exhibitors Seeking Better Service and Better Photoplays

To facilitate the production of better features and to give exhibitors the best service, Essanay has entered a distributing organization to be known as the KLEINE-EDISON-SELIG-ESSANAY SERVICE.

Quality rather than quantity will be Essanay's aim. Features of five to eight reels will be released at irregular intervals, but of sufficient frequency to place before the public annually a great number of stars and desirable productions.

Besides new features, all those formerly released through V-L-S-E can be booked through the new organization, including "The Sting of Victory," "According to the Code," "That Sort," "Sherlock Holmes," "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," "Charlie Chaplin's Burlesque on Carmen," "The Havoc," "The Discard," "Vultures of Society," "The Misleading Lady," "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," "A Daughter of the City," "The Alster Case," "The Raven," "The Crimson Wing," "The Man Trail," "The Blindness of Virtue," "In the Palace of the King," "The White Sister," "The Slim Princess" and "Graustark."

Dear Sir:

It is with regret that I am compelled to give you notice to cancel my Metro service. I can honestly say that your pictures are the best that I have ever shown in my theatre and my patronage is of the same opinion.

Under these conditions it may seem strange to you that I discontinue Metro but as my seating capacity is limited and your pictures are so good I find it does not pay as the majority of the audience sit in to three or four shows and will not leave, consequently I cannot get as many people past the ticket window as I do when I have on a poor picture.

Truth is stranger than fiction, but as explained above I find this step necessary.

Wishing you and your excellent programme continued success and with best wishes, I beg to remain

Yours very truly,

Attention Mr. O'Donnell:

Dear Sir:

It gives me much pleasure to inform you that Lina Cavalieri in "The Shadow of Her Past" played a very satisfactory and remunerative engagement at our Strand Theatre five days beginning August 27th. Notwithstanding adverse weather conditions, the attendance far exceeded our expectations and we were well pleased with its production.

We felt confident that Cavalieri's name would draw the money and we advertised the picture strongly. In this connection beg to say that we have not seen where an exhibitor could possibly go wrong in booking "The Shadow of Her Past".

We will be pleased to play at any time any other Cavalieri productions that you may release for this international beauty is a well established drawing card.

Paramount is Built on Human Nature; Others Rest on Human Whim!

Anything to get the public, say the others; Anything to hold the public, says Paramount.

"Hitch your wagon to a star" was good advice until Paramount came along and changed it to read:

"Hitch your wagon to a hundred stars!"

The exhibitor who is in business for today, tomorrow, next year and for ten years must not gamble—his business must be built staunchly on human nature as it is, and not as some theorist says it is.

One star may make friends fast, but it takes a hundred stars to make fast friends.

The Paramount idea is right, is sound, is lasting. The success of the greatest talking machine company in the world proves it! The success of the greatest vaudeville enterprise in the world proves it! The success of five thousand Paramount Exhibitors proves it!

"Hitch your wagon to a star"—but be prepared to fall when that star sets!

Hitch your wagon to a hundred stars—give your public the complete Paramount Program—and you'll build a business, not for today, or tomorrow, but for the years to come.

The Greater VITAGRAPH

The Best—In Abundance—

GREATER Vitagraph has increased its capitalization to twenty-five million dollars for two reasons:

First, to provide the exhibitors of the United States and Canada with productions of maximum drawing power.

Second, to present such productions—in abundance.

How thoroughly this policy is to be followed, is evidenced by the announcement that during the next few months, Vitagraph will release:

Three E. H. Sothern Pictures
Eight Anita Stewart Pictures
Eight Earle Williams Pictures
Eight Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno Pictures
Eight Lillian Walker Pictures

In both the quality of its releases, and the quantity of that quality, Greater Vitagraph again respectfully invites exhibitors to try to match its offerings with the output of the entire motion picture field.

VITAGRAPH

Coming Features of Greater Vitagraph

VITAGRAPH has admittedly a greater assemblage of stars—stars by reason of their proved ability and popularity—than any other film producing organization.

In forthcoming productions will be seen such widely known screen favorites as

Anita Stewart	Lillian Walker	Naomi Childers	James Morrison
E. H. Sothern	Antonio Moreno	Marc MacDermott	Charlotte Ives

The story of a loveless marriage and a woman's unyielding faith

HE was dead, she believed, and though her heart had gone with him, she gave herself in soulless, legal marriage to another. But closely as she guarded the secret of her first marriage, treachery and a relentless fate laid bare the pitiful story.

And with the revelation came the knowledge that her first husband, the man whose love she treasured above all else, lived and claimed her.

Gone was the secrecy, the pretense, the deceit. In its stead stood the glaring truth and outraged convention. Above the wreck of these lives could the call of a man to his mate find its answer?

Gentlemen:

Permit me to congratulate you upon your recent production "Beatrice Fairfax".

While I was quite certain of its wide popularity, I was not quite prepared for the result of its success on the first presentation on August 30th. Despite the intense hot weather we did capacity business at both matinee and evening performances and am quite satisfied in my mind that the excellent box office receipts was not the result of the ordinary feature shown that day, judging from the constant phone inquiries when "Beatrice Fairfax" is to be flashed on the screen.

Wishing you every success, I am,

Yours very truly,

S. A. Morass.

Gentlemen:-

The writer witnesseth a private screening of your first Golden Eagle Feature, "Jaffery", and wishes to congratulate you upon same.

"Jaffery" is a great novel, but a greater picture in which characters turn to life in the most vivid and interesting manner.

It has a big "Punch" and a happy ending which will hold any audience, and I am sure will make money for the exhibitor.

If this is a criterion of the Golden Eagle Features to come I am sure that great success awaits your service.

With best wishes, I am.

Very truly yours,

UNICORN

Films are shown in the LARGEST theaters. They are also exhibited in the SMALLEST THEATERS.

Wherever there are motion pictures UNICORN FILMS are necessary.

From a small beginning, born in the midst of fierce competition, Unicorn has grown, in a comparatively short time, to one of the biggest distributing organizations in the world.

The Reason:

UNICORN FILMS are short length features, 1 to 3 reels.

The exhibitor can book from 1 to 21 reels per week.

The subjects are carefully selected, and the program is splendidly balanced, presenting a pleasing variety of GRIPPING DRAMAS, LAUGHABLE COMEDIES, and SPECTACULAR AND SENSATIONAL WESTERNS.

A LETTER FROM MISS KITTY GORDON (THE HON. MRS. H.H. BERRESFORD) TO THE EXHIBITORS & PUBLIC

Imitation is not only the sincerest form of flattery.

It is the better part of wisdom, the source of all improvement.

Columbus discovered the West Indies.

His imitators opened up the American continent.

When Mr. Lewis J. Selznick organized the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation he expected to be imitated. More, he hoped for it. He knew his idea would be a failure if others did not adapt it to their own uses.

He has already expressed his appreciation of the compliment paid his judgement by Miss Mary Pickford and Mr. Adolph Zukor in organizing the Mary Pickford Film Corporation.

It is my turn to thank Mr. Selznick for giving me the opportunity to enlist under his banner at the head of my own company, the Kitty Gordon Film Corporation.

He blazed the way and it is up to every motion picture star to follow the sure road he has pointed out to artistic prestige and financial success.

To my friends the exhibitors and public who have found merit in my program pictures I wish to give assurance that my future productions, beginning with the picture now under way, an adaptation of one of Richard Harding Davis' great novels, "Vera, the Medium," will exceed their most sanguine hopes.

And each of my productions will be marketed through the great chain of exchanges established by Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc.

Sincerely,

Kitty Gordon.

Moral: Big Profits For Exhibitors at Mutual Exchanges

EVER hear the story of John Doe? John had been running a theatre for a long, long while. He thought he understood his business pretty well. But he found he was running one of those "up and down" houses—good one day, bad the next. He tried and tried to find out what was the matter.

John got the idea somewhere that just so long as he had a film in his projecting machine he was giving a picture show. John was booking this, that and the other thing—anything he could pick up in fact, because it was cheap. His patrons never knew what kind of a show they were going to see. He had no established stars. He didn't make his house known as the home of good pictures. It was all hit or miss with John.

Big Money in Series Idea.

And then, one day, John happened to be in the city and dropped into the Mutual film exchange to order some carbons. The manager of the exchange noticed John. John was asked his name and where he was from. Was he using Mutual service? No? Had he considered the possibilities of building up a steady trade with Mutual Star Productions? Had he thought of the box office value in the series idea—in the presentation of stars like Mary Miles Minter, Helen Holmes, Richard Bennett, Charlie Chaplin, William Russell and all the others? John confessed that he hadn't. Soon John was in the projection room looking over a few of the five-reelers. He found them good. They were not only better than the features he had been showing, but they gave him a chance to bring the same star back soon in another production. The more he thought of that possibility the better he liked the idea.

Today John knows what ailed his theatre. He knows the value of having a fixed policy. All his patrons know exactly the grade of goods John is offering. His house is known as the home of Mutual films, just as the clothing store across the street is known for the line of men's suits it sells. John is making money. His business is good now every night. He makes it a point to visit his exchange every few weeks. He always comes home with a new idea that makes him ten times as much as the trip to the city cost him.

There are a lot of exhibitors today in business who are still like John was before he saw the light. Any or all of them will profit by a visit to the nearest Mutual exchange. The latch-string is always out at all sixty-eight of the Mutual exchanges.

J. D. Walker Buys Foreign Rights to Chaplin Films

J. D. Walker, famous film renter of Great Britain, has just paid the Mutual Film Corporation $500,000 for the British rights on the Chaplin comedies. Mr. Walker has formed Walker's Mutual Chaplins Ltd. to handle the exploitation of the Chaplin film abroad and Charlie bids fair to become as popular there as he is in the United States. To close the deal Mr. Walker sent Frederick Bolton of London to this country to conduct the negotiations with John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. The price secured by Mutual is believed to establish a record for film transactions. The Walker territorial rights take in the British Isles, India, Burma, Ceylon, Siam and Africa.

"East Is East"

The next Florence Turner Mutual Star Production, entitled "East Is East," was written by Captain Philip Hubbard, a well known English officer. It was directed by "Larry" Trimble, who was responsible for the direction of other Turner films.

William Russell's next Mutual Star Production bears the title, "The Love Hermit." It gives the athletic William a wonderful opportunity to display his ability.

Charlie Chaplin in "The Count" established a new record for comedies in Chicago, running for four straight weeks in downtown theatres. During the same period he appeared at other houses in former successes.

Russell and Holmes in Two Big Mutual Star Productions

WIDELY different in character, yet each a masterpiece in its way, are the two Mutual Star Productions this week. One is a newspaper story featuring William Russell. The other is a railroad drama starring Helen Holmes. One pictures a political campaign and a fight against graft and corruption. The other depicts the fight of a new executive to make the railroad of which he has charge a paying investment. Both of them will thrill and satisfy the patrons of any theatre.

"The Torch Bearer."

In "The Torch Bearer," a five-reel drama, William Russell appears as the owner of a metropolitan newspaper who has set out to clean up his city. He seeks to rout the crooks and grafters who control politics. Of course the "gang" threatens to "get him." He swears in his whole staff as special police and goes on with his fight. Janet Dare, a Western girl, who comes to live at the newspaper man's home, plays no small part in the stirring tale. How she falls into the clutches of the politicians and is later rescued—how the grafters are finally caught in their own trap, and how the reform candidate finally wins the election form a story that will hold any audience spellbound. This is the fifth of the William Russell Mutual Star Productions made by the American Film Co., Inc. All five are now ready for booking.

"The Manager of the B. & A."

Helen Holmes makes her fifth appearance in a Mutual Star Production in "The Manager of the B. & A." This Signal feature was written by Vaughn Kester. In the past Signal has produced some sensational railroad stories. This one is even better. During the action of the play one thrill piles upon another. A roundhouse is completely destroyed. The watermains of a city are cut. There is a big railroad strike. An entire town is threatened with fire. No water is available. A special train dashes from a distant city with fire apparatus. It has to run through a blazing forest. A huge engine explodes before one's very eyes. "The Manager of the B. & A." runs at express speed from start to finish. It doesn't once slow down to whistle. The theatre showing it is bound to be on the main line, with a clear right of way, rushing with the throttle wide open to big box office receipts. Four other tremendous Helen Holmes Mutual Star Productions are available at all sixty-eight Mutual exchanges.

A Voice from the Trenches

New York City, June 3d, 1916.

Thos. H. Ince, Esq.,

New York.

Dear Mr. Ince:

For one who has been through the Gehenna of Nations in France, and for the millions who remain, as I went, to lay down my life for the defence of my country and my loved ones, I thank you, sir, with a simple soldier's prayer that your wonderful picture (which I saw here tonight) may waken your own great race to the Demoniac madness of modern war. What you own in your mighty screen sermon have depicted—vivid, remorseless and truly horrible as it is—is but the least part of the Saturnalia of your war

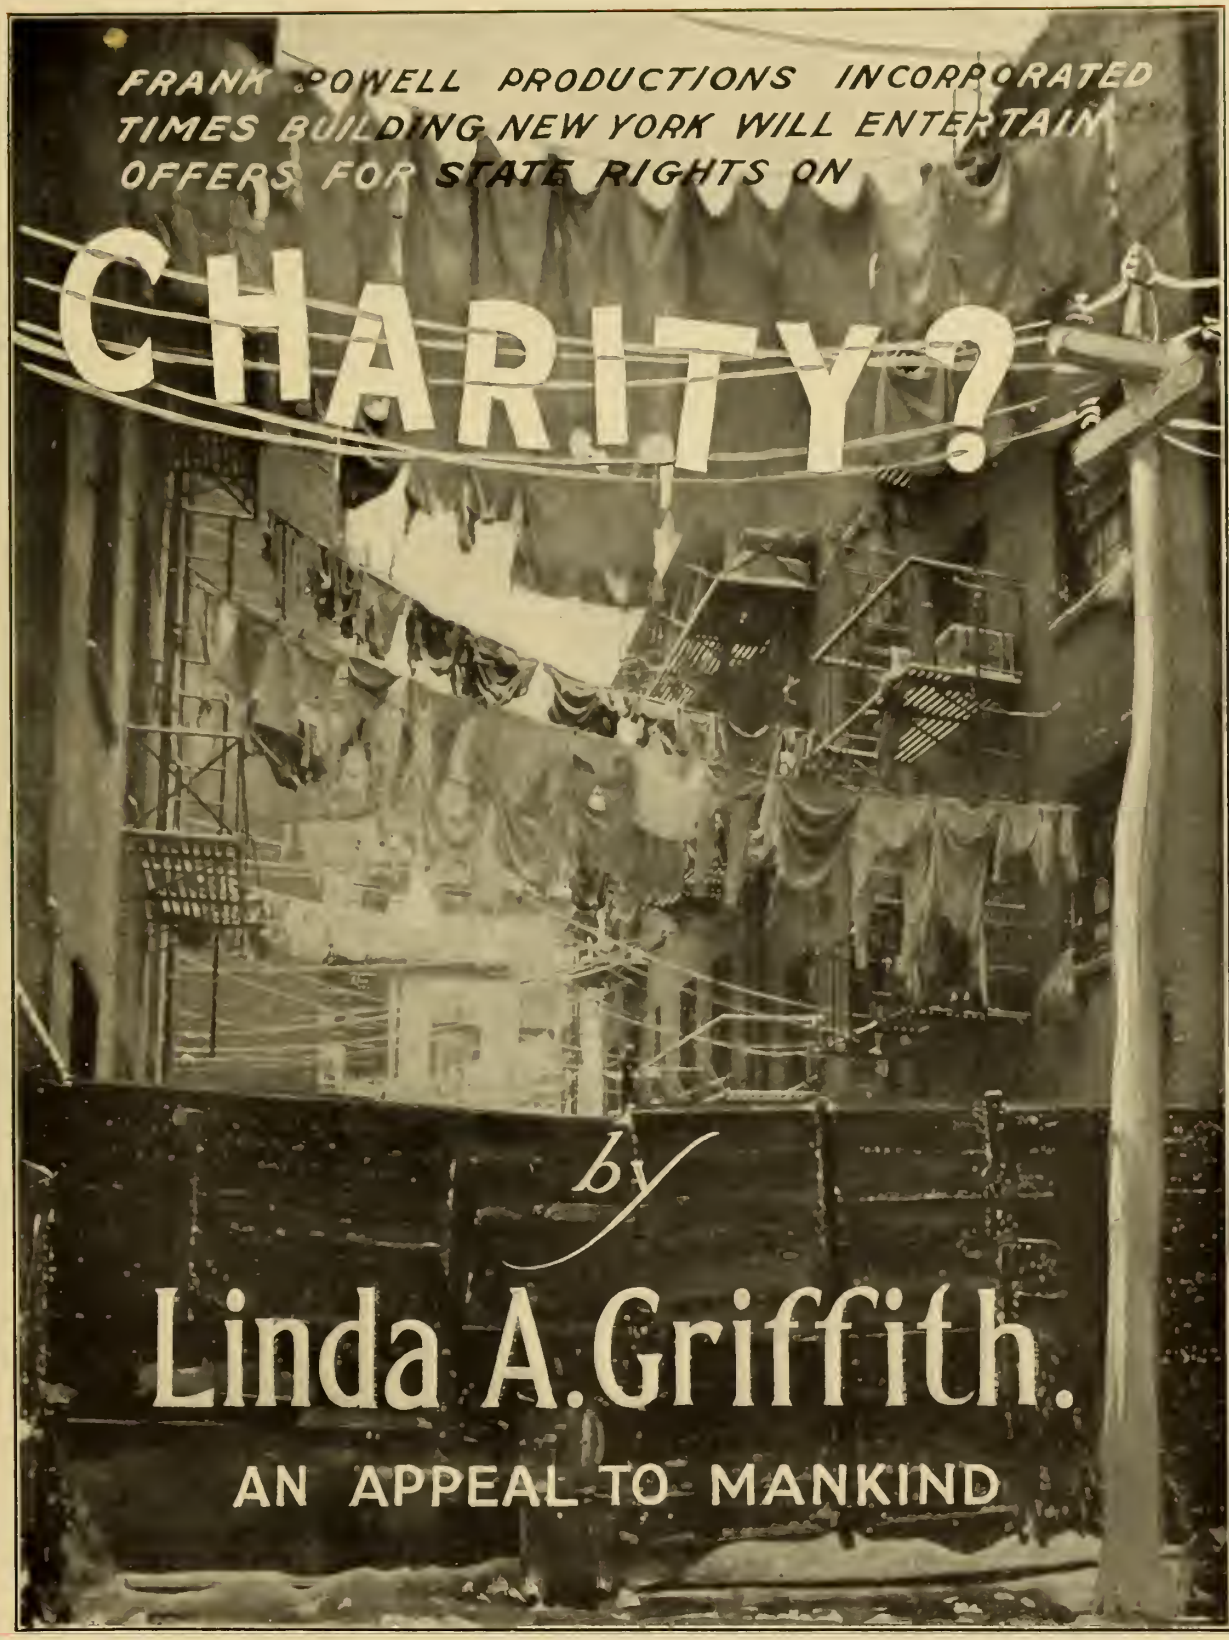
Picture the stench of your comrades rotting in death by your side as you are bespattered by the hot blood of others freshly butchered in all the blistering heat and volcanic thunder of shrieking shells and belching guns! Then, in the black and deadlier silence of night, while you lie half-buried in muddy, bloody slime hour after hour waiting for hell's-fire to burst out from earth and sky again, to feel the maggots, that are devouring in their millions the men you have lived and fought by, crawling over your own living carcass, as your brain reels in delirium at the sights and sounds you hear and see, and at those struggling souls you feel above and about you, still fighting a ghostly battle in the air, as if not realizing Death!

Then—the thoughts of home, of the anguish of loved ones, their lack of your support—helpless women, hungry babes—Oh! God! You can't think of it!

No! Not even you, whose vision seems to have been made prophetic, clear and pure with the power of a great God-purpose. I can write no more. I can think no more of a great "Civilization" done a great work for God and for sir. you have in "Civilization" that I can think or dare write. But, the Sons of that Man who made us all in His image

Let every man, woman and child go to see this picture. Let them see in it that world tragedy we, whom I write for, have come through Let them see in it—as I do—the dethronement of the Physical with all its false idols and the awakening to Christ's Kingdom on earth of a new and a fuller Spiritual Consciousness, born of Brotherhood and Self-Control, which in its turn shall give birth to a New Race, with liberty-loving hospitable America as its home

May God bless and prosper you as the world will thank you is the heart's prayer of



Yours for civilization,

"A PLAIN BRITISH SOLDIER."

Important!!

Feature producers have doubled on their own tracks in giving you glowing promises of masterpieces, exhibitor "service," and other glittering generalities. Yet it requires but one question to cut beneath the blaring adjectives. It is a simple query -- but its logic is that of the pocket-book. How many exhibitors are making more than expenses? ARE YOU?

Or are you slaving day after day just to pay the landlord and the exchange bills -- hoping against hope that by some miracle conditions may change? Why has exhibiting reached such a state?

Here's why: Because you are defying every rule of successful merchandising, because you are paying too much for your service, BECAUSE YOU HAVE GONE FEATURE MAD!

These are BLUNT FACTS -- you can't dodge them. Look at your own bank book, then look at your bank balances three years ago. You can't make money by throwing common sense overboard and following the crowd. That's what you have been doing.

Look at the proposition coolly. It is undoubtedly all right to run real features occasionally -- but seven days a week of back-breaking rentals leads only to absolute ruin -- it is BUSINESS SUICIDE!

You say you must have something to advertise. Right -- but why have you allowed yourself to be BLUFFED into thinking that it is length and a profit-stealing rental that make advertising value? STARS, UNUSUAL TALKING POINTS, SATISFACTORY PRODUCTIONS make advertising value and a variety programme selected with these points in mind gives you triple the punch of the mediocre five reeler.

Try it out with "Grant, Police Reporter," the new one reel series -- each a complete story -- which will be ready October 20th at General Film offices. "Grant, Police Reporter," will give you STARS whom picture patrons know and like--daring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby. It will give you STORIES -- by Robert Welles Ritchie -- for which we are paying more than many feature scenarios cost. It will come to you at a one reel rental -- service cost will decrease and profits increase.

Get out of the rut. Get back to the days when picture exhibiting was money-making, when the fortunes were made that built today's big theaters. Let "Grant, Police Reporter," show you an escape from the road of killing worry and useless work. WHY NOT MAKE MONEY?

Facts and Comments

THE general prosperity of the country, the end of the infantile paralysis and the subsidence of the panic which followed it, together with the cool weather ought to make exhibitors prosperous and contented for the immediate future. The exhibitors have just passed through a most inauspicious season and the coming revival of business is but the natural reaction. With this hope and belief in the growing prosperity of the exhibitor we want to couple the observation that the exhibitor is in a peculiar sense the architect of his own fortune. That's why capable men in the business find such splendid opportunity for success and why the careless and indifferent cannot survive competition.

THE president of the Kansas State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League writes to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD speaks of the injustice of the Kansas law under which the Ministerial Association of Wichita was permitted to show a film on Sunday in spite of the fact that there are smoking scenes in the film. The Kansas Censors, it should be known, have banned all cigarette smoking from the screen, but their ruling was not allowed to stand in the way of the exhibition of which our correspondent complains. The president wrote a letter for the Wichita press discussing this question, but not one of the papers was fair enough to print the letter. They would not even give a reason for their refusal to print. "They printed all the articles furnished by the ministers," says our friend, "and we should have been given the same right." We can do no more than echo our correspondent's query: "Are They Really Sincere?" Mr. Glamman's letter will be found in another part of the paper.

WE ARE well pleased to think that an effort is being made in this state to defeat the re-election of the authors of the late and unlamented censorship bill known as the "Cristman-Wheeler Bill." As usual the effort is being made by the organized exhibitors who are bearing all the expenses of the campaign without any aid from other branches of the industry, although their work is redounding to the benefit of the entire industry and not merely to the benefit of themselves. By the way, this is the middle of September, many important state campaigns are now under way and the national campaign will soon be at fever heat. What are the film men doing to guard their interests? Is there any visible effort outside of the work done by the organized exhibitors? There has been considerable talk, but so far no useful or constructive action whatever.

WE HOPE that the daily press will not fail to take up the question of fighting the "fakers" and swindlers, who still thrive on the gullibility of men and especially of women who are ambitious to shine as motion picture stars. We are getting many complaints of victims. We understand from one letter that has reached us that some of these concerns require a deposit of money "to be refunded if the candidate does not make good." In many cases the money is never returned. Everybody ought to know by this time that reputable motion picture producers do not have to resort to glowing promises to get amateurs. Every studio is crowded with applicants. Almost all of these applicants have had experience and scores of them have to walk home every day without a chance even for a minor part. Exhibitors in city and country who see this paragraph ought to tell their newspaper friends. We hope none of our exchanges will neglect to issue a warning.

SPEAKING to a director the other day I heard him remark that some of his finest work was spoiled by the exhibitor or at least by some of the exhibitors. He pointed out that a good picture to reach its full limit of usefulness must have the ardent as well as the intelligent co-operation of the exhibitor. There may be some truth in the director's complaint, but we know of cases where poor pictures have been saved by the skill of the exhibitor. The ideal state is reached when the gifted director has his production exhibited by the gifted exhibitor. The subject is interesting and we will be glad to see it discussed by our readers.

The Making of a Masterpiece

By Edward Weitzel

Sidelights on How D. W. Griffith Conceived and Executed His Great Motion Picture "Intolerance"

AFTER the curtain has descended upon the last scene of D. W. Griffith's colossal spectacle, now being shown at the Liberty theater, New York City, and the mighty palaces of Babylon, the terrible Massacre of St. Bartholomew, the tragedy on Calvary, the impressive story of a modern day, and all the wizardry of a master producer's art is locked up in the small tin boxes that a man may carry away under his arm, the theater on Forty-second street becomes the scene of long continued and exacting labors. The chief laborer is D. W. Griffith. Since the opening performance of his great picture he has been at the theater from eight in the morning until two the next morning busily at work. Counting the house attaches, one hundred and thirty-five people are required to give an exhibition of "Intolerance." When this is over, the orchestra begins rehearsing new music or the producer and his staff of electricians and photographic experts try different lighting effects by the use of colored "foots" or "borders," the rapidly changing scenes on the screen being lit up with the same care given a performance on the spoken stage. Between orders and suggestions to his "crews," after the matinee one afternoon last week, the tireless but never ruffled director gave the writer some information as to how he came to conceive his wonderful photoplay. The remark, "You seem to be a very busy man, Mr. Griffith," brought the smiling reply, "Oh, yes, I'm a day-and-night laborer. That is the first duty of a director—to be always on the job."

Scene from "Intolerance" (Griffith).

"How did you come to conceive 'Intolerance'?"

"That is a hard question to answer. It just growed—like Topsy. I didn't want to make it, principally on account of the expense. It cost four and a half times more than 'The Birth of a Nation,' and I felt that, after that achievement, some one else should experiment with such costly productions; but the subject took possession of me, and I thought it out. No scenario was ever made for it, you know.

"Do you mean that you carried all the scenes in your head?"

"Oh, no, I jotted down a general plan and followed it—at times."

"You are not a believer in the perfect scenario, then? The working plans, in which every scene, incident and detail of production have been thought out and writtendown?"

The director's eyes lighted up with an amused smile, as he shook his head. "Hardly, the human equation renders that an impossibility. It is only when the director gets to handling his humans, singly or en masse, that he knows what he wants—or doesn't want. The unconscious expression on the face of an actor, a gesture by the leading lady, may give him a new and greatly improved train of thought.

"How did you dare attempt so revolutionary a scheme as running four parallel plots in the same picture?"

"Perhaps because it was revolutionary. I felt that we have not begun to realize the possibilities of the moving picture art, and such a radical departure from the old rules promised novel effects, at least. By the way, have you discovered the secret of how we keep from confusing the four plots in the mind of a spectator? It's by telling such a short portion of each story at a time and by running them all at the same tempo. The rate of speed at which the reel is unwound is a very important factor in showing a picture, you know. Heywood Broun, in his notice in the Tribune, remarked that the racing chariot of the mountain girl of Ancient Babylon and the rushing train and speeding automobile of today seemed to be very close to each other. The characters are all on the same errand, and human hearts have been alike in all ages, only the garments that cover the body differ. Here again, the same tempo helped to bridge the long lapse of time. To return to the question of expense. One of the most costly scenes is the dance of the female slaves on the steps of the palace in Babylon. We had Ruth St. Dennis teaching the movements to the large ballet for days, yet on the screen the scene lasts only a few seconds. Even a close-up often requires hours of work, the right expression being difficult to catch."

"How long were you in getting ready the Babylonian scenes?"

"We had over three hundred workmen on the job from July until the following April. The buildings were made of staff, the same material as that used at the San Francisco exposition. In preparing the Euphrates, we dammed up a river in California, and planted reeds and palm trees on its banks. You would hardly suspect that the scene of the onrush of the army of Cyrus is not far from Los Angeles. Excuse me a moment." Mr. Griffith cast a critical look at the stage. "Those lights won't do, Bob, they are throwing shadows in the corners of the scene. Try a different color."

There was no impatience or indication of worry as the order was given. Mr. Griffith had been at this same work for days, but his smile was as pleasant and his self-control as complete as ever. The secret of his success in handling men and women lies very close to this fact.

"In preparing for 'Intolerance,' Mr. Griffith, did you follow the method of Sir Henry Irving and call in a number of famous antiquarians and painters of ancient historical subjects?"

"Not in the flesh. The scenes and incidents are all authentic, but our information was obtained from the writings of the different wise men. The legends of Creation, the Fall, and the Deluge are all found in the cuneiform writings of Bal, the High Priest, who betrayed Belshazzar and his city to Cyrus, you are aware, of course?"

"What are you going to produce next, Mr. Griffith? Another supreme effort?"

Again the maker of masterpieces smiled that amused smile of his. "I hope not. I'm willing that some one else should try the experiment. I prefer to make some simple five-reel pictures; they do not tie up large sums of money."

"What about the future of the motion picture?"

"We are only at the beginning of this thing. New and important improvements are bound to be discovered, and the farther we attempt to get away from the art of the spoken stage, the more pronounced will be our advancement. Returning to 'Intolerance,' we are attracting all kinds and conditions of men. The other evening a well known priest of this city came to me, between the acts, and said: 'I must tell you, Mr. Griffith, that I had serious doubts about the propriety of coming here. I was afraid the scenes from the life of the Savior might shock me, but they have been handled with due reverence. As for the rest of the picture, it has made me feel like God, as if I had the power to look down upon all humanity.' At the end of the performance a pugilistic friend of mine stopped me in the lobby to say: 'I'm comin' ag'in tomorrer night, Grif! I don't know much 'bout all yer high brow stuff, but there's somethin' 'bout th' show that's got me on me ear!'"

It was long after dinner time when the writer bade Mr. Griffith good bye, and the last words which came through the closing door of the theater were: "That is still the wrong shade, Bob, try another color in your border lights." A boundless capacity for work and rubber-tired efficiency are important assets in the makeup of David W. Griffith.

Conditions in Singapore

Theater Manager Reports on Business Methods and Complains of Unfair Competition of Hotels

Editor Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir.—Perusing your columns I see notes regarding various cinemas in the States and in England, so I thought it wouldn't come amiss for me to let you know what is being done in this part of the world. I suppose you hear very little of the cinemas out East, and I have no doubt you will be surprised to hear that in Singapore we have six cinemas. The Alhambra would compare very favorably with a good many theatres in England or the States. We opened the theatre on the 15th of January this year.

It is the largest theatre here, having a seating accommodation for 1,500 people. It is built of reinforced concrete, the whole of the ground floor being fitted up with the best American noiseless veneer tip-up chairs. Upstairs is the dress circle and boxes, fitted with special chairs, made with a view to comfort. The interior is handsomely decorated (cream and gold). The building in itself is a handsome piece of architectural work standing in its own grounds, with a splendid frontage. Attached to the theatre is a most exquisite garden fitted up with garden seats, a band stand, chairs and tables, where ice cream, cakes. tea, etc., are served during the intervals at a very small cost. We have an excellent orchestra of twelve pieces, all first class musicians and first sight readers. As manager of the theatre I am naturally enthusiastic about it, and if it should interest you, I will on some future date send you photos of the same.

My object in writing to you was far away from describing the theatre but really to point out what some of the film exchanges are doing. The Universal, Pathe, and Australasian Films Company all have branches out here. We deal mostly with Pathe and Australasian. Last week I booked "Salambo" from the Universal.

Saturday night is the night when everybody is out, looking for some kind of amusement, hence most of the theatres are packed up.

The Universal is running a theatre on a percentage basis, catering solely for the natives. The European trade in this particular theatre is very small, as it is in a native district, consequently the Europeans don't patronize it much. One hundred yards from the Alhambra is Raffles Hotel, where on Saturday nights they are permitted to run a free cinema show, supplied with films from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at a very small figure. Naturally I lose a certain amount of my patrons. Then again, the Sea View Hotel, a few miles from town, also give free cinema shows. They are supplied with films from the Australasian Films Company. As it is a nice drive from town, this also attracts the Europeans, thus taking away a good many more of my would-be patrons.

Don't you think that this sort of thing is a disgrace to the trade? Pathe has been approached by the hotel managers, but he absolutely refused to allow them to have pictures. I cannot understand what a company like the Universal, who boast themselves as the world's caterers, are thinking about to allow this sort of thing to go on. I know for certain they don't get a rental sufficiently high to pay for the depreciation of the film. There is very little unity amongst the exhibitors here, each one having their own particular patronage. We get the bulk of the Europeans, and naturally, the very fact of the hotels showing free cinema affects us the most. To a certain extent most of the cinemas are dependent on the local exchanges, so it would be next to useless to boycott them. I should deem it a great favor if you would kindly allow this to be published in your valuable paper, with a view to the same meeting the eye of some of the heads concerned, who I am sure would take such action as would prevent managers of their branch exchanges from renting films to anyone other than bone-fide cinema theatres.

We give two shows for one admission, 7:30 to 9 p. m., and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m. Very few Europeans come to the first show, as they usually dine at 8 p. m. and come to the 9:30 show. We use about 12,000 feet of film nightly and change programs twice a week. Our audience comprise Chinese, Japanese, Javanese, Indians and Malays, Dutch and English. With an audience like this, I can assure you it is no easy task to be able to give them the variety of pictures to suit each individual taste.

Charlie Chaplin is a great favorite with everybody. We have had most of the Keystone Chaplins, and a good many of the Essanay. They are very hard to get hold of. We sometimes have a lapse of three months before he is shown in any of the theatres; then again, sometimes they come in with a rush and you will find three or four cinemas showing the same pictures at the same time. As far as the other pictures are concerned, the natives like detective pictures, very emotional, or anything of the blood and thunder type, whilst the Europeans and the better class people like high class dramas which do not appeal to the lower classes, so I try my best to cater for the natives in the first show and the better class people in the second show, and so manage to pull along very nicely, and expect to do much better later on.

Mr. Tan Cheng Kee, proprietor of the Alhambra Theatre, has been a regular subscriber to the Moving Picture World for many years past and considers that he gets excellent value for his money. He would not, on any account, be without it.

M. H. KENYON-SLADE,
Manager Alhambra Theatre.

Marian Swayne

MARIAN SWAYNE, who has just been placed under contract to the Arrow Film Corporation by W. E. Shallenberger, is a bewitching blonde personality whose career on stage and screen has been a continued success. Hard work, ambition, personality, ability, and again hard work have combined to put Miss Swayne at the top of the list. In her opinion, for she is a modest little lady who quickly disclaims the pet phrases of the press agent, it has been mostly hard work.

Marian Swayne.

Miss Swayne has five big stage successes to her credit. Included in these are the roles of Effie in "The Blindness of Virtue," Cicely in "The Importance of Being Ernest," the Squaw in "The Squaw Man" (on the strength of which performance Lasky offered her the same part for the screen version of this play, but which Miss Swayne declined in order to remain on the stage), as the Grain (the stenographer) in "The Grain of Dust," and as Vivie in "Mrs. Warren's Profession." Before her success in these five important parts Miss Swayne had also played in "The City," "The Greyhound," "The Deep Purple" and "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie." Prior to her appearance as Effie, Miss Swayne played for almost two years in motion pictures, appearing for one year in Blache features, and for another year in Gaumont features. She also played the role of Kitty in James Montgomery Flagg's series, "The Adventures of Kitty Cobb." Immediately prior to joining the Arrow forces Miss Swayne played the lead in the Thanhouser feature, "The Net." Following this performance she was offered the leading part in a current New York stage production, but under the persuasive powers of Mr. Shallenberger this idea was relinquished, and Miss Swayne contracts with Arrow for the big features which that company now has under way.

LEAH BAIRD REJOINS UNIVERSAL.

One of the best known leading ladies of the photoplay world, Leah Baird, has rejoined the Universal Film Manufacturing company and will be featured in productions made at the Pacific Coast studios. Miss Baird already has commenced work under the direction of F. E. Kelsey.

Touring Texas Small Towns

By E. E. Belcia

Moving Picture World Correspondent Takes to the Tall Grass and Finds Good Business in Most Places

THE World Correspondent took a little motor trip last week and visited several important smaller towns in Central and Northeast Texas. His observations follow: At Italy I found J. C. Couch, Junior, still managing the Elk Theatre which he has run for so many years. He is one of the "old-timers" and we spent several pleasant hours talking about things as they were and are. I recalled the league convention a couple of years ago when such a bunch congregated in Dallas, among which there were such shining lights as McCormack of Austin, Brown of Texarkana, Wren of Wichita Falls, and others too numerous to mention. Couch's business is extraordinarily good, and all of that community including himself expects to get rich this Fall on 20-cent cotton. Mr. Couch had a birthday two or three weeks ago and passed the thirtieth milestone and received from his father a deed to a $10,000 farm. Well, some people are born lucky. Recalling events of the convention, I told him a joke on McCormack of Austin that I learned only recently. While at the convention most all of the Texas exhibitors will remember that we were filmed for the Weeklies. "Mac" was imitating Charlie Chaplain and was the clown and funmaker for the bunch. When the Weekly was released "Mac" had it booked for his Crescent Theatre in Austin "right out of the can" and had it billed like a circus. "Mac" had forgotten how he looked in it. When the day came, "Mac" got down about noon and found his theatre packed to the doors. Word had got around town that to see something funny they ought to see "Mac" in pictures at his theatre. It was funny, too, but "Mac" didn't think so when he saw it, and he immediately rushed to the operating room and commenced operations with a pair of scissors.

I next visited the little town of Frost. This is a dandy little show town, probably due to the fact that at one time W. M. Byrd and his brother were exhibitors there. M. C. Connor and his brother own the old Byrd Theatre and also a theatre in Dawson. They run an up-to-date show in both places. L. Morphew is also an exhibitor in Frost, having only recently opened the Lyric there.

At Itasca I found one of the best paying little places I have seen lately. Earl Pruitt is the owner and manager of the Pastime Theatre, the only show there. His fine business is due, without doubt, to the excellent musical program that is furnished. Itasca is a little manufacturing city as well as deriving a big business from the farming community.

While mentioning this section of the State it would be improper if I did not mention Tom Gaines' house at Hillsboro. I visited Mr. Gaines' theatre some weeks back, and was agreeably surprised at what I found. This little city has perhaps 8,000 population and he has furnished them with an up-to-date city theatre with everything up-to-the-minute. Among the features of his house are the beautiful living apartment, which he has on the third floor, and the mammoth pipe organ, which he installed about a year ago. His "front" is finished in white marble and mirrors.

Between Dallas and Greenville I stopped for a few moments at the following small towns: Garland, with a population very small, has a nice little house owned by J. P. Johnson who reads The World assiduously and says he couldn't get along without it. At Rockwall I found Gus Hartman, proprietor of a very nice theatre. I know this is a good little town and other exhibitors have told me it was, but Hartman seemed very indifferent about his business. Said he had read a World once or twice, he believed, but that he didn't take any trade periodicals at all. In passing I wish to say that this was the only manager that I met during the past several weeks that did not read the Moving Picture World every week without fail and "hollered" if it failed to come. At Royse City R. T. Hooks has a very up-to-date theatre for so small a town. His business recently dropped off to where he was open but four nights a week. The financial conditions of this section are improving fast and we believe if Mr. Hooks would put into effect some of the World advertising stunts he would soon have his business back even better than when it was so good two years ago. Royse City has a population of perhaps 2,500 and is a fine little city.

At Greenville I found to my surprise that the city had turned around since my last visit there five years ago. E. J. Lamkin, who is perhaps the oldest exhibitor in Texas, has for numerous years back been the leading amusement man in this city. I do not recall any man in the business who has been at it longer than Lamkin. He opened the first show in Greenville about fifteen years ago, and has had first one and then sometimes two and sometimes three shows at one time there. Since five years ago the business part of town has shifted several blocks leaving what was once the old Savoy Theatre now away off on a side street. Needless to say it is not there now. Mr. Lamkin has built one of the most magnificent little theatres in Texas in the heart of the city. It is the most perfectly ventilated place I was ever in and he has two expert musicians with some kind of musical contrivance that furnishes the best music I have ever listened to. It sounds really like an orchestra and yet there are but two musicians, but they are certainly artists. I understand that these are not bought contrivances but were invented by these two geniuses. Mr. Lamkin also has another theatre across the street and his competition houses are run by a local corporation. These houses were formerly managed by Johnny Jones, now of Amarillo, but I was unable to find the present manager while in Greenville, as it was very late at night. All the theatres in Greenville are up-to-date as befits one of the most up-to-date little cities in Texas. Cement roads extend for ten miles in every direction and I could still see the bright glow of Greenville even when I was forty miles away.

At Commerce A. W. Lillie is the kingpin of amusements. He has two theatres there, one of which is really an elegant place and the other nice but ordinary. Mr. Lillie is a well known exhibitor, and he has been giving his patrons the best of everything that has been on the market. I could not find Mr. Lillie when I passed through Commerce as it was ten o'clock in the morning and I presume he sleeps late. We found Commerce an excellent little city of perhaps four or five thousand and everything seemed lively and wide-awake which cannot be said about all Texas small towns.

At Coopers, Henry Sparks surprised me by being the "whole show." I met Sparks a couple of years ago and he was a county official at Kaufman. Imagine my surprise when I found him here a full fledged exhibitor. Sparks has used his business training in the show business and has done and is doing well in his new line of endeavor. Cooper, while not quite so large as Commerce, is wide-awake and hustling and Sparks has a nice place with a confectionery store in the lobby and gets them "going and coming."

At Paris—poor Paris—I found this city rising from its ashes. It was and is a little city of about 20,000. Last Spring it was practically wiped off the earth by fire. Every brick building with only two or three exceptions were destroyed as were the magnificent granite public buildings and all of the residential portions. Everything is building there now. Skyscrapers are going up on every corner. I arrived there at night and finding such chaos decided to move on. I found one show in the outskirts of the business section. They were playing to capacity business in a big temporary frame building. Later on I expect to pay Paris a visit and see Mr. Mussleman who has been one of the leading exhibitors there for many years.

THREE LEADING MEN FOR VIOLA DANA.

Three leading men will support the little Metro star, Viola Dana, in her forthcoming photoplay entitled "The Gates of Eden." These are Edward Earle, Bob Walker and Augustus Phillips. Both Mr. Earle and Mr. Walker appear with Miss Dana in "The Light of Happiness," the five-act feature-play preceding "The Gates of Eden." Shakerism is the central theme of this subject. The pictures have been taken in one of the few Shaker villages remaining in the United States. There are not more than twelve of these communities left. Shakers do not believe in marriage, and they enforce celibacy among their members. "The Gates of Eden" deals with a tragedy in the lives of two young people who loved each other truly, and craved the human happiness that was their right, but which they were denied by the rigid tenets of the sect to which they belonged.

Vigorous Fight Against "White Slave" Film

By W. Stephen Bush

Ministers Who Endorse the Production Said to Be in Employ of a Film Company—An Early Decision is Expected

A NOTORIOUS "white slave" film of recent date, which must remain nameless in the columns of The Moving Picture World, was the subject of a heated argument before Supreme Court Justice Cohalan at the Special Term for Litigated Motions in the New York County Court House on September 15.

The motion came on to be heard upon the application to make permanent a temporary injunction which had been obtained by the promoters of the film against George H. Bell, Commissioner of Licenses of New York City. Mr. Bell had threatened to revoke the license of the Maxine Elliott theater for exhibiting the aforesaid "white slave" feature. Thereupon, the promoters of the film had sued out a temporary injunction against the Commissioner.

The case had been called twice and each time counsel for Commissioner Bell had been ready, while the attorneys for the "white slave" film promoters pleaded for delay. When the matter was finally ordered to argument by Justice Cohalan, Mr. Hartman of Stanchfield & Levy, counsel for the promoters, appeared to speak in favor of making the injunction permanent. Much was said of the supposed moral value of this film and how its exhibition would expose a nefarious traffic and how the ministers were in favor of the film. After argument, Mr. Hartman submitted voluminous affidavits in support of the injunction. Among them was an affidavit by the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, the Rev. Victor G. Flynn, of the Third Moravaian Church, and two other clergymen whose pastorates were not mentioned in the papers. There was an affidavit by one, Rankin, who swore that he was the treasurer of the concern which had put out the film in question. This affidavit recited the clerical approval aforementioned, and set forth the fact that the making of the film had cost fifteen thousand dollars and would be a total loss in New York at least if the injunction obtained by the promoters were vacated. In the course of the argument Mr. Hartman made an offer to Justice Cohalan to show him the picture. The Justice declined the offer, saying he preferred to decide the case on the papers submitted by both sides.

George Nicholson of the Corporation Counsel's office, appearing for Mr. Bell, and moving to dissolve the injunction, delivered a scathing denunciatin of the promoters of this "white slave" film. He spoke of "unscrupulous managers, who are willing to violate every law of decency for the sake of financial profits," and he characterized the film in question as "crude in presentation, wholly devoid of any moral or educational value and catering only to the lowest instincts of humanity." He submitted affidavits and protests against the film, made by the following persons and organizations: Rev. Father Blakely, S. J., editor of the National Catholic Weekly "America"; John Sumner, secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice; Mrs. R. S. Blaikie; Frederick H. Whitin, general secretary of the Committee of Fourteen; Hastings H. Hart, Russell Sage Foundation; Joseph Frey, president of the German Catholic Central Society of North America; Mrs. L. W. Betts of the executive committee of the Parks and Playgrounds Association of Brooklyn; Mrs. Marjorie Triscoll, executive secretary of the Women's Club of New York; Dr. James J. Walsh, formerly Dean of the Fordham University Training School, and connected with the American Medical Association; Alfred Young, secretary of the Catholic Theater League.

Mr. Nicholson made light of Dr. Parkhurst's endorsement of the "white slave" film by declaring that this reverend gentleman is employed in some capacity or other by the company, which is the parent of the concern responsible for the "white slave" film. This latter assertion provoked a storm of protest from counsel on the other side, and they requested time until Monday, September 18, to submit a replying affidavit by Dr. Parkhurst, denying his employ or connection by the parent company of the "white slave" film corporation. It was claimed that a Rev. Dr. Lyons is working for the same film company. The Rev. Lyons is among the clergyman mentioned as approving the picture.

A good deal was made of the fact that the National Board of Review had passed the questionable picture after certain eliminations. Counsellor Nicholson submitted several passages from a letter addressed to the National Board by the Commissioner of Licenses, among which the following is particularly timely and interesting:

"It seems to me that in approving this picture with certain eliminations the National Board of Review is again drafting back into the position in which it found itself a year or so ago, when it seemed totally unable to deal with objectionable pictures presented to it. It ought to be clear to any thinking man that we are now at the beginning of a time in which many attempts to produce 'white slave' pictures will be made. Nearly every person who has studied the effect of such pictures on audiences knows that they do not teach great moral lessons, but on the contrary, have a thoroughly bad effect. If the film in question is permitted to be exhibited it opens the door for all the rest of the flood that will follow."

A decision is expected early on Tuesday, September 19. While Justice Cohalan refrained from any comments during the argument his general attitude indicated his sympathy with the movement to suppress the exhibition. There was a well-founded rumor in circulation that if the injunction is vacated the Commissioner will revoke the license of the Maxine Elliott theater and thereby teach a lesson to the owners of theaters who are ready to give a hospitable reception to indecent and obscene films or performances.

Censorship in Great Britain

World Correspondent Given Summary of the Stringent Proposed Regulations Which Would Hamper the Industry.

London, Sept. 1.

THE HOME SECRETARY has now furnished to those local authorities responsible for the issue of licenses to motion picture theaters a draft series of regulations governing the official censorship of motion pictures.

The document is too cumberous to reproduce at length and in addition to definite proposals embraces much explanatory comment by Mr. Samuel. It does not follow that the suggested regulations will be accepted by the local authorities, much less by the trade, which is already unanimous in its conviction of their one-sidedness. Briefly, the following are the proposals:

Films of an offensive or inimical character shall not be exhibited. If a local licensing authority objects to any film and serves upon the exhibitor thereof notice of objection such film shall not be exhibited. (This clause would enable local authorities to still retain power to censor films independently.)

No film not passed by the official censorship shall be exhibited without special permission from the local licensing authority, who may demand to see the film privately.

Films passed by the official censorship shall be exhibited exactly as passed, but alterations or additions to such films may be made with the sanction of the local authority.

No objectionable advertising matter shall be used in conjunction with any film.

All public parts of theaters shall be adequately illuminated in such a way that it is possible to see over the whole area.

The official censorship will be divided into two departments. A board of censors with a chief censor to be nominated by the Home Secretary, and a number of assistants, one at least to be a woman, while none of them shall be in any way interested in the trade. Secondly, an advisory committee consisting of local authorities, educationalists, authors, one representative of exhibitors, one representative of manufacturers, well known members of the general public, and at least one woman member. With the exception of the two trade representatives no member of the advisory committee shall be interested in the trade.

The expenses of the censorship shall be borne by the manufacturers by the payment of a fee for each examination.

The censorship shall become operative on January 1, 1917.

The censors and members of the advisory committee shall be appointed by the Home Secretary.

The foregoing proposals have yet to be discussed (and undoubtedly condemned) by the three trade associates, exhibitors, renters and manufacturers, at a joint conference next week. Informal opinion in the trade this week-end unites in branding the suggestions as positively disastrous, productive of even worse results, affirm some of our leading men, than their unenviable prototypes in the United States.

It was decided to print twenty thousand copies of a pamphlet which will set forth the principles governing the selection of motion pictures for people under sixteen years of age. Plans were adopted for circulating these pamphlets among all the civic and educational institutions of the country. Upon the suggestion of Mr. Bush it was resolved that Dr. Cocks get in touch with the organized exhibitors of the country and make them acquainted with the plans of the committee and secure their co-operation. Mr. Bush said he felt sure that those pamphlets would be welcomed by many of the exhibitors as they might help the exhibitor in his fights with ignorant and prejudiced enemies of the motion picture. A sub-committee was appointed to meet representatives of the Drama League and secure their co-operation. It was also decided to secure the services of Miss Peck, the well known woman lecturer, to speak before women's clubs explaining and advocating the plans of the National Committee on Films for Young People.

Dr. Cocks was entrusted with the task of corresponding with and contributing articles to children's and women's magazines explaining the purposes of the National Committee and asking for co-operation. Dr. Cocks said that many editors of such magazines had written to him asking for articles and that the interest in the subject of films for young people was deep and widespread among educators and public spirited men and women everywhere.

A special meeting of the committee will be held on September 22, in the rooms of the National Board.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of September 17 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Daughter of MacGregor" at the Strand.

VALENTINE GRANT was the featured name at the Strand when she appeared in the title role of "The Daughter of MacGregor," produced by the Famous Players Film Company.

MacGregor's daughter, in the story, has inherited all her father's stubbornness, and when the two clash neither will bends to the other, and the girl runs away to America. There, in a rough mining camp, she finds an uncle, and through a series of adventures wins happiness and the independence she had so much desired.

Subsidiary features for the week included the Strand Topical Review, the Strand Zoological Series, Strand Fashion Pictorial, a comedy cartoon and a short comedy.

The soloists were Grace Hoffman, Wallace MacDonald and Alfred Newman.

"The Vagabond Prince" at the Rialto.

H. B. Warner was featured at the Rialto last week in the Triangle-Ince picture, "The Vagabond Prince." The same ingredients which always win popularity for novels of the "Prisoner of Zenda" and "Graustark" type have been used by J. C. Hawks, author of the scenario, in recounting the adventures of Prince Tonio, of Bothalia. The prince, in an effort to escape the hampering traditions of the small Balkan principality ruled by his father, ships on a sailing vessel, and after many exciting escapades eventually finds happiness in the love of a girl he meets in the Bohemian quarter of San Francisco.

"Vampire Ambrose" was the Keystone comedy for the week, and the usual news weeklies and scenic pictures were on the program.

Helen Macdonough in a "Firefly" dance was an added feature. The vocal soloists were Vivente Ballestoe and Mme. Jeanne Maubourg.

"The House of Lies" at the Broadway.

Edna Goodrich was the star at the Broadway theater in the Morosco-Paramount photoplay, "The House of Lies." As the name implies, the house is the abode of artifiaciality and of vain strivings. Amid these surroundings an interesting character is developed—a beautiful woman, who goes through several surprising experiences. Miss Goodrich wears some elaborate gown during the action of the photoplay.

Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, Paramound-Bray cartoons, Pictographs, the usual weekly news and a comedy were also shown.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four Triangle pictures were shown. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Mae Marsh and Robert Harron were seen with the Triangle "Kiddies" in "The Little Liar." A Sennett Keystone comedy was on the same program. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Louise Glaum and Charles Ray in "The Wolf-Woman," and a Triangle Keystone comedy were the picture features.

MURDOCH JOINS "HAM" FORCES.

Kalem's latest step of "concentration" to assure all-star casts in all of its short-length productions is the assignment of Henry Murdoch to the company producing the popular "Ham Comedies" at the Hollywood studio. Murdoch will be remembered as featured comedian in the Sis Hopkins and Ivy Close subjects.

To join the new organization it was necessary for Kalem to send Murdoch from the studio at Jacksonville, Fla., to California. The acquisition of Murdoch gives the one-reel "Ham Comedies" an unusually strong quartette of stars in Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and the newcomer.

Releasing only four productions a week on the General Film program, Kalem officials are proud of the proportions reached by the roster of stars, which includes Marin Sais, True Boardman, George Larkin, Ollie Kirkby, Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare, Heury Murdoch, Ivy Close and Helen Gibson.

Goldfish Resigns from Famous Players-Lasky

Founder of Lasky Feature Photplay Company Retires from Connection with New Corporation—Will Continue on Board of Directors

SAMUEL GOLDFISH has resigned as chairman of the board of directors and also as a member of the executive committee of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Goldfish, however, retains his position on the board of directors and his interests in the company, which are understood to be very large.

In response to a request for a statement regarding this decision, Mr. Goldfish said: "I have contemplated retiring from the active management of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for some time in order to mature certain personal plans which are of great importance to me and which I could not mature if I continued as one of the executives of the company. I could not, however, see my way clear to resign as an officer of the corporation until the grave matters arising out of the adjusting of details between the two corporations, which merged only recently into the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, had been completed. It is, of course, a matter of great regret to me that serving the corporation and going on with these plans, of which I can say nothing definite at the present time, became inconsistent. From the time of the beginning of the Lasky Company to now, my heart and soul were in the work which I started quietly and unostentatiously only about two and one half years ago. I am very proud of what has been accomplished, first by the Lasky Company and since by the larger and more important corporation into which it merged with the Famous Players Film Company a few months ago, and proud too, of such share of its success as my associates have been good enough to credit to my endeavors. My confidence in its future is amply evidenced, I think, by my retention of all of my stock interests in it."

After receipt of Mr. Goldfish's resignation as chairman of the board of directors and a member of the executive committee of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the board of directors issued the following statement:

"Although Mr. Goldfish's resignation did not come as a complete surprise, it was received with great regret and accepted because the board felt that any request that Mr. Goldfish continue longer as an executive of the company would be unfair to him, in view of his statement that his work with the company would interfere with the maturity of his personal plans.

"Mr. Goldfish's earnest and conscientious efforts, first on behalf of the Lasky Company, and since its organization, on behalf of this company, have earned for him the esteem and good will of all his associates and in accepting his resignation, the board, collectively and as individuals, expressed to him their best wishes for and confidence in his future."

Richardson Rambles to Havre de Grace

The Projection Editor Visits Wilmington and Is Jolted by Jitney Shows and Exclusiveness of Exhibitors

LEAVING Little Ol' New York at 11.30 A. M., Tuesday, September 12th, I whispered into the metal ear of Miss Nancy Hanks, No. 3, the Go Devil, that if she landed me in Havre de Grace (pronounced Haver de Grau) by nightfall I would feed her some extra good oil and a double portion of gasoline. The poor thing did her best, but the naughty repair men had the reg'lar road closed from New Brunswick to Trenton, and we got our dates twisted on the detour. Did we find any sand? Well, since you ask, why yes! Though none of it exceeded thirteen and a quarter inches deep.

Well, anyhow we made Wilmington, Delaware, 135 miles out, and as it was 158,400 feet from there to the Grau thing, and the clock said supper time, we concluded to drop the anchor and help Wilmington spend the night.

Wilmington (population 100,000) has eight moving picture shows, but alas, over most of the box office windows is the legend "Admission 5 cents." The ten-cent house is rare and twenty is the absolute limit—only charged in one house, I believe.

This discouraged me right at the start, for at least some of the houses are really beautiful and it is nothing short of foolish (to use a mild term) to give ("give" is good) the public six or seven reels of our best modern programs for five cents, which is precisely what Wilmington managers are doing. One might as well present Sothern or Bernhardt for a quarter!

A few inquiries were sufficient to put me in possession of the reason for this state of affairs. I had not expected to stop in Wilmington, but though wishing devoutly for the comfort of a bed, still I decided to try and do some missionary work for projection and suggested to the manager of one of the big houses that he get busy on the telephone and call the managers and operators together in his theater at 11 P. M. so I could address them. He threw up both hands and earnestly assured me that it could not be done, that Wilmington managers and operators could not be gotten together by anything short of a public calamity; that they fought each other and were suspicious of each other and would combine on nothing. I would not have accepted such a seemingly absurd statement from one man, but others voiced the same view. I also learned that this extended to the operators of the various houses.

How silly! Are you a lot of children quarreling over your mud pies? Shame on you, gentlemen! I was told that a few managers were responsible for all this—that they were of the type who if a competitor advertised a feature for ten cents would move heaven and earth to get it on the same day if possible, for five, and add a few reels to it for good measure. This type of "manager" is in the nature of a public calamity. If he exists in Wilmington that fact is to be deplored. He is a drag on the industry. He is not a good showman or a good business man. He makes no money himself, and prevents anyone else from making any. He is a barnacle on the ship of progress. These are strong words—yes, but they won't hurt the feelings of any one except the guilty and his feelings certainly ought to be hurt.

As for the "five cents admission," why, gentlemen, it is high time that it be changed to ten. If all Wilmington theaters raised to ten cents tomorrow business might fall off for two or three weeks, yes, but within thirty days you would have increased revenue, and within sixty days you would have as many ten cent admissions as you now have five cent ones. That has been absolutely proven in literally hundreds, if not thousands of cases.

In the few houses I visited briefly the picture was very well illuminated indeed. In one I remarked on the excellence of the work except for one item—speed. The manager was out, but the publicity manager promptly assured me I was in error. "Why, we run seven reels in one and one-half hours," said he, "therefore, you see, the speed is right!" It is to laugh! Twelve minutes to the reel, and "not fast." I have mentioned no names for obvious reasons. I shall be glad to go to Wilmington (a fine city, by the way), at a later date and address the men if they can be gotten together. Possibly that might be done, and if so I'll bet they will find that after all no one will be killed, or even badly bitten. It is an outrage that those beautiful houses and our modern magnificent photoplays be prostituted to a five cent admission.

F. H. RICHARDSON.

NEW NAME FOR HOUSE ORGAN.

Commencing with the issue of September 9, "The Big Four Family" will be known as "The Vitagraph Family." It is published weekly for and by the co-workers of the Greater Vitagraph, and in the interests of good service to exhibitors. In the issue of September 9, Albert E. Smith, Greater Vitagraph's president, issues a broadside in his characteristic, forceful style which is a statement of the big things in store for exhibitors, taking for his text the slogan, "From Producer to Exhibitor."

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS MEET.

Special Session Held in Minneapolis Brings Out a Good Attendance of Local Exhibitors—Thomas Furniss Talks.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, was held at the West Hotel, Monday, August 28th, at 2 P. M., after a luncheon served in the Pheasant room by the Association for the Twin City exhibitors. There were present James Gilosky, president; Wm. Koenig, secretary; D. G. Rodgers, F. E. Nemeo, Henry Greene, and J. B. Reisman, members of the Executive Committee, and about fifty of the Twin City exhibitors.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. Gilosky, who after a short opening speech introduced Thomas Furniss, former member of the executive board of the association, and now chairman of the Executive Board of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Mr. Furniss' speech in part follows:

I take this opportunity to thank you in person for the many friendly letters I have been unable to answer. I appreciate the good feeling of the Northwest exhibitors, and assure you that my interest in the National League is from no selfish motive, although, as the motion picture industry improves, my business also improves. However, the old guard are anxious to retire and to see new men enter the field.

You exhibitors of Minnesota and the Northwest need an organization, a good strong local, for, with so many unfavorable conditions arising, you must be brought together. That is the purpose of this meeting.

The national association of the motion picture industry has really sprung from the manufacturer, the exhibitor and the film exchanges. The greatest good accomplished for the industry was at the two expositions held in New York last year, but that meant the failure of the Board of Trade, a manufacturers' organization. At the end of the exposition they found themselves in debt, which they are now paying up pro rata. A number of the big men set aside a sum of $5,000 to be distributed for the purpose of someone devising a means of bringing the industries together. As a result they got together and now have their organization. They elected five directors, the publicity men elected five, the accessory men elected five, the exchange men elected five and the exhibitors were allowed to elect ten directors. The idea was to bring in every branch affiliated in the industry, organ men, printing men, newspaper men, etc. The spirit was to co-operate, and so every branch of the industry has been thoroughly organized except the miscellaneous class. The motion picture actors were to be included in this miscellaneous class, but they objected to coming in as such, so a committee has been appointed to adjust this matter. When this industry is perfected, wonderful results will he shown.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America has grown to be an institution to which all are anxious to affiliate themselves, but before affiliating with the national organization one must be a member of good standing in the local organization. There are great benefits to be derived by belonging to the national league. The best lawyers and talented men of the country are employed to go to the aid of the exhibitor if necessary.

The power the exhibitor may exercise has never been demonstrated. At the present time the condition of the industry is terrible, but all are now beginning to awake to the fact that something big is coming out of the effort to organize. Even now, the national organization has ample funds to assist any State organization in case of trouble, and it will assist it.

The Kitchin Bill.

The principal men of the country are beginning to realize the power of the motion picture industry. The two highest candidates for office have recognized the power of this industry and have asked for its support. There are now in the New York office of the Exhibitors' League of America letters from every Senator except two, concerning the Kitchin bill. The matter of censorship will be straightened out.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has done this. It has incorporated under the State of New York, and has opened offices in the Times building, employed a secretary, a man of ability to organize, who, although new to this industry, has been an organizer and promoter in other lines. He brings new blood into this industry. He will carry us into a line of politics we have never entered before. I believe he is going to make a valuable secretary. Mr. Brady will devote a lot of time to this association and is bound to make it a success.

Besides a lot of the big men, as we term them, have taken off their coats and are putting their shoulders to the wheel. A grievance committee has been appointed, to whom you can go with your grievances. There will be a looking after competition, and the building of new theaters in overcrowded localities.

For the benefit of some who do not understand what I mean by the Kitchin bill, I will say that this is a bill by which the exhibitors would be taxed one-half of one per cent. of his gross business. The bill passed Congress in a very unusual way. It was referred to no committee, and it came very near getting through the Senate. But the Kitchin bill is now in such shape that it will not be raised in this session. A great deal of credit must be given the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America for that.

Recent Growth of the Organization.

The National Exhibitors' League has gradually come along. A short time ago at San Francisco, there was absolutely less than one hundred and twenty-five exhibitors at the convention. It was pitiful to see this great industry with no organization. Fred Herrington was made president of the League of America, although he did not want the position. He had no books, no treasury, or anything to work with. He used his own money and worked for the league. This year the convention in Chicago was the biggest and best get together spirit ever shown by the exhibitors of the United States. On Thursday morning, after the delegation from New York arrived and said they wanted to co-operate, thereby showing their interest, fifty of the big exhibitors, or more, that had never affiliated before, were present. The exposition was a big success. It cleaned up in the neighborhood of $12,000, and next year will have in its treasury $50,000. The get together feeling in Chicago did this. I believe that in Lee Ochs they have elected a powerful man, a man who thoroughly understands the industry from A to Z. That the rest of the organization will co-operate and are co-operating with him, was shown recently when the correspondence with all the Senators in regards to the Kitchin bill was gone over.

There are a number of wonderful things in store for the national motion picture association. We have five or six propositions lying on the table, whereby the financing of the industry is assured. Men, bearing bank statements showing that they had over a million dollars in that bank, put a wonderful proposition up to us, but we refused. So you can see how the association is going to be financed.

The big exhibitor has never gone into the exhibitors' association before, for he has never felt the need of an organization. But during the Chicago convention, Mr. Hamberger, one of the largest exhibitors in the country, connected with over seventy theaters, as a special favor to one of his friends, lent his support to the organization, and called a special meeting at his theater. He was elected as a member of the Executive Committee and is now an enthusiastic worker for the organization. He attended a meeting in New York, and declared that there was not enough money in New York to induce him to resign from the Executive Board now (although his enthusiasm was small at the beginning), so interested has he become in the work of this organization.

A Get-Together Needed.

Brother exhibitors, the thing to do is to call a special meeting and get together with the manufacturers. They are willing and anxious to please you. They want to work hand in hand with you and are only waiting to know what you want them to do.

I. H. Rubin Sees Need of Twin City Organization.

Mr. Gilosky then called upon the largest exhibitor in Minnesota, I. H. Rubin, who said, in part:

"The smaller exhibitor relies on the large managers to take care of the difficulties, instead of assisting them, which is entirely wrong. We surely need an organization in the Twin Cities, not one in name only, but one in action. If we do not, we are going to come in contact with some breakers. There are one or two things that have come up here within the last two weeks that have got to be taken care of. The smaller exhibitor has been threatened. Any threat to the little exhibitor will reach the big one.

"A few weeks ago we settled the stage hands' demands on us for an increase in salary. At the present time there is going to be an increase in rates in the newspapers, the paying of express, paying for lobby displays, and other unreasonable things. The reason for all this is that they know that there is no organization in the Twin Cities, and they can get away with these things."

Mr. Gilsoky called upon T. L. Hays, who made a short speach, but to the point, and he was followed by Mr. Rogers, who graphically described the work of the organization.

The Open Meeting.

An open meeting was then called. The question of the raise in salary of union operators was brought up by Mr. Gilosky. Mr. Koenig stated that the business agent of the operators' union called on him and wished him to sign a contract, but before doing so, he decided to discuss the matter with the other members of the organization.

Mr. Steffes favored hiring non-union men, and paying them more or less than union wages, as he desired. Mr. Gilsoky favored getting a certain scale and sticking to that scale. Mr. Rodgers proposed that a committee of operators meet the Executive Board. Mr. Koenig informed the meeting that the operators were willing to meet the managers at any time. Mr. Chamberlain stated that the matter should be left to arbitration, and that a committee of theater managers meet the operators.

Mr. Rodgers moved that a committee be appointed, consisting of theater managers, to meet the operators. Mr. Chamberlain seconded the motion. Motion was carried by vote.

The following committee of exhibitors was appointed: Jake Cohen, Lagoon theater; W. D. Chamberlain, American theater; George Garrish, Third Ward theater; Ed. Hinz, Cosy theater; Mr. Calvert, New Garrick theater, and Mr. Stelzner, Star theater. Arrangements were made to meet the operators committee.

MASSACHUSETTS EXHIBITORS.

Hold Spirited Meeting at Beacon Theatre Building, Boston, September 7.

A VERY spirited meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts was held on Thursday, September 7, at Beacon Theatre Building, Tremont Street, Boston. It was unanimously passed that the directors legalize the vote passed at the last meeting, that the organization join the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. This local organization to be called the Massachusetts Branch. It was voted that the present members in good standing be registered as members of the new organization.

The following officers were temporarily elected: E. H. Horstmann, president; R. W. Drown, first vice-president; P. F. Lydon, second vice-president; H. A. Gilman, treasurer; H. I. Wasserman, secretary. The following board of directors were appointed: E. H. Horstmann, F. J. Howard, R. W. Drown, Jacob Laurie, P. M. Lydon, G. M. Clark, H. A. Gilman and H. I. Wasserman.

A committee of two, H. I. Wasserman and Jacob Laurie, were appointed to seek suitable quarters in the vicinity of the film district.

Other important matters were taken up, such as appointing a committee to see the Mayor, Honorable James M. Curley, with the view of reducing the Sunday licenses. A committee was also appointed to see Chief Plunkett with the view of modifying the strict censorsnip on Sunday pictures, and other hardships imposed on the exhibitors.

Later the above committee reported that a favorable conference was held, and certain modifications were made in the stringent laws.

NEW JERSEY EXHIBITORS ACTIVE.

Big State Convention is Planned for October 4th, When Big Matters Will Be Discussed and Acted Upon.

THE organized exhibitors of Hudson and Essex Counties, N. J., under the leadership of the respective presidents and officers of these counties, have decided to call a state convention for which an invitation has just been issued. This call has been sent to every exhibitor in the state of New Jersey, and reads as follows:

Dear Sir.—A convention for the purpose of forming a state organization has been called by the Hudson and Essex county organizations to take place on the 4th day of October, at 11 A. M., at Achtelstetter's Hall, 842 Broad street, Newark, N. J. It is imperative that all counties in the State of New Jersey be represented. Matters directly affecting the welfare of every motion picture exhibitor in New Jersey will be discussed and acted upon. Among these matters are the abolition of the deposit system; the reduction of electric light charges, which has been accomplished by the New York exhibitors; the arbitrary practices of film exchanges and the formation of a legislative and political program which is to be submitted to the convention. Both of the gubernatorial candidates have been invited to attend the convention and to give a clear statement of their position on the question of censorship.

The convention will be opened by Thomas L. Raymond, the Mayor of Newark. The following speakers have been invited to attend and address the convention: Lee A. Ochs, President of the National League; William A. Brady, President of the N. A. P. I.; Walter W. Irwin, of the V. L. S. E., and W. Stephen Bush, of the staff of The Moving Picture World. A luncheon will follow the convention, to which all are invited. Communicate at once with F. J. Lischke, 967 Summit Avenue, Jersey City, N. J., if you are in sympathy with the movement and if you will attend.

The call is signed by Dr. H. Charles Hespe, president of the Hudson County Association, and by B. Stern, president of the Essex County Organization.

Louis Blumenthal, who has been most active in organization matters both in New York and New Jersey, and who owns a number of theaters in both states, told a representative of the Moving Picture World that he hoped and believed the convention would be well attended and mark an epoch in the history of organization in New Jersey, just as the Albany convention became a great event in the history of the New York state organization. "There is splendid material for an organization in New Jersey," said Mr. Blumenthal. "The hearing on censorship before a committee of the last legislature showed that plainly enough. There is no state in the Union which needs a strong and active state organization more badly than the state of New Jersey."

BUSY BRONX EXHIBITORS.

The Bronx exhibitors are a busy lot these days, more particularly Henry Cole, the chairman of the arrangements committee for the fourth annual entertainment and ball of the Cinema Exhibitors' Association, Local No. 2, M. P. L. of A. This notable event, according to Chairman Cole, will occur on election eve, which means November the 6th, 8 p. m., at Hunt's Point Palace, 163d street and Southern boulevard.

There will be a grand march of photoplay stars and, even at this date, the co-operation of a formidable galaxy of stars has been secured by the indefatigable chairman and his able assistants, J. Bolte, H. Pollak, A. Levy, N. Scheinberg, A. Bauernfreund and President John J. Wittmann, ex-officio. In the words of the enthusiastic chairman: "This affair will eclipse all the past entertainments of our association. Here is one little bit of news for the present: Madame Olga Petrova will lead the grand march."

COMMITTEE FOR EXHIBITORS' BALL.

New York Exhibitors' Association has named the committeemen who will have charge of the big motion picture ball to be held at Madison Square Garden, New York City, on Thanksgiving Eve, November 26. They are: General Committee, I. N. Hartsell, L. F. Blumenthal and William Hilkemeier; reception committee, Lee A. Ochs; arrangements, I. N. Hartsell; entertainment, L. F. Blumenthal; tickets, William Hilkemeier; floor, Charles Steiner; badges, Otto Lederer; decorations, Charles Haring; music, Gus Koenigswald; press, publicity and program, Thomas Howard; master of ceremonies, S. H. Trigger; invitations, C. R. Martineau; wardrobe, Benjamin Lyons.

Contract for the decorations of the Garden has already been made at a cost of $6,000. Much space has also been taken in the program.

MEGOWN RECONSIDERS.

Charles E. Megown is to continue as secretary of the Cleveland district, Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. His resignation, submitted to President Swayer a fortnight ago, was refused by that official and Megown consented to continue in the office, which he accepted against his inclination. Megown's resignation was caused by press of private business, which he feared would make it impossible for him to give the league his best efforts.

Vitagraph Stars Cheered in Montreal

Lucille Lee Stewart, Ralph Ince and Huntly Gordon Pack Imperial Theater to Doors at Two Performances.

A TELEGRAM, received from the Montreal V-L-S-E manager, L. H. Watrous, says that the personal appearance at the Imperial theater in Montreal packed that large house to the doors at two performances. Miss Stewart in well chosen words thanked the large audience that came from all over the city of Montreal to see her for their kindly interest in her work as a Vitagraph star and also rendered a vocal solo in her most charming manner. She was cheered to the echo.

Lucille Lee Stewart.

Ralph Ince and Huntley Gordon followed Miss Stewart upon the stage and spoke briefly of their work. Mr. Ince spoke of the motion picture industry as a director would see it; referring to the high salaries paid to actors and others in the profession, he asserted that he believed they were always deserved, considering the sometimes hazardous nature of the work. Mr. Gordon's talk was largely in the nature of a greeting to his old friends in Montreal.

On their return from the West, where they are now bound, Ralph Ince will start work on a new feature in which both Miss Stewart and Mr. Gordon will appear.

Ouimet Films Bridge Disaster

Alert Cameraman Catches Fall of Last Span of Quebec Bridge—Scene in Pathe Weekly.

THE great tragedy of September 11, when the central span of the new Quebec bridge went to destruction, was witnessed by L. Earnest Ouimet, general manager of the company, distributing Pathe pictures in Canada, who was present with his camera and due to his rapid work in developing and printing, several Montreal theaters exhibited moving pictures of the attempted suspension of the center span of one of the longest bridges in the world, and the resultant catastrophe on the following day.

Being the official photographer of the St. Lawrence Bridge Company, Mr. Ouimet was allowed within the police lines, and from the deck of his tug he photographed the fatal span as it floated into position shortly after daybreak yesterday morning. As the tug on which he had located his camera neared the bridge, Mr. Ouimet endeavored to secure as many feet as possible while the connecting link settled into position between the huge uprights which were to lift it to its proper place. Mr. Ouimet said that after the span had been placed and was ready for hoisting, the steamers with the representatives of the Dominion and Provincial Governments drew up to the span and stepped on to the structure. He said that had it fallen then the loss of life would have been terrible.

The hydraulic lifters were set in action and slowly the 640-foot span began its upward rise. Mr. Ouimet was not operating his camera throughout this period as the movement of the rising structure was very slow. However, he stood close by with his assistant ready to "shoot" at any moment.

Suddenly he heard the cracking of the steel. He snatched the crank on his machine and by the time he had given three turns the center link of the Quebec bridge was beneath the surface of the St. Lawrence River. However, Mr. Ouimet had secured a thousand feet of these operations and returned to Montreal, where he worked all night with his full studio force, in order to give to the public the moving picture story of the catastrophe as it was registered on his negative.

Mr. Ouimet stated that he had sent prints to Toronto and other cities by express and that the film was to be released in the states through Pathe News on Wednesday, September 13. This is quick work considering the facilities which were available for developing and printing and the long trip between the scene of the disaster and the Montreal studio, and great credit has been accorded Mr. Ouimet by exhibitors and exchange men throughout the Province for getting his film on the public screens while excitement was at its height.

In relating his experience, Mr. Ouimet says: "We were on a tug close to the central span, taking motion pictures of the work, when I heard something like the snapping of a huge cord. I looked above and saw the south end of the span bend then totter towards the south shore. Men were falling off the work like coal out of a van and I also saw a group of men who were on the anchor span and who were knocked off by flying debris. Some of these we picked up while a score of small vessel and other craft rushing to the scene succored the men we saw struggling in the water."

VICTOR MOORE AT LIBERTY.

Victor Moore, until recently a Lasky star, is now at his summer home and has been spending his time fishing and hunting, being an ardent sportsman. He now feels ready to resume work. Among his Lasky successes were "Snobs," "Jimmy Fadden" and The Clown." In this latter picture Mr. Moore has shown an aptitude for dramatic work of the sympathetic kind, which is well worth the serious consideration of producers who will insist on keeping him down to the strict comedy lines. Mr. Moore possesses a natural sympathetic appeal, which is bound to win favor in any work he will do.

He has arranged with Sam Tauber to be his personal representative. Mr. Tauber is prominent as a promoter of publicity, and as an author and scenario writer. His recent work was "Phantom Fortunes," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, with Barney Bernard as star. Mr. Tauber has in preparation a series of one and two-reel plays for Mr. Moore, each full of laughs, yet with a sympathetic appeal at the conclusion.

PRODUCING PICTURES FOR LATIN AMERICA.

A new company has recently been incorporated under the name of the Latin American Producing Company, with offices at 1482 Broadway, for the production of two and three-reel pictures exclusively for the South and Central American markets. Paul Trinchera, who has been director for the leading Italian and French companies, and until recently a director with the World and Universal companies, will have entire charge of the artistic direction of these productions.

Ince Extends Great White Way

Transforms Columbus Circle Into Blaze of Light with "Civilization" at Park Theater.

MOTION pictures in the last five years helped to make the Great White Way between 42d street and 59th street New York City, what it is—the greatest and most brilliant spot of light on the globe. Broadway is the shop window of the amusement business, not alone of the United States, but of the world. At one time merely the metropolis of theaterdom and vaudeville, it now embraces even another kingdom, that of the motion picture.

The extension of this blaze of lights to 59th street has been completed by Thomas H. Ince, producer of "Civilization," who again demonstrates his genius as a pioneer by blazing the trail in an entirely new direction. Ince has the keenly developed instincts of the master showman. When he was forced by circumstances over which he had no control to move his picture from the Criterion, he, with the resourcefulness of his race and kind, set about to take advantage of the opportunity to go one better than he did on Broadway. He deliberately selected the Park theater, Columbus Circle, and, as the phrase runs, at once proceeded to spend money "like a modern Croesus."

To electrify Columbus Circle a small fortune has been expended in the construction of the longest electric sign in the world, the letters forming the word "Civilization," the name of Mr. Ince's film. This sign stretches from Eighth avenue right across to the Park theater, having a gigantic electric hand pointing down to the entrance of the theater, so that as you come down Broadway, or along the park, or 59th street, or as you go up Eighth avenue; from east, west, north or south, in fact, you are bound to see this sign and go where it leads and points. It gets you.

This is not all. Right over the entrance of the Park theater there is a 40 ft. by 50 ft. sign made of enormous flaming arc lamps, and on top of the theater is a searchlight sweeping the points of the compass.

Nothing, in short, has been omitted to continue the brilliant line of Broadway's light, which starts, let us say, from Herald Square or Times Square to the point where it properly terminates in the major degree, that is, Columbus Circle.

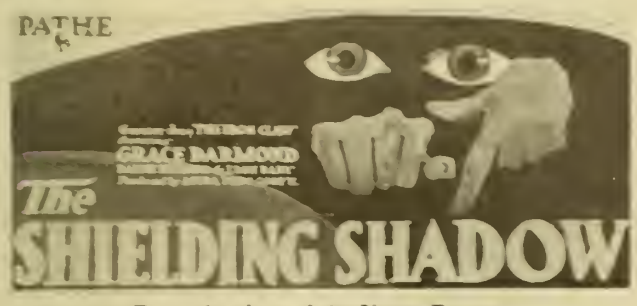
Westerns a Specialty

The Dudley Motion Picture Manufacturing Company to Release Western Features Through the Unity.

M. B. DUDLEY, president and general manager of the Dudley Motion Picture Manufacturing Company, has made arrangements with the Unity Sales Corporation to release the features produced by his company. The Dudley Motion Picture Manufacturing Company is a newly formed organization and will specialize in Western dramas. The first two features are entitled "Humanizing Mr. Winsby" and "The Land Just Over Yonder," both picturized from the stories of the well-known Saturday Evening Post writer, Peter B. Kyne. Mr. Kyne's stories need no introduction to the public, as he is unquestionably one of the best known writers of short stories on the Saturday Evening Post staff. The Dudley Motion Picture Manufacturing Company will produce one five or six reel feature each month and these will form a regular release on the Unity program. Mr. Dudley's last big picture, prior to the forming of his company, was "Panama and the Canal From An Aeroplane."

M. B. Dudley.

Mr. Dudley is enthusiastic over his new plans for the distributing of his pictures and believes that by specializing in Peter B. Kyne's stories, he can produce features that will have a tremendous popular appeal. "It will be our aim," said Mr. Dudley, "to produce feature pictures that have behind them a strong story and plots full of red-blooded action.



Pathe Publicity

Extension Advertising Plan Formulated for the Big Serial, "The Shielding Shadow."

PATHE has instituted an advertising campaign on "The Shielding Shadow," which may set a new mark in the history of motion pictures according to an announcement just issued by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager.

The serial, "The Shielding Shadow" was produced by the Astra Film Corporation under the direction of Louis J. Gasnier and Donald Mackenzie from the scenarios by George B. Seitz author of "The Iron Claw." Two newspapers in every important city of the country will carry "The Shielding Shadow" advertising. Allowing three readers to each copy (newspapers generally claim four), this means that more than 25,000,000 people will read about "The Shielding Shadow" each week. This marks but the beginning.

In addition to newspaper advertising, there will be billboards in nineteen of the larger cities and painted sign board in New York, St. Louis, Kansas City, Niagara Falls and Newark. The locations in New York were carefully selected by the secretary of the American Poster Company.

Reproduction of 24-Sheet Poster.

who is giving this campaign his personal attention. In other cities, the locations were chosen by the exchange managers in accordance with the desires of the exhibitors from a carefully prepared list furnished by the American Poster Company.

Posters have been designed with a space for the name of the theater and the dates they will show the picture. The newspaper advertising campaign is the strongest that has yet been put out by Pathe. The advertising has been prepared with the needs of the exhibitors and the tastes of the motion picture public uppermost in mind. It is strong, virile copy, with a punch in every line. G. A. Smith, serial publicity manager, is in charge of the arrangements for the campaign, with the personal co-operation of J. A. Berst.

Pathe's policy is to create business for its exhibitors. By means of newspapers, billboards and painted signs, it is doing so, reaching every resident and every visitor in all of the large cities. The exhibitor in the small town benefits by the prestige thus lent to the pictures which he presents. In addition, every possible advertising aid is furnished by the company.

Experience has shown that window cards are great business getters, therefore, there will be window cards on "The Shielding Shadow," playing up in a striking manner, the mystery which will interest more photoplay fans than the mystery of the Laughing Mask in "The Iron Claw."

In addition, there will be the following advertising matter on "The Shielding Shadow": Advance portrait one sheet of Grace Darmond, sets of five slides, including three on "The Mystery of the Shielding Shadow," 1 3 and 6 sheet posters for each release, colored lobby display photographs, 12 to a set, attractive booklets which will be substituted for heralds on the first two chapters—these booklets are printed on good quality stock and are attractively illustrated with colored photographs of Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard and Leon Bary. They contain a general story about "The Shielding Shadow" and the story of the first and second chapters. They will be issued in envelope size for mailing. For the remaining chapters of "The Shielding Shadow," there will be two colored heralds, envelope size for each release, 22x28 photograph of a scene from each week's release, 22x28 photographs of Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard and Leon Bary, one and two column newspaper cuts of scenes and stars for each chapter, canvas banners, 10x3 feet, advance twenty-four sheets, novelties. There will also be a campaign book giving the exhibitor a complete advertising and publicity campaign with reproductions of the advertising matter in order that he may see what he is getting and know how to use it.

Pathe knows it not only encourages its exhibitors to advertise but it helps them to do so. Because of this, the advertising on "The Shielding Shadow" will be greatly increased by the exhibitors themselves, when newspapers announcing "The Shielding Shadow" as a circulation and advertising revenue builder, are competing to obtain it.

Live exhibitors have already begun to work out their campaigns. Pathe has prepared numerous suggestions along this line. The general opinion is that this serial lends itself to a "theater campaign" of a remarkable manner and striking advertisements have been prepared. In a striking block design, the words "The Shielding Shadow" appear. Then photoplay fans are asked, "What is 'The Shielding Shadow?'" Then they are told "The Shielding Shadow" is coming and so on to the very day on which the picture is shown.

The advertising also plays up the thrills, such as the fire at sea and the escape locked in a cabin, the fight with the octopus, the secret of the skeleton of Ravengar's Lodge, the peril of the exploded balloon and the hazardous drop in the sea. It also introduces to the American public Ravengar, the mysterious; Grace Darmond as Leontine and Leon Bary as Sebastian.

Pathe's policy is to charge what a picture is worth. Prices have been doubled on "The Shielding Shadow." Bookings are pouring in. It is said that an exhibitor unable to secure first run and realizing that because of the interest aroused, the second run would be intensely valuable, has already arranged for the second showing in his town.

Prints of the picture are now in all Pathe exchanges. Its release date is October 1. It was recently announced that "The Iron Claw" had broken the record formerly held by "The Red Circle." Indications are that "The Shielding Shadow" will surpass "The Iron Claw."

Lawson Sees "Friday, the 13th"

Financier-Author Takes Great Interest in Production and Is Pleased with Results.

THOMAS W. LAWSON, author of the novel from which "Friday the 13th" was made into a photoplay by William A. Brady and the World Film Corporation, saw the production one evening last week in Boston, where he lives. The play was shown at the Park theater, and Mr. Lawson was one of the early arrivals, smiling rather quizzically and obviously not expecting very much in the way of thrills. His expression might indeed have been translated to mean that he felt it a duty to see this particular motion picture and would go through the ordeal without flinching, no matter how thoroughly the process might bore him.

This was before the episodes leading up to the climax of Mr. Lawson's romance began to unfold themselves upon the screen. As they progressed one after the other, increasing in the momentum of their movement toward the day of the big panic, the quizzical smile left the countenance of the man who invented "frenzied finance" and an expression of growing interest took its place.

The arrival of the "big" scenes, depicting the New York Stock Exchange in action, with one crowd feverishly forcing a certain stock upward and their opponents desperately striving to depress it—a mad struggle engaging the utmost efforts of the entire Exchange—found Mr. Lawson sitting up very straight, with knitted brows and drawn lips. When it was over he applauded fully as earnestly as any of his neighbors and quite obviously was immensely pleased.

"I was greatly surprised and delighted," he said later. "It had not occurred to me as possible that a story could be so fully and clearly told without the spoken word. I had seen a few moving pictures before tonight, but not many, and of those I had seen certainly none compared with this one in bringing out everything designed by the author.

"When I consented to the use of 'Friday the 13th' upon the screen, I was actuated principally by the desire to be obliging, and I had no very distinct hope of participating in anything out of the ordinary.

"But I found myself fairly carried away by the illusion of the picture. Why, it would be utterly impossible to secure any such effect as this Stock Exchange scene upon the stage of a speaking theater. Even the Hippodrome's immense spaces could not carry out the sense of vastness.

"Until tonight I had no appreciation of the possibilities of the motion picture, and I can begin to understand the congratulations which have been pouring in upon me by wire and mail since the first showing of 'Friday the 13th.' I dare say I shall develop immediately into a first class movie fan—which might come under the description of being 'loist with my own petard.'"

Biographs for October

Mary Pickford, Henry Walthall, Blanche Sweet, Lionel Barrymore, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Scores of Prominent Stars Are in Coming Biograph Releases.

A GLANCE at the program of Biograph releases for October through the General Film Company is sufficient to convince one of the magnitude of the casts appearing in these subjects.

Lillian Gish, in a one-reel Western, "An Indian's Loyalty," a subject that is replete with thrills and expert horsemanship. Released October 2.

Lionel Barrymore, William Russell, Irene Howley, Miilicent Evans and Thomas Jefferson head the cast in Austin Daly's great success, "Under the Gaslight," the famous melodrama of the New York underworld, in three reels, released October 4.

Mary Pickford, Wilfred Lucas, Robert Harron, Jack Pickford, D. W. Griffith's masterful direction, excellent photography and impressive scenes of the ancient Indian Pueblo at Albuquerque, New Mexico, all combine to lift "A Pueblo Legend" far beyond the average two-reel production. It is released October 10.

Blanche Sweet, Robert Harron, Wilfred Lucas and Joseph Graybill are responsible for a quick spirited "Western" in "The White Rose of the Wilds," directed by D. W. Griffith and released in one reel October 16.

Henry Walthall, Lionel Barrymore, Blanche Sweet, Marshal Neillan, Gertrude Robinson and Thomas Jefferson succeed in their efforts to interpret Robert Edeson's former success, "Classmates," on the screen. This interesting story of West Point and the South American Jungle affords many opportunities for exceptional work and the Biograph players have taken advantage of them. It is released October 18, in three reels.

Mary Pickford, Henry Walthall, Lionel Barrymore, Robert Harron, Harry Carey, in fact the entire Biograph stock company, are seen under D. W. Griffith's direction in "Friends," a one-reel Western mining camp story released October 23.

Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Lillian Gish and Charles H. Mailes are but a few of the prominent players in "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch," a two reel Indian spectacle directed by D. W. Griffith and pronounced the greatest two reel picture ever produced. It is released October 24.

Blanche Sweet, Dorothy Bernard and Charles H. West appear under D. W. Griffith's direction in "The Goddess of Sagebush Gulch," a Western story with a thrilling climax. Released in one reel on October 30.

Thos. J. McGrane

THE reason why the figure of Dr. Montrose in "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the sixteen-episode superserial photoplay presented by Consolidated Film Corporation, stands out so vividly is because it is interpreted by no less an artist than Thomas J. McGrane.

Thos. J. McGrane.

That Consolidated exhibited rare judgment in casting Mr. McGrane for the difficult role of the Doctor whose inventive genius is inadvertently misapplied, is quite evident, for there is probably no actor in America today who can do as well in this part as Mr. McGrane.

Having a foundation of six years with David Belasco, Klaw & Erlanger, William A. Brady, Mr. McGrane has brought to "The Crimson Stain Mystery" a world of experience in just such roles as he is now portraying. His masterful handling of the strange situations in which the role of Dr. Montrose plays a part is one of the many pleasing features of "The Crimson Stain Mystery." His remarkable interpretation of his difficult part has called forth praiseworthy comments from the motion picture critics.

Russell's Monarch Feature Ready

Richard Golden's Popular Play, "Common Sense Brackett," Is the First Six-Reel Offering.

BOB RUSSELL, well-known for many years in the motion picture industry, has organized the Monarch Photoplay Company, Inc., and is its president. He has just finished the first of a series of feature films, which the new organization will offer on the state-rights basis. It is the ever popular "Common Sense Brackett," and is the first screen production of a play in which the star was Richard Golden, whose name was a household word from one end of the country to the other. As a play it had a full season's run in New York and also in Chicago, playing all over the United States.

Bob Russell.

Mr. Russell is one of the most experienced men in the film business and has worked for all of the big companies from the time he was associated with the Miles Brothers, pioneers in photoplay production. His chief principle has been for the uplift of pictures and his producing of this strong drama of wholesome life is merely another evidence of this.

This picture is in six reels and was taken in the real country among the sort of people Common Sense Brackett knew, on the shores of picturesque Lake Sunapee, near George's Mills, New Hampshire. As usual, Mr. Russell has chosen his company from among the better players for the screen. It is virtually an "all-star" organization and many of the players have been retained for the next feature on which Mr. Russell will start work immediately. It includes William Fredericks, formerly with Famous Players; Wm. Sorelle, who has played with Marguerite Clark and other well-known stars; Barbara Gilroy, who was featured with Thanhouser; Bradley Barker, a prominent leading man; Mildred Gregory, who has played important parts with Lubin and others; Dallas Fitzgerald, Walter Hiers, the famous "fatboy," and many others. "Common Sense Brackett" was produced for the stage by Henry W. Savage.

KLEINE EXCHANGE MEN MEET.

An important conference of George Kleine exchange managers was held in Chicago on Sunday and Monday, September 10 and 11. Branch managers of the Kleine offices from the West, the South and the Central West, gathered to discuss plans for launching the regular fall sales campaign and to talk over problems effecting each individual exchange.

On Monday all the managers were guests at a noonday luncheon given at the University Club and following the meal M. E. Smith presided over a business meeting that lasted well along into the afternoon and which resulted in bringing out many new ideas by which exhibitors in all territories will benefit. In attendance at the meeting were Messrs. Buckwalter of Denver and Salt Lake City; Ragland of New Orleans; Edmunds of San Francisco and Los Angeles; Rosenberg of St. Louis; Wuerz, of Dallas; Ratz of Indianapolis; Hardcastle of Atlanta; Reavey of Cleveland; Graham, of Minneapolis; Nathan of Detroit and Jenner and Fox of Chicago.

"The Light of Happiness"

Five-Reel Metro Photoplay, Written and Directed by John H. Collins, and Starring Viola Dana.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"THE LIGHT OF HAPPINESS," produced by the Columbia Pictures Corporation, comes under the head of domestic drama. The action is confined with the boundries of a small village, and the characters are such as may be found in any hamlet within a dozen miles of New York City. John H. Collins, who wrote the scenario and directed its production, keeps the ingredients of his dramatic kettle always on the boil. The story opens without loss of time, and the supply of incidents does not permit the action to lag. The one drawback to this desirable state of affairs, is the fact that all the incidents do not carry conviction. However, as no attempt is made by the author to lift his work into the higher walks of the drama, and he is content to tell a simple but interesting tale that does not trouble itself or the spectator with psychologic deductions or anything but the most elemental manifestations of love and hate, it is only fair to state that, in the main, he has accomplished his purpose with more than ordinary skill. The big dramatic moment of the screen play is cleverly devised, and there is no question of its power to grip the emotions. The locations, the handling of the mobs, and the "stage business" of the individual members of the cast, all add to the credit marks that go to the director.

In plotting his play Mr. Collins has tried the dangerous expedient of two heroines and two heroes—and has come off reasonably well with such a handicap. The part played by Viola Dana is that of "Tangletop," the daughter of the town drunkard. Her father dies, and a young clergyman of the village takes her to his home. This starts a scandal, but the minister sends for his mother, hunts up the author of the lie, drags him to the door of the church, and makes him acknowledge his guilt to the entire congregation. Running parallel to, and interwoven with, this love motive, is the affair between the blind owner of Grey Towers and the grand-daughter of Elder Dean. "Tangletop" is persuaded by the rascally guardian of the blind man to trick him into believing that his sweetheart is unworthy of him. When the drunkard's daughter hears the minister preach a sermon on the text, "Thou shalt not bear false witness," after he has defended her good name at the door of his church, she realizes the wrong she has done and quickly makes amends. A double wedding is foreshadowed in the final scene. The power of the story to hold and to convince is at its lowest ebb during the scene where "Tangletop" tricks the blind man, and is at high water mark when the girl stands on the steps of the church and has it brought home to her that she also has borne false witness.

While it is obvious that the part of "Tangletop" was written especially for Viola Dana, the young lady's acting of the character justifies the author and all parties concerned. Miss Dana is fitted by nature and artistic development to give life and charm to the untaught but warm hearted little waif who wins the love of the athletic young minister. Lorraine Frost as Mollie Dean, and Robert Walker as the Rev. Clyde Harmon, are the next most efficient members of the cast, and George Melville, Harry Linsen, Edward Earle, Jack Busby, Mona Kingsley, and Mrs. Wallace Erskine demand honorable mention.

"The Dark Silence"

Clara Kimball Young the Star of a Five-Reel Peerless Photoplay Released by the World Film Corporation—The Battlefields in France Contribute to the Locations.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE scenario for "The Dark Silence" was made from a tale by Paul West, the present European conflict furnishing the background for several of the scenes. The development of the story during the first reel reveals nothing but a chain of commonplace incidents that do not always convince; then, suddenly, the clash of interests strike fire, and events move steadly forward to a compelling and unhackneyed climax.

Mildred White, an American art student in Paris, becomes engaged to a wealthy young English sculptor named Ainsworth. Mildred has also fascinated Dr. Martinez, a Spaniard, who is celebrated for his treatment of the blind. Ainsworth is called suddenly to England by the illness of his father. He leaves without seeing Mildred, and Martinez has no difficulty in convincing her that her lover has deserted her. The means by which this is brought about is the weakest point in the plot. The Englishman returns to Paris in search of Mildred, and is led to believe that she has become the companion of the Spanish doctor. In desperation, Ainsworth enlists, is blinded in the trenches, and Mildred, now a Red Cross nurse, meets him in a field hospital. She does not disclose her identity, but nurses Ainsworth with such devotion that he falls in love with her in her new character of Jeanette, and, on his return to England, she accompanies him. Later, they are married. The big moment of the story comes when Ainsworth's sister learns of a celebrated surgeon who may be able to restore her brother's sight. The man is Martinez. When he hears the name of the patient, he hesitates; but his better nature triumphs. On his arrival at the Ainsworth home to perform the operation, he comes face to face with Mildred. She is terrified at the thought of her husband regaining his sight and learning her identity. She stifles this feeling, however, and urges Martinez to go ahead with the operation. After this has been performed successfully, the Spaniard completes his good work by telling Ainsworth the truth about his wife. The doctor returns to France and is killed in battle.

The production of the picture is well done, except in a few incidences. The trench scenes could have been made more impressive, and one or two points in the plot should have been cleared up—notably, Mildred's marriage under a false name; but, the grand climax with which the author rounds out his story, sweeps away all thought of any previous weakness of incident.

Clara Kimball Young's performance of Mildred leaves nothing to be desired. To an actress of her ability, the part presents no difficulties. She responded to every mood of the character with an ease and sureness of method that makes her impersonation doubly enjoyable. Edward T. Langford as Derwent Ainsworth is manly, earnest and sympathetic, and thoroughly competent portrayals of the remaining characters are given by Paul Capellani, Barbara Gilroy, and Jessie Lewis. The picture was directed by Albert Capellani.

Norden and Winthrop Mandell. As the story nears its climax another situation develops, which, less hackneyed than the first, assumes an atmosphere of suspense that is startling.

The story, written by Edward J. Montague, has been directed by Ralph W. Ince, and has evidently gained much thereby in human appeal. The melodramatic element is strong without being overdone, and the psychology of the play rings true. There are two genuine thrills in the production that will prove entertaining to the general audience, the first occurring when the train on which Graydon Burton was to have come east is wrecked, and the second when, a prisoner of justice, he crashes through the window of the courtroom, mounts a tethered horse and rides to freedom, with the mounted police in pursuit.

Anita Stewart, as Muriel Fleming, daughter of a bankrupt widow and in secret the wife of a young westerner upon whom her mother frowned, has carried the role in her usual intelligent manner. The attitude of Muriel toward her second husband whom she has married at the request of her mother in the belief that her first husband is dead has been nicely thought out and delineated. An excellent piece of double exposure work wholly worthy of mention occurs in the battle of conscience when the Governor, husband of Muriel, fights off his desire to put to death Burton, his wife's first husband, on a false accusation.

"Where Love Leads"

Fox Offering for Week Beginning September 11, Tells Story With Two Dramatic Episodes.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE most recent Fox picture, "Where Love Leads," divides itself into two parts. It is a narrative in which there are two episodes closely related in all the externals, but almost wholly unrelated dramatically. It seems as though the majority of five-reel productions are examples of this same loose plot construction—they are, in truth, serials released as one picture. In this picture both the episodes are interesting if not wholly convincing—they get over especially the latter in which the American hero rescues from a White slaver the two little daughters of Lady Chatsworth who in the first episode had turned him down to marry a title and go to live in England. The lack of reasonableness in the situation but slightly effects our feeling of excitement once this part of the story gets under way.

The picture has been handled by director and players in a fairly able manner. Ormi Hawley as Miss Barlow, later Lady Chatsworth plays the leading role, but she drops out of the story completely in its most exciting part. She does acceptable work as Miss Barlow, and is much better in the more tragic role of Lady Chatsworth. Rockcliff Fellows plays the hero as a college football star in the first episode, and as a newspaper reporter in the second. The two young girls are stolen as they arrive on the steamer and taken to a fashionable dive. The reporter comes to the resort seeking a clue to their disappearance and finds both there. He gets one out to the street, and then has to fight the whole house. Is bound and thrown into a vacant room, while the girl is gagged and locked in a big chest. After delays the police get there and continue the fight which had been started again by the escape of the reporter.

IN THE seventh two-reel episode of the Beatrice Fairfax newspaper serial Beatrice and Jimmie Barton, the reporter, act as the agents of an outraged Cupid and, by a trick, bring about the marriage of a wealthy lawyer to the country girl he betrayed, thereby legitimatizing the baby for whom the mother sought a name. Harry Fox and Grace Darling are featured, with Betty Howe and Mary Cranston in support.

A strong dramatic situation, which could have been brought out much more forcefully, occurs in the action of the story when the young mother of the nameless baby, held at bay by a depraved tramp, is forced to make a decision between agreeing to marry the tramp and never seeing her baby again.

Investigation of a letter sent Beatrice Fairfax by Madge Minturn opens the story. Jimmie and Beatrice find that the father of Madge's child is James Conley, society man and lawyer, who is to wed Margaret Ryan. Conley bribes a depraved tramp to kidnap his baby and withhold it from Madge until she agrees to marry the tramp.

Jimmie and Beatrice arrive at the tramp's shack just as the tramp has forced Madge into agreeing to marry him. A fight between Jimmie and the tramp takes place. Jimmie is the victor and learns from the tramp that Conley was the instigator of the kidnapping. Beatrice goes to Margaret Payne, Conley's fiance, and tells her of Madge and of the baby. Margaret agrees to help Beatrice. The wedding is scheduled for the next day, and Margaret allows Conley to believe she still loves him. The ceremony takes place, and as Conley raises his bride's veil, he is amazed to discover that he has married Madge.

"The Return of Eve"

A Photoplay With Scenes of Idyllic Beauty by Essanay, Featuring Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien—Adapted by H. S. Sheldon, Directed by Arthur Berthelet.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE dramatic production of "The Return of Eve," written by Lee Wilson Dodd, was not a success, and one readily sees why, after viewing Essanay's visualization of the adaptation by H. S. Sheldon. While the story of the play had strong human interest, there was not sufficient dramatic action to sustain interest, the result being prosiness and boredom. Besides, the limitations placed on dramatic stage settings deprived the spoken play of much adjunctive beauty that might have redeemed it from the commonplace.

Scene from "The Return of Eve" (Essanay).

I am so pleased with Essanay's production of this story that I am not afraid to affirm at the start that it will rank among the best of the features bearing the brand of the Indian head, and that it will win great popularity—which also means that it will be a big box office favorite.

Director Berthelet, so far as I am able to judge, can honestly lay claim to flawlessness for his work. The magnificent exterior views are rich in artistic beauty, they are Nature, herself; but they are more, in the sense that they have been admirably selected to fit the requirements of the story.

This modern Eden, in which a modern Adam and Eve dwell, under the guidance of a gentle, old philosopher and naturalist, is situated somewhere in The Dells of Wisconsin. The varied beauty and charm of these scenes, amid which the young people are seen in happy companionship and communion of hearts, will long remain with the spectator. The home in which these three happy and innocent souls dwell is idyllic, and to heighten the charm of it and its environment we once catch sight of a deer looking in at the old philosopher as he sits poring over his books.

Contrasted with the simple beauty of these scenes in Eden are the luxurious interiors of the Tupper-Bellamy home. Among these the coming-out party of Eve easily stands first. Mr. Berthelet's handling of the aristocratic throng gives the impression of realism.

One cannot escape the nice attention paid to costuming in this production. The primitive attire of Adam and Eve and the fashionable garb of the elite impress one as being just the thing.

The photography of these films is up to Essanay's high water mark. I have seldom seen finer. The tinting of the many beautiful scenes lends a richness and softness to their beauty.

Special attention is due the artistic frames given the subtiles. Appropriate pictorial work (by hand), indicative of the thought suggested by each subtitle, is seen in each frame, and the lettering is bold and striking. The effect contributes an air of distinction to the production that is decidedly uplifting.

Miss Edna Mayo's Eve is a wild, innocent, charming creature. The characterization always shows subtlety of treatment. When fortune leads Eve to the fashionable home of Mrs. Tupper-Bellamy, with all her woman's wit and liking to become one of the fashionable set, she never can outgrow the freedom of Eden, which meant simplicity and innocence. When her fashionable shoes pinched, what more natural than to sit down on the carpet and take them off in the presence of the shocked assemblage!

And her likes and dislikes are spoken aloud. "I like you. Adam will like you too," she says to Trixie Shevlin, a beautiful young woman, who wears the first woman's riding habit Eve has ever seen. "Isn't she funny. Squatty like a toad and pinched together like an nut," she says, in a loud voice, of a grand dame, whose personality does not appeal to her.

And then when the man, Seymour Purchwell tries to take advantage of her innocence—for Eve fully believed that she should love everyone, in the sense that everyone in the world should love her—Eve awakens to a knowledge of the great evil in the world and goes back to her Eden, where Adam rejoins and wins her.

The role of Adam is equally well borne by Eugene O'Brien, who is particularly well suited for it in stature, figure and feature. Mrs. Tupper-Bellamy finds an excellent counterpart in Emily Fitzroy, and Seymour Purchell, the villain of the story, is ably impersonated by Edward Arnold.

One of the best sustained roles is that of David Winters, the old philosopher, and the teacher of Adam and Eve, who is excellently portrayed by Edward Mawson, a well known character actor on the stage.

The release date is October 2, through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, Inc.

"Blind Justice"

A Remarkable Feature Produced by Benjamin Christie, Director-General of the Dansk Biograph Company of Copenhagen.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE director who produced this seven-reel feature is not unknown in this country. He is the author of the well-known film play "Sealed Orders" which has scored a great success on both sides of the water.

In the present play Mr. Christie makes a radical departure from the plan he followed in "Sealed Orders." In the latter play action predominated and characterization played a minor part; in this new play this order has been reversed. "Blind Justice" is in the main a wonderfully artistic appeal to pity. Mr. Christie himself takes the leading part. He impersonates a half-witted man of exceptional physical strength, the victim of a justice which is blind. He is wrongfully accused of a murder. He escapes from prison, but is recaptured under highly dramatic and pathetic circumstances. A woman befriends the escaped convict and wishes to protect him, but her will is overborne by the other members of the household, and, in spite of herself, she becomes the betrayer of the man she had intended to shield. The convict believes himself the victim of the wilful treachery of this woman and vows to revenge himself. He serves a sentence of fourteen years and leaves the prison a broken man. He has but little interest left in life, especially when he discovers that his only child has been adopted by strangers whom he is unable to trace. He falls in with a former fellow convict and drifts along with him and his gang until a startling incident refreshes his memory and gives a new impulse to his desire for revenge. A series of sensational events leads him into the home of the woman whom he wishes to punish, and the interest of the spectator is stimulated to the highest degree until a powerful climax ends the story.

Scene from "Blind Justice" (Christie).

Mr. Christie the director rivals in fertility of invention and in talents for expression with Mr. Christie the actor. His characterization of the central figure of the story is a splendid bit of artistic work. Indeed, the acting throughout the play is of an uncommonly high character even in the minor parts. The scenes portraying the psychology of the child and the happiness of a contented family circle are done with rarest skill and will leave no spectator untouched. The artistic touch of the director is everywhere, but a special word of praise is due to the settings which were noticeable for their solidity and their impressive realism.

Mr. Christie does not believe in telling his spectators everything; he would rather keep them in suspense and leave something to their imagination and to their own guessing powers. "Blind Justice" is a filmed narrative rather than a strict film drama. To be sure, it abounds in thrilling incident. It is full of plausible sensations, but at times these incidents and sensations have no very intimate relation to the main theme of the play. No one having seen the film and passing it in mental review will regret these scenes or wish them eliminated or even shortened. I can pay no higher tribute to the art of the director. His methods and manners in direction are so original and his knowledge of the human heart is so intuitive that no one will care to criticize on formal grounds. The real test after all is the homely test applied by the average exhibitor: Does it reach the spectator's heart; does it grip his interest; or, in the colloquial words of the day, does it get over? I for one think it does.

"The Daughter of MacGregor"

Five-Reel Photoplay of Scotland and the United States, Produced by the Famous Players Film Co.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

VALENTINE GRANT is credited with having written the story of "The Daughter of MacGregor." Miss Grant is also the star of the picture. The best feature of the photoplay is its character drawing. In reproducing several types of Scotch folk, the author shows a clear understanding of the people. The opening scenes in the "Land o' the Heather" are touched with some of the skill of a Barrie. With the departure of Jean MacGregor for America not only is a new environment introduced, but the tempo is quickened and the rough and ready life of a Florida lumber camp brings a melodramatic atmosphere into the story.

At the opening of "The Daughter of MacGregor," Jean and her father are living peacefully together. A bit of scandal told about Jean and a wealthy young Englishman, causes the girl to leave home and start to join her uncle in Florida. The lie is told by Miss McGrimm, who, later, becomes Donald McGregor's second wife. Jean's adventures until she sails for America are full of new experiences. She joins a traveling show troupe, in order to earn the money for her passage, and pipes and dances at country fairs. Her Uncle Robert proves to be stern and unforbidding, but Jean wins him over when she helps to capture a gang of lumber thieves. The coincidences that the camp is owned by the father of the young Englishman permits the lovers to be reunited at the proper moment, and Jean goes home with a wedding ring on her finger to comfort the elder MacGregor, who is once more living in single blessedness.

Such a plot will hardly grip the attention by reason of its unexpected complications or the strength of its scenes. Interest in the fate of the heroine is maintained through the five reels, however, and the acquaintance of the characters is well worth making. The production is excellent throughout, a result that causes no surprise when it is known that Sidney Olcott directed the photoplay. The Scotch scenes have every indication of being genuine, and the lumber camp used in the picture is situated in Florida and has been skilfully utilized.

Valentine Grand has little difficulty in portraying her heroine. She makes Jean a charming example of young womanhood, and is as Scotch as the kilts that she wears so becomingly. Sidney Mason, Arda La Croix, Helen Lindreth and Daniel Pennell are entirely satisfactory in their several characters. A word of praise is due Lady, a wonderfully intelligent dog, who is Jean's companion throughout the picture.

to four reels than five, finishing apparently about the middle of the third reel. The added portion, which starts after the story of the childhood of the girl who has been brought up in ignorance of the fact that her mother is alive has been told, and also the story of how she has been cast out into the world alone and finally meets her own mother, narrates a series of incidents which happen as a result of situations which develop later.

Florence La Badie, playing the role of the young girl who is persecuted by a conventional aunt and a mean-spirited housekeeper, is supported by Marie Stowell, James Seeley, Ethyl Cooke and other Thanhouser players. Marie Stowell, as the wife of a certain prominent judge, and angel of the prison, and who later is discovered to be the mother of the misled Florence, is sweet and dignified in the part. The production has been provided with artistic settings and will be found to be of intense interest up to the point where its natural climax occurs. Had the story used as its basis the life of the mother with the incidents relating to the life of the child, more in the nature of explanatory embellishments, the production would have earned its title with nothing to spare on a five-reel development. The basic idea is a good one and boasts considerable originality, and the production is on the whole one that will be enjoyed.

"Inherited Passions"

Strong but Crude Melodrama in Seven Reels, Starring Dot Farley—Produced by the Century Film Co.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A SHORT story by Jack Wolf, "The Big Western Hat," gave Miss Dot Farley the inspiration for the scenario of "Inherited Passions." Although told in dramatic form and alive with engrossing action, the photoplay is as uncompromising a sermon on the evils of intemperance as "Ten Nights in a Barroom." Much of the story is as sordid as Zola's "Drink," and has considerable of the crude strength of the French novelist's famous work. In the screen play, a young girl whose father is cursed with an uncontrollable temper and an insatiable craving for strong drink inherits the base passions of her parent and, in spite of a chance to lead a good life when she meets and is married to a worthy man, is swept to her destruction, the victim of inborn evil. The story has the terrible fascination that watching a human being struggling in the grasp of a whirlpool holds for the spectator.

The childhood of Mazie Williams is shown in the first reel, her wretched home, and one of the brutal assaults which her drunken father is in the habit of bestowing on her mother. The poor woman dies from the effect of the beating, and her husband is given a long term in prison. The career of the girl after she reaches womanhood is a swift descent to the level of a dance-hall "worker." Here she meets the man who gives her a chance for happiness; but she tires of life on the ranch and goes back to her old companions, sinks lower than before, and is found and taken home by her husband, when nothing remains for her but a speedy and merciful death.

The incidents are not always in good taste; and one mistake in the logic of events would bring the whole dramatic structure down upon the head of its author. This mistake has not been made, however; and the picture is drama in the playwright's sense of the word and not narrative fiction.

Scenically, the production reflects credit upon the director, G. P. Hamilton. The ranch scenes are especially impressive. The acting is generally adequate. William Conklyn as the brutalized father of the heroine is the most effective member of the cast. Dot Farley as Mazie Williams is very much in earnest, but lacks repose, and is handicapped by an inartistic face makeup.

"The Chattel"

E. H. Sothern the Star of a Five-Reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Photoplay That Has Many Points in Its Favor—Released on the V-L-S-E Program, September 25.

PAUL WEST is the author of "The Chattel," the five-reel Blue Ribbon feature in which E. H. Sothern makes his debut on the screen. The play belongs to the romantic rather than the realistic school of drama. Although a story of to-day, its treatment is more like some of the works of a period long past, in which Mr. Sothern has acted. Blake Waring, the powerful financier whose life code is "I must and will have the best. For it I will pay any price and count the cost fair," does not belong to this day and age, in his attitude toward women. He buys his wife the same as he would buy any other chattel, and when she inadvertently breaks one of his tyrannical rules tells her that she must obey, as he has bought and paid for her. The story shows how the wife obtains two hundred and fifty thousand dollars—the sum advanced by Waring to save her father from financial ruin—repays Waring and runs away to hide her heartache. A reconciliation follows, the issue being never in doubt. The weak point in the plot is in having a man of Waring's brains treat a beautiful and refined woman in the way he does his wife, and then the moment she leaves him, having him cry out that he loves her and go into a decline. His action in refusing to allow the two old people to pick a few flowers from the grounds that had once been theirs is so contemptible that it seems overdrawn. Nevertheless if a spectator is willing to accept the promise of the author, he is assured a skilfully developed story. There is no denying its power to interest, and as Leila Waring loves her husband in spite of the egotism that has dried up his soul, her return to her home and to newly awakened appreciation is a source of general satisfaction.

The production merits nothing but praise. The locations, and the taste displayed in everything connected with the mounting of the picture redound to the credit of Fred Thomson, the director. The scenes of social life are particularly authentic.

The debut of so prominent an actor as E. H. Sothern upon the screen must naturally attract a great deal of attention. Mr. Sothern stands the test remarkably well for a man who has worn the habiliments and the manner of the costume drama for so many years. The effects of such a training leaves an ineradicable mark upon the mind and art of any actor. Small wonder, then, if the gesture and look with which Blake Warring emphasizes his commands recall Shylock or Macbeth. This fact does not prevent Mr. Sothern from giving the character the force of his personality and the benefit of his histrionic gifts. During the first half of the drama the star is called upon to show but one emotion—egregious selfishness, and the grand manner of the old school does not seem entirely out of place when portraying so primitive a passion. If Mr. Sothern should elect to become identified with the screen drama for a protracted length of time, it would result in a great gain for the industry and for the art.

Peggy Hyland impersonates Waring's wife. She is the embodiment of a beautiful, refined, high spirited and loyal woman, and realizes every situation and every phase of the character to the utmost. Her gowns also deserve a word of praise. Rose E. Tapley, Charles Kent, John Lark Taylor and Florence Radinoff help to maintain the performance at a gratifying level of excellence.

"Under Suspicion"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Mingles Crime and Comedy in an Enjoyable Manner.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel offering, based on a story by E. Phillips Oppenheim, is cleverly enacted by an English company, under direction of George Loane Tucker. The photography is much clearer than sometimes happens in English prints and the settings are pleasing.

Two characters claim attention from the start, Douglas Munro and Laura Cowie, the former because he plays as bland and smiling a rogue as ever stepped upon the screen and the latter because she is strikingly pretty and very easy to look at. The others in the cast are competent. Among them are Gerald Ames and Hayward Hobbs.

The story piques the interest from the start, when Douglas Munro is introduced as Joseph H. Parker, a man suspected of many crimes. He laughs at the detectives from Scotland yard and is seen dabbling in many questionable enterprises. Counterfeiting is his first exploit, but when the sleuths seek to catch him with the goods he tucks the bogus notes into the tail of the waiter's coat. The latter brings the notes to him next day. The theft of a necklace at the opera is splendidly staged and leads to some humorous situations.

While the various forms of crooked work are going on the daughter falls in love with a handsome young lord, who risks his honor to defend her. The close brings out the fact that Parker is not a criminal at all, but a henpecked husband fleeing from his wife. He has brought the daughter along for company.

There is something of a let down in the closing scenes, but on the whole the offering contains so much that is enjoyable and original that it proves very entertaining.

The production has been made with care and good judgment.

"The Mysterious Motor Car."

The sixth episode of the C. N. and A. M. Williamson serial finds Christopher Race with a new bit of detective work cut out for him. An automobile, which has been abandoned on the beach, promises an interesting mystery. Christopher attempts to clear it up, expecting to find nothing short of a murder at the bottom of the affair. He is successful in learning all about the auto, but in place of the looked-for crime, finds that a lover's quarrel is the reason for the mystery. The owner of "The Scarlet Runner," although pleasantly disappointed, has the satisfaction of helping to heal the breach between two

Number seven of the two-reel serial gives "The Scarlet Runner" a prominent place in the plot, and the entrance of a trio of diamond thieves into the story makes for action. A wealthy young chap gets Race to help him bring a very valuable diamond from Amsterdam to London. When Van Courtlandt arrives in England he is to be met by a trusted servant, the owner of the red whiskers. The leader of the diamond thieves gets the old man out of the way, puts on a false beard of the proper hue, and attempts to lay hands on the diamond. Four New Kalems

"Battle in the Dark," Seventh Episode of "The Girl from 'Frisco;" "The Death Swing," a New "Hazard of Helen;" "Rival Artists," a Two-Reel Comedy, and "Bumping the Bumps," Latest Ham Comedy.

"Battle in the Dark."

THE mystery and occultism of India are excitingly in combat with the red-blooded materiality of the West in the seventh instalment of the Robert Welles Ritchie series. The well-constructed plot consistently builds up to a strong climax in which a spectacular fire and the fight from which the photodrama takes its title occurs. The author has cleverly interwoven into the story a hint of the recent encroachment of Hindoo labor on Western ranch lands.

Barbara Brent, in this number of the Kalem series, answers the appeal of a girl friend, whose wealthy father is hopelessly controlled by the hypnotic power of Madah Singh. She learns the methods by which the Hindoo is mulcting the ranch owner of sums of money. She rescues from the forbidden attic of the house the Hindoo girl who, also under Singh's spell, is acting as his tool. In her fight with Singh a lamp is thrown, and the ranch house is set afire. Singh flees. Meanwhile the foreman of the Hindoo "rag heads," who have supplanted the white ranch hands, directs his followers to attack the house. With fire raging in the house, the occupants battle with the horde of rifle-armed Hindoos until succored by the arrival of the deposed ranch hands.

In the cast are Marin Sais, True Boardman, Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury, Karl Formes, Jr., and Josephine West.

"The Death Swing."

More hazardous than many of her preceding feats is the stunt performed by Helen in this number of the "Hazards of Helen." The crew of a freight train is taken from the engine by a disappointed suitor of Helen. He hopes in this manner to prove of no value a safety device invented by a young friend of the girl operator. The crewless train is set running wild with the throttle wide open. Helen crawls out on a rope that spans the tracks and leaps on to the top of the rapidly-moving train. She crawls to the locomotive and stops the wild freight just in time to avert a collision with a special train.

In the cast supporting Helen Gibson are P. S. Pembroke, G. A. Williams and George Routh.

"Rival Artists."

Two reels of knockabout comedy are offered in this production in which Ivy Close is featured. The picture depends more on the individual work of its members for its humor than on the story. The cast includes Henry Murdoch, Arthur Albertson, Robert Ellis and William McKay.

The fun starts when Dauber, a house painter, takes possession of a studio next to that occupied by Jack, a young artist, who has been refused permission to pay court to Nell by her father. Nell decides to elope and goes to Jack's studio. Dauber phones her father about this, and several "chase" scenes, in which a number of rather humorous stunts are performed, take place.

"Bumping the Bumps."

Once more Ham and Bud are rivals for the hand of Ethel. This time the diminutive Bud is the favored one, but Ethel's father will not permit a marriage until Bud's head has been examined by a phrenologist. Ham forcibly becomes a phrenologist, and after reading the bumps on Bud's head, tells Ethel's father that his rival is insane. Bud is loaded into an asylum van, but Ham's real identity is learned, and it is he who lands in a cell.

"The Return of 'Draw' Egan," a Strong Five-Reel Ince, With William S. Hart in the Title Role, and two Two-Reel Keystones, "The Winning Punch" and "His Lying Heart."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Return of "Draw" Egan is a well-constructed and interesting story suited to Mr. Hart, with a fine underlying theme, by C. Gardner Sullivan. The border life it pictures is much the same as that shown in similar releases starring Mr. Hart, and the material of the story is not particularly new, but there is a strong effect put over with happy results. There is a powerful appeal to compassion of the intelligent kind, a commiseration that reasons from experience and from knowledge of human nature. The underlying idea is that there is the making of a good man in the material of lawbreakers who are otherwise normal, who have often been driven by the blind forces of circumstances to become useless and destructive members of our social body.

This idea is in accord with the whole spirit of Americanism, and attempts have been made to give it forceful presentation in screen stories. It remained for Mr. Gardner to seize the weapons at his hand to carry the point with both artistry and power. "Draw" Egan is an outlaw, and one apparently without other preparation for a place in the civilized world than his daring, his physical strength and his skill in handling deadly weapons. Chance favors him at a time when his desperate career reaches the inevitable end. An incident at "Yellow Dog" reveals his command over the fear forces in men to a leading citizen of a neighboring village, who is in search of a man to act as sheriff where his bravery may count on the side of law and order. He accepts the position as an escape from the very forces he is thereafter bound to maintain. He is thereafter to enforce the law against which he has been long in revolt.

Here is a strong situation and one worked out with picturesque and convincing effect. The outlaw's sense of duty is not established by the responsibilities of his new position in life, but through the sentimental side of his character. He falls in love with the daughter of his benefactor. He is sorely tried over and over again in his new attitude and finally brought up to face a crisis beyond his power, but he has proven to others that he is capable of being of service and his dark past life forgiven with big and manly generosity, a happy and consistent conclusion.

"The Winning Punch" strikes a laugh-provoking note in the first act which is not preserved, the antics of a fat man, but the ring fight that follows is one of the most amusing things ever shown on the screen. Neither through melodrama, nor through mere slapstick, but through contrast and revelations of human nature as expressed in the contest, the little farce provides an abundance of fun every moment it is shown.

"His Lying Heart" is carefully planned, and contains many amusing episodes, but it depends too much upon exaggeration to go far. Ford Sterling still holds interest, though he is compelled to constantly repeat himself, reiterate one characterization over and over again where he is not supported in the true sense by creative ingenuity to any observable extent.

"Her Surrender"

A FILM production based on the sex problem to be wholesomely attractive must appeal to the intellect. At best such films are scarcely to be recommended for the visual consumption of the masses, consisting in the large majority of inert, susceptible minds, which treat with credulity any aspect of the case which the screen may suggest, devouring with avidity the more sensuous or unclean morsels.

While the film in question cannot be said to be unclean, it is neither wholesome nor does it appeal to the intellect. On the contrary, it attempts to treat with seriousness an idea too inane for serious discussion. This it does in a badly constructed story, with a cast far above the average, consisting of Anna Nilsson, Rose Coghlan, William H. Hooker, Wilmuth Merkyl, Harry Spingler, and Frankie Mann.

The story, when dissected from among the numerous side issues which have too slight a bearing on the main theme, treats of how a young woman, lured to the den of a gangster through the machinations of a jealous rival, is assaulted, and is finally stabbed in the fray that follows. Taken to the hospital she is about to die from loss of blood, when an employee of her father's, just released from prison, where he has been serving a term on an accusation of theft, offers his blood for transfusion purposes. Recovered, the girl finds ever before her the vision of the man who gave his blood for her, and finally sends for him, stating that his blood within her continues to call him. This state of affairs is termed by the author "transfusion of love."

"The Flower of Faith"

Jane Grey Featured in Five-Reel Drama Produced for the International Film Service, Inc.—First of the Golden Eagle Features.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

NOTWITHSTANDING the strength and interest of story found in "The Flower of Faith," a five-reel drama produced by the Superb Pictures Corporation for the International Film Service, Inc., the production is somewhat weakened by a rather illogical climax. This is more or less compensated for by several hundred feet of beautiful night scenes, which are enhanced by excellent photography, and the picture as a whole is worthy. It is the first of the International's Golden Eagle Features. Throughout the five reels runs the pure romance of a God-fearing girl and a man who is an unbeliever, with touches of melodrama that compel interest.

Ruth Judson, the embodiment of purity and goodness, is placed in a false position when she is found in the cabin of Hugh Lee, and will not explain her presence there because doing so would divulge the hiding place of her young brother, who has been shot in an attempt to steal back money he lost at cards, and who has taken refuge in Lee's cabin. Ruth's father, an itinerant evangelist, is so tortured by the belief that his daughter has sinned that his calling becomes less to him than his feelings as a father, and he becomes a member of the group of villagers who plan to run Lee out of the community. Ruth goes to warn Lee and is once more found in his company by her father. Lee is dragged from his cabin, a rope is placed about his neck and he is suspended from the limb of a tree. A bolt of lightning cuts the limb on which Lee is suspended from the tree. The falling limb hits the man who has done most to make the father agree to the lynching and kills him.

Jane Grey gives a charming and lovable portrayal of the character allotted to her, and is supported by clever work on the part of Frank Mills, Albert Travernier and Percy Helton. Burton L. King directed the production.

"Fantomas"

Second Episode of the Gaumont Serial Unusually Thrilling and Urges Interest at a Breakneck Pace.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THAT the foreign made Gaumont serial, "Fantomas," is one of the best on the market is a fact that will no doubt be agreed to by those who are following the fortunes of the mysterious criminal upon whose adventures the story of the serial is based. "The Man in Black," the title of the second episode, suggests one of the disguises of Fantomas, who at one moment is a bearded gentleman in evening clothes, and at the next may represent any of the various walks of life. A horrible spotted serpent in this number poses as one of the aides of Fantomas, creeping into the bed of Juve, the detective, in the Beltham mansion, where he and Fandor have stationed themselves to watch the movements of Fantomas and Lady Beltham. In this episode incidents follow thick and fast, including a thrilling train wreck and an explosion that shatters the rendezvous of Fantomas.

Melodrama's Hero in Pallas Picture Invents Contrivance That Would End European War—Kills All in Reach Over Miles.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS is not the picture to make the critic enthusiastic, but I had with me in the projection room a man who has seen very few pictures of any kind. He found it interesting. It is acted well and there are parts of it that would interest anybody; but a good deal of it runs pretty close to the commonplace and its short glimpses of trench warfare seem hardly worth a place in a Pallas picture—they certainly fail to convince.

The picture, in five reels, is called "The Intrigue," and the important role in it is played by Lenore Ulrich, a countess in some European country, whose king sends her to America to keep an enemy government from getting possession of an invention. The inventor, an American, is the hero, and he has guaranteed to sell to it his wonderful death-dealing machine. In America, is the emissary of the enemy government, and this character has the heavy villain work to do. He suspects that the Countess is spying on him and he has a woman he thinks is she watched. The Countess' maid is playing a part, too. Meanwhile, he has picked up on shipboard a pretty immigrant and taken her home. She is the real countess. As his sweeper and duster, she discovers that he intends to kill the hero as soon as he gets the invention in his hands. The hero has been good to the forlorn little foreign maid. She sends him a note, warning him. Together they turn the tables on the villain, than she makes him promise not to sell the deadly invention. After which she will follow him to the ends of the earth.

Cecil Van Auker plays the hero and Howard Davies the villain.

"The Storm"

A Lasky Feature in Which Blanche Sweet Takes the Leading Part. in a Very Able Manner.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE subject of this feature is not new; I believe it has been worked out on the screen before. It is exceptionally well acted and well directed. The plot has an unusually high dramatic value, of which the director made the fullest use, though the climax seems abrupt and borders dangerously near on an anti-climax.

From the very first the interest of the spectator is enlisted and skilfully stimulated and sustained. There are strong situations well played up and there is likewise some clever characterizations. Miss Sweet shows to great advantage in this part. She is natural, evidently in love with her role and evinces a scope of emotional play which has sometimes been absent from her work. The cast is of the good Lasky type.

The play presented good opportunities for selection of settings and for a creation of atmosphere, and these opportunities were not overlooked in any particular. Altogether this film play has a decided dramatic power and will entertain even a fastidious audience.

Pauline Frederick Completes Twin Sister Role

Stars in Famous Players Production, "Ashes of Embers," Under Direction of Joseph Kaufman.

PAULINE FREDERICK has just completed her first "twin sister" role in the Famous Players production, "Ashes of the Embers," which was directed by Joseph Kaufman. It is perhaps the most difficult role that Miss Frederick has played on the screen because she must indicate the totally different characteristics of these two women without employing so much make-up as to spoil the probability of their being mistaken for each other.

One of the sisters, Laura, is absolutely without conscience and even goes so far in the gratification of her own ambitions as to force her gentler sister to go to jail for a theft which she commits. Agnes, the peace-loving sister, is a drudge who gives a large portion of her earnings to the gilded Laura until those contributions prove unequal to the demands of the ambitious girl and the tragedy of the theft is precipitated.

The numerous occasions on which the sisters meet on the screen have afforded the star and director excellent opportunities for working out effective scenes.

The story is a dramatic one, recounting the tragic tale of vaulting ambition and the dire ruin which follows in its wake. Frank Losee, Earl Fox, Maggie Halloway Fisher, Herbert J. Frank and Jay Wilson appear in support of Miss Frederick in this exceptional production, which is to be released on the Paramount Program September 21st.

"WANTED—A HOME."

Mary MacLaren Gives Pleasing Portrayal of the Character of a Homeless Girl in Five-Part Bluebird Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WE are growing familiar with the work of the Smalleys by whom some of the most pleasing of the Bluebird productions have been written and made. The story of "Wanted—A Home" is a conception of Lois Weber's, in the producing of which she has been aided by Phillips Smalley, and has quite an original theme, with a moderately interesting characterization. The homeless girl, Mina Rogers, is inclined to drift with the tide. This seems to be a satisfactory development of her character, inasmuch as she has met principally with discouraging conditions which have tended to bring about a certain morose attitude toward life. Her manner of seizing without complaint the only available path open to her on each occasion is interesting. At the same time we find ourselves wondering why at a moment when appreciation should have weighed heavily on the right side, the girl should have passively submitted to a situation concocted by the villainous Roberts.

Mary MacLaren handles well the psychological treatment of the role of Mina Rogers, and is well supported by Nannie Wright, Grace Johnson, Marian Sigler, Chas. Marriott, Jack Mulhall, "Kewpie" Morgan, Dana Ong and Ernest Shields. The story of how the homeless girl impersonated a nurse, and was eventually caught in the net of an unscrupulous male nurse who planned through marrying the girl to the heir of their patient to line his own pockets with the fruit of his evil doing will be found interesting. The production will be released October 2.

Nature Pictures in Current Metro Travelog.

The current weekly release of the Metro Travelog, which is of an educational nature, photographed in a highly entertaining and interesting manner, has been generously indorsed by some of New York's foremost educators, including several members of the Board of Education, who saw the feature at a private presentation. William L. Finley, State Biologist of Oregon, who is engaged in photographing some truly marvelous studies of nature, prepared two of the subjects in the feature. One of these is called "Humming Birds at the Pumps," showing how these interesting little birds feed their young by pumping their food into them.

Professor Finley has also succeeded in obtaining many other little touches that are delightful to look upon. He also photographed the most wonderful eagle pictures ever made. Young eagles are photographed in their home in a tall yellow pine tree on a mountain side, while the mother eagle hovers around. Two cameras were used to obtain these pictures, and one is on the ground where views of the cameraman in the tree top can be seen. One of the eagles is shown where the bird resented the intrusion, which nearly resulted in the cameraman falling a hundred feet on the rocks. Another interesting subject is "The Great American Green Turtle." The turtle is shown in his habitat around Key West, and his journey from the sea to the soup tureen.

"The Toll of Justice" (Florida).

It is reported from Miami, Florida, that Walter Miller, who first gained screen prominence in Biograph pictures, has surpassed the form he has shown in his previous successes, in the Florida Feature Film Company's second five-reel production, entitled "The Toll of Justice."

Mr. Miller has appeared in many successful features since he made his first bow on the screen with the Biograph Company and his work has always been commendable, and that his dramatic ability continues to improve will be welcome news for the exhibitors who have enjoyed financial gain through exhibiting pictures in which he has formerly appeared.

In "The Toll of Justice" Mr. Miller is supported by Irva Ross, whose work was praised by the critics who viewed the Florida Feature Film Company's first production, "The Human Orchid." It is said that her support of Mr. Miller in "The Toll of Justice" stamps her as a coming screen favorite; that her work shows remarkable improvement over the really excellent performance she gave upon her first screen appearance.

"The Toll of Justice" will be ready for release in about a week or ten days.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Go Higher Up.

EVIDENTLY the present conditions of the booking business is warping the judgment of some exchange managers, and this department is receiving an increasing number of letters regarding unfair and unbusinesslike methods used by certain exchange managers. The correspondents making complaint do not always mention the offending company, so that it is not possible to take the matter up with the proper authorities. Most of the complainants seem to blame the organization instead of the exchange. This is not fair. We do not believe that any one of the large film releasing organizations will countenance trickery on the part of its representatives, and we believe that a letter stating the facts clearly and dispassionately will always receive attention and get action. Write to headquarters before you blame an entire organization for the acts of a single representative. With the changes in the business and the absorption of the smaller clienteles by the newer and larger houses, it is to be expected that competition will become stronger, and unfair competition is liable to present itself, but a word to the home office will always check the evil. Give the same chance to the manufacturers that you would like your own clients to give you if your usher or doorman offends. You are not to blame. You want to know if your help is hurting your business. Use the same policy when the shoe is on the other foot.

Screen Advertising.

We are opposed to screen advertising for outside features as a rule, but H. E. Gardner, of Colorado Springs, who wrote lately on film routing, and interested Exhibitors if not the exchanges, sends in an idea that is novel and business getting. He is connected with the Colorado Midland Railway, and during the summer the road runs a daily excursion into the mountains—a hundred and fifteen miles for a dollar. Each trip the road's official photographer makes a group picture of the excursionists, and announces that the picture can be seen the following day at the Princess theater, at the Springs. A slide is run together with advertising matter for the road, and the showing of the group picture lifts the curse from the purely advertising feature. As the road handled 20,000 excursionists during July and August, and as most of them have a natural desire to see themselves on the screen, it is safe to say that 15,000 at the very least, visited the theater. It is not always possible to get so happy an advertising scheme, but it does point up what has been told before and elaborated upon in Picture Theater Advertising. Your screen is more than a device on which motion pictures can be thrown. You can make it work and work hard for you if you can get in with some local photographer and slide maker. A still slide of local interest will have a more direct pull than the finest feature you can obtain. So simple a thing as taking a picture of a busy corner on a Saturday afternoon, and throwing it on the screen the next off day will pull harder than the biggest five reeler yet made. Try it. Incidentally Mr. Gardner sends in a mighty fine eight page folder for the excursion, and a couple of the group pictures in folders with a print of some point of interest on the trip facing the group from the train. Evidently he is "there" himself when it comes to advertising and planning advertising schemes. And though he is a railroad man he studies this department—which is more than some exhibitors do who merely read it.

By the Pound.

The Hardwick brothers, of Clovis, N. M., send in enough samples of their advertising to last an entire rainy afternoon. There is a fine bunch of stuff, and it's worth looking at. E. R. Hardwick writes:

> We send you under separate cover a few of our various advertising stunts. We consider a few good, some fair, and quite a number poor. Nevertheless, we shall be pleased to have you tell us what you think about them when ever you may get to them, and if you so desire.
> We have been constant subscribers of the World, and have in our files copies dating back as far as 1908. That should show you what we think of the paper.
>
> The "Advertising for Exhibitors" Dept. is the one we look for first. It is certainly a boon to the exhibitor, and contains many money making ideas. Every Exhibitor would do well to follow the contents of it closely. If he will do so, he will be repaid many, many times the amount of the subscription for the periodical.
>
> We expect to start a house sheet sometime the latter part of September, and shall be very glad indeed to receive copies from the fellows already running one. We shall also be glad to have them send their handbills, that we may look them over and improve where it is possible. We will gladly reciprocate by sending our various attempts. We will not only do that. For every idea used, that has been sent in by an exhibitor, we will give $1.00.
> Assuring you that we are always for the "World," and especially your department, we are with best wishes.

This is the way we like to get examples. One or two pieces give ideas, but the general run of stuff enables us to get a better idea of the general activities of an Exhibitor, and tells us more about his ideas and hustling abilities. Please note that Mr. Hardwick wants some samples for a house program, though this will be published rather too late to help him at the start. Address him at the Airdome, Clovis, N. M. He will make good use of the material.

One of the pieces sent in is an adaptation of the Dope capsule. They did not have a dope film, but did not let that bother them. They banded the capsules to cards one by three inches, on which was printed a 42 point "DOPE," and in small six point the addition "on Gold and the Woman." Inside there is a 4 by 6½ inch sheet on very thin but opaque paper for the attraction, and the local color is preserved by the last line which reads: "Dose: Take Tuesday evening at 7:30 or 9." In the original, it will be remembered, the word "dope" was printed on the contained slip, which was folded so as to show only this one word. The printing up of the card (and the capsule requires some carrier) gets a larger letter and makes it a more simple matter to fold the contained circular.

A really handsome window card is more original. This is a cream colored card about 12 by 15 inches, printed in black and green. This was used for the winter house, the Lyceum. The type face is clear and sightly, and the only display type is the title of the film, the name of the house, and the showing time. The text is in 24 point, and runs from a preamble by Mr. Dooley on Opportunity, to a suggestion that this is an opportunity to witness a masterpiece. Green and black is not so striking as red and black, but now and then it is a welcome change from the overworked combination.

A throwaway for "Who's Guilty" offers a recapitulation that will serve for other serials. On one side is

Things to know about Who's Guilty.

When Shown—Every Saturday night.
Parts—Fourteen, Two reels each.
Subject—Modern society and the evils that come of it.
Stars—Anna Nilison and Tom Moore.
Author—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

They seem to be on very good terms with their printer, and get good results.

Another piece of paper carries the bottom line, "Come count the automobiles out in front—guess how many there will be." No prize is offered, but the line suggests a problem that leads to investigation, and sinks in the suggestion better than would a bald statement of fact. There is a bit of psychology of advertising here that it will pay to study. You have something to say. Not the first means of stating it is the best. There is always one way that will leave greater impress on the memory. Try to phrase your lines so they will cling to the reader.

An unusual stunt was a lecture by Eugene V. Debs, followed by a picture approved by the party he represents. The lecture was free, but a ticket was required for the picture. At the close of the lecture those who did not wish to remain left the house, and the others gave up their tickets. Probably few left. The bill announced that people were coming from a hundred to three hundred miles by wagon to hear the famous socialist—some circuit to draw from.

The throwaways are too varied to be individually commented upon, but they all have the same characteristic of legibility. The printer has a good assortment of type faces, and they are all easily read. Many of the bills are rather larger than are really necessary. A six by nine should be large enough as a rule particularly with paper costing what it does at present. They do not depend entirely upon the throwaways, however, for they use generous advertising space in local paper, and get plenty of reading matter to go with it, though there is a tendency to use the press stuff supplied by the company press men, little of which is of real value. It pays to write your own press stuff and get material you do not have to be ashamed of.

Many of the stunts and suggestions used are taken from this department, and they put them to good use. That's what this department is for. Any manager who makes intelligent use of these pages and Picture Theater Advertising should do good work.

Changed for Better.

The new program of the Royal, Calumet, Mich., is a decided improvement, but we would like to muss it up just a little more. The house stuff is sound, snappy, and striking. It deserves the front page space. It would pay to take the front for the house talk, and throw the film stories to the second page. The detail program is on page three (all of it), and is well planned. Mr. Jefferson is working on the right lines now, and the new size, six by nine, is much better than the former absurd size.

Majestics.

The Majestic Monthly, the organ of the Majestic, Cleveland, offers a dollar a piece for the scalps of fiends who read the titles out loud.

We know where we can get a bale or two of scalps, but the police are so darned interfering around here. And here is the sort of talk that drives home argument. It does not start right in to argue a point, it gets you interested and off your guard, then it tells you something.

> Did you ever try to write standing up? Well, the writer started the writing of this commentary in that position, which will explain any possible strain therein. But he once saw a picture of David Graham Phillips, who wrote "Susan Lenox" and other big novels standing at a sort of high desk, and was told this was Phillips' favorite writing posture. Ever thereafter he longed to imitate. But that might be as bad as trying to smoke cigarettes to attain genius, just because Robert Louis Stevenson or Booth Tarkington affected them, or doing without all meat just because Bernard Shaw happens to be a vegetarian.
> Did you ever try to eat standing up? The writer has not since he went swimming as a boy, and happened to sun himself on the bank alongside a poison ivy colony.
>
> Did you ever enjoy a photo-play in unpleasant surroundings? In uncomfortable chairs, in badly ventilated auditoriums, among people who looked and acted uncouth, where proper attention was not given to projection of the picture? It is ten to one you didn't, at least in the modern day.
> The moral hereof is that all these things are unnatural. The strain, the pre-occupation, the interference with composing or dinner table or theater delights, takes away from satisfaction with that done or enjoyed. The proper caper is to get the theater, in the last case, which will put you most at your ease. We are too modest to suggest the one in Columbus which will fill this bill. A nice chromo of the editor playing with his favorite dog will be sent to the reader who first sends in the correct answer.

About the only kick we have against the Majestic Monthly is that there are four weeks in between issues.

A Pretty Layout.

This advertisement for the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., is an unusually neat layout. It was planned by Walter H. Brooks, and is the first of his newspaper work that we have seen. In the original it is a page wide and drops fifteen inches. The centre panel is a suppositious interview with Miss Pickford. There is another two-tens advertisement on the reverse side of the sheet for the rest of the weekly program, this falling on the next to the last page. The big advertisement loses considerable in the reduction, but it gives an idea as to how the cuts are laid, and catchlines are used for each picture, adding to the illustrative value. At first glance it might seem that too much space is given the cuts, but the cuts tell more than the types could, and are more apt to create a desire to see the picture.

Just Think!

Just think! Miss Dolly Spurr, of the Royal-Grand, Marion, Ind., got out a form letter the other day without a post-script. Can you imagine a woman writing a letter with no P. S.? Miss Spurr is unusual in many other ways. But she did write too much, which is not a wholly feminine fault. It takes a heap of interest to begin to read a letter that runs nearly two pages. If the recipient had that much interest to start with, he does not need the letter. The main purpose of the letter is to announce the changes in the house. This ends well up the first page. One paragraph on the nature of the coming attractions, and the letter should have ended on the first page. She tries to tell too much at one time, and that is the common fault of so many form letters. In a letter, above all other pieces of advertising, brevity should be the distinguishing characteristic.

Like so many others lately, Miss Spurr is adding a monthly calendar to her weekly program. Hers is 3½ by 6¼, with a punched hole to hang it up by. The calendar alone is seldom sufficient to make much business, but it is an admirable supplement to the weekly program. Try it yourself. It need not be a costly nor complicated affair, and it should be small and unobtrusive or at the least not too obtrusive. It is not supposed to be a one sheet lithograph. Miss Spurr uses a canary manila stock with four columns to the three and a half inch width, yet she names day and date and play and star, and still has room for the union label.

Perhaps We'll Get a Goat.

We take this from Real Reels, reminding the reader that George Editor Carpenter is also manager of the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake City:

> Mr. Heinecke insists that we tell you about the Fashion Show, the Glad Hand Committee in the lobby, the Nursery for Children with its toys and colored maid who can attend to the wants of twenty vociferous youngsters at one and the same time, the shadow box and the dressed dolls for advertising, the substitution of scenes from coming films for slides, and a few other things too numerous to mention.
>
> To us and to a number of exhibitors these things are old stories. We confess that we stole the Fashion Show idea from San Francisco, the advance film scheme from Denver, and some of them we swiped from "Picture Theater Advertising," but the doll stunt is ours, and seems to be scoring with the kids and grownups.
>
> Mr. Heinecke insists that we tell you all about it, so here goes:
>
> The Paramount-Empress has a shadow box in its lobby. The settings and contents of this shadow box are changed with each show. For instance, when "Hulda from Holland" was the attraction the background of the box was a Dutch landscape in Delft blue. By way of wings there were cut-outs of a windmill, a fence, and a tree. In the center reposed "Mary Pickford," wooden shoes and all, in neat Dutch costume and cap. "The House of the Golden Windows" showed the house on the hill in the background with the two children, backs to the front glass, gazing at the golden windows in the distance. "Little Lady Eileen" disclosed a dainty fairy amid appropriate settings, and "Public Opinion," a nurse behind the bars.
>
> The dolls are artistically and correctly dressed, and there is no suggestion of burlesque in the display. Every child, and many ladies who pass the theater, stop to look at the display, and many are the questions, "What are you going to have next?"
> The theory is that it is good advertising; likewise, variety is the spice of advertising—don't work one stunt to death.

It's a good scheme and passed along, but if George Editor will take down that little brown covered Picture Theater Advertising, and read the last paragraph on page sixteen we will, if he wishes, send a self-addressed tag to be tied to the goat's horns when he lets it loose. It's one he overlooked, but it is there. It is a good scheme, not alone for the lobby, but for store windows downtown. We would not throw the hooks into George Editor in this cru-el fashion did he send us some stuff from the house now and then, but since he has been running the theater he has not sent in a single advertisement or even a throw-away. We hope this will be a warning to him to ship some stuff east now and then.

In passing, Mr. Carpenter has swiped nothing from P. T. A. The book was printed to pass along good ideas, and Mr. Carpenter is merely making intelligent use of it.

And in talking of house programs he offers this valuable device:

> Leave the matter of type, quads, reglets, and other mysterious things connected with the printing trade to your printer, but after he has set up your program please, oh, please, read the final proof, because printers do make some awful bulls in sober seriousness.
> Given, a printer with three whiskey sours under his belt, and he will sour the whole works—one little bull will make your program the laughing stock of your patrons.

He is talking of the value of the house organ. He knows what Real Reels under his management is doing for the Notable Features Film Co., and he wants to pass the word along. He's right, too. There is nothing so good as a house organ of the real sort.

Adds a Calendar.

The Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., adds a monthly calendar to its weekly folder, and then makes the folder a six pager. We think they will like the effect better if they put the date in a type distinct from the faces used for announcing the subjects. It is a small matter, but an italic line, preferably in upper and lower case, would make a heap of difference. The advantage in the change from a four to a six is that it gets all of the program on the same side of the sheet, and also gives space for a condensed program for the current and succeeding week. It is an even better form than the old, and that was plenty good enough.

From Philadelphia.

Only two recent Philadelphia programs, but they are new ones. The Auditorium, Logan, one of the suburbs, is printed on a stock better than is needed, blue and gold embossed cover with a landscape panel. If they picked up the stock at a bargain, the same as Jay Emanuel got his, then there is a reason, but if they paid regular prices, they paid too much. The program should be attractive, but it need not be costly. A neat print does well enough. The program occupies the inside pages of the four pager, well laid out, but the printer should have used a slightly smaller type, and have taken the rest of the space to get some white between the days. These do not stand out as they should. The back page carries some house chat and a discussion of the coming program. Since the editor can write interestingly of the film, he does not have to throw in a blue and gold picture. The Olympia uses a small six page vest pocket on cheap news paper. The paper is thin and the ink so oily that it goes right through the paper to the other side. With six pages only two by four they even manage a couple of outside advertisements and some house talk. In one instance they do not seem certain of their second feature, and foolishly seek to "cover up" with this absurdity:

SURPRISE ATTRACTION
With an All-Star cast.

We are so certain you will like this attraction we are withholding its name to surprise you.

Not many persons will believe that they have an attraction so good they will not advertise it. Most will know that they do not name the offering because they cannot, and will draw their own inference. "To be announced later" is much better than this rather clumsy effort.

Long Between.

It takes Will L. Beebe, of the Candor theater, Candor, N. H., a long time to get around to writing a letter. He unblushingly admits that it is a couple of years since he has written in, but offers in extenuation that he reads the department each week and adds:

> I have a small house—240 seats—in a village of only 750, therefore cannot get out anything more elaborate than a four page weekly program. You will note that I am giving a biography of the leads in each feature which serves as a sort of introduction, and my people feel that they are already friends when the players appear on the screen. It appears to work well.

We would ask nothing better than a four page program in a town with as many thousands as Condor has individuals. A four page program is plenty for any house if it is not possible to print more. It will work hard enough for any house if it works right, but with our own lily white hands we would strangle the printer if he did not give us what we wanted. But first we would have a talk with him, and were we Mr. Beebe we would plead with the printer person to hide that border with which he encloses each page. It looks like those Straight Cut cigarette advertisements that reproduce the style of before the war. We would plan, too, to get a shorter program. This is 6 by 10½ inches, too long for the width. He can save paper, and, by using smaller type get it all in and have a more sightly sheet. That rugged break rule should also be put back of the stove, along with the border, and the impression bettered, if possible. This may not be possible, but it should be possible to improve the make up a little. For his own part Mr. Beebe should get more intimate in his house chat. It is good, but a trifle stiff. He is talking as a manager rather than as a friend. He should get chatty and friendly. He writes:

> In presenting the following program for the first week in September, we believe we have selected and booked the strongest list of attractions ever presented in a single week at this theater, or in fact, in any other theater in similar or even much larger towns. The list of stars are among the most celebrated in the land.
> We feel like urging a large attendance, knowing that general satisfaction will be the result.
>
> We aim to book only high-grade features for each program, but these particular numbers are above the average.
>
> Yours for good pictures,
> WILL L. BEEBE.

Suppose that he had said this instead:

> The program for the coming week is going to open the regular season with as good a list of pictures as I've ever been able to book. They are better than just good pictures, and list stars and plays out of the ordinary. Charlie Chaplin gets more money each week than you can find in all the pay envelopes in Condor on a Saturday, but he works just as hard for you as he does for New York audiences. Tom Wise seldom gets very far from Broadway because they won't let him, but in "Blue Grass" you get one of the best examples of his work. Robert Warwick is another metropolitan star who plays Boston and no other New England town, but he is here Wednesday, and in his best form, while you know how exciting "The Broken Coin" has been in its earlier episodes, and the twelfth is better still.
> It is a program so unusually good that I wish that you would make special effort to see as many of the attractions as you can. You cannot afford to miss any of the good things. Try it this once. You'll like it, I'm certain.

It says the same thing that this program says, but it talks man fashion and not manager fashion. The use of biographies of the stars is particularly good in the small towns where the stage in general is not closely followed. Now that Mr. Beebe has the habit again, we hope he comes in more often.

Make the Paper Help.

The Pathe exchanges seem quick to take advantage of the newspaper openings for their stories. Tarleton, Winchester, of the home office, sends in a couple of samples. One is from a Minneapolis paper in which a shopping expert, maintained by the paper, was given a private showing of the Florence Rose fashion stuff, and then recommended her feminine readers to look up the film. It is, of course, advertising such as cannot be paid for, save in tact and courtesy. You may have some local newspaper woman who does society. If you have, take the trouble to give her a private showing of these reels as they come along. She can see them just as well at the regular show, but give her a private view in the morning, cater a little to her sense of her own importance, and she'll tear the types loose to tell the readers that they simply must see the subjects. You may be too late to get into the paper before the film is gone, but there are others in the series, so get her down each time and she'll keep on plugging for you if only to tell how she had a private view. You might not be able to give her five dollars to coax her to come to the regular show, but the private view will catch her every time.

The other co-operative stunt is to induce the newspapers that print the story of a serial to do some advertising on their own account that also advertises the house and the film. Such a notice comes from Lehigh, Iowa, where the Argus sent out this card for the triple alliance of house, newspaper, and Pathe:

SOMETHING EXTRA FOR YOU!
The Argus' New Serial Story
"THE IRON CLAW"
Begins This Week

This notice is sent especially to you to advise you that Arthur Stringer's great serial story, "The Iron Claw" begins in this week's, August 3, issue of the Argus. It's a wonderful story, full of gripping incidents and we are sure you would like to read it. In addition to this story being run in the Argus, the moving pictures of this great story will be shown each Saturday evening at the Lyric, and after reading the story you can see the scenes enacted on the screen. The first episode will be shown

Saturday Evening, August 5th, at the Lyric

This is an unusual story and it will interest you from the start.

We want to send you the Argus with this great story. The subscription price is still One Dollar per year, even if the cost of everything that enter into the make up of the paper has been advanced—less than 2 cents a week—and the paper is worth double the subscription price. You get all the local news and the paper is worth more than the subscription price asked—but what's the use of arguing further, you realize its worth—so come or send a Dollar bill to this office and you will get the opening chapter of this great serial story. Do it now—you'll not regret it.

Sincerely,
HAL C. FULLER.

This is on a folded mailing card and on the back is

DON'T START IT
IF YOU HAVEN'T TIME
IT WILL GRIP YOU.

Almost any circulation manager can be persuaded to do some special advertising from your mailing list or to nearby towns, and he has to mention your house as well as his paper.

Dates, Please.

The Orpheum Herald, Moscow, Idaho, is a well printed four pager, but one stingy little date in a box 1⅛ by 9/8 inches is the only means of identification. This appears in one corner of the heading, balancing the name of the town on the other side of a "Herald" that fights both boxes down. After that it is merely the day without date and even a regular reader has to look twice to see if this is last week's or next week's program. It would be better to rearrange the program either to give two days to a page or three programs a page, in the latter case keeping both front and back for house stuff and chat. The different days should be separated by rule and made more distinct. If the two days to a page scheme is used then the front page should be kept for chat. There is the making of a good program here, but the layout can be greatly improved and it can be turned from a herald into a more dignified program.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Breaking the Tension.

S. A. VAN PETTEN, who has taken to the west to write without interruption, contributes an apt example of the broken tension in a recent story. He is writing of that part of the new Technique of the Photoplay, which likens suspense to a rubber band, which, drawn too tautly, breaks of its own tension. Examples are given in the book and Mr. Van Petten adds this example. If you have the third edition paste it in at page 41, or paste in the cover and make a note at paragraph ten on that page. He says:

> I always try to find my own illustrations of the various principles set forth, and a few days ago I met a striking illustration of your remark on Suspense. In the Essanay feature "That Sort," Warda Howard, the protagonist, procures a revolver and goes to a room to kill herself. Seating herself on a bed, she raises the revolver. But she cannot force herself to pull the trigger. Determined, she walks to the mirror and, watching her reflection in the glass, she again raises the pistol. Again her courage fails. Back she walks to the bed and sits down. Again she places the revolver to her head and again her nerve fails. She drops the pistol, and from the audience, composed largely of children, came a roar of laughter. Mind you, there was no criticism of Miss Howard's excellent acting. It was a case of stretching the suspense until it broke, as you have so clearly pointed out. An instant later Miss Howard again raises the weapon and pulls the trigger, but it is too late, for the house is in an uproar. The suspense has been lost through over-developmet.

This is something that is generally a matter of direction rather than writing, but often it is written into the script, and still more often a succession of scenes, rather than the prolongation of the action in one scene, kills the suspense by dragging too long. Examples are given in the book, but these serve merely to suggest the lines along which further study on the screen will be made.

And we are proud enough of Mr. Van Petten's letter to ask pardon for making two extracts. He writes:

> I have practically every book ever published on scenario and short story writing, and I take about all the magazines dealing with writing. So, to be frank, I felt it hardly possible that you would incorporate much in the third edition that would be new. I was most pleasantly surprised—especially by the chapters in Part II, on Plotting, and Part IV, on Writing in Form. Each one of those chapters is alone well worth the price of the entire book. * * * I have already learned things worth hundreds of dollars to me financially, to say nothing of having the satisfaction of knowing that I am doing better work.

The Kalem Way.

Here is a bit of original press matter from the Kalem company. It runs:

> Robert Welles Ritchie, author of the new Kalem series, "The Girl from Frisco," delivered the last of the fifteen episodes last week and received his check.
>
> "I've had my first dealing with a picture company," said Mr. Ritchie. "It has been a delightful connection. Kalem set a liberal figure for my work and I accepted it. I received a substantial advance payment and was paid for each episode as delivered, the check invariably arriving within two days after I had mailed the manuscript. Perhaps there is a bigger laugh than that afforded by the author who says he must have a union to protect himself against the picture producers, but I have yet to hear it."
> Mr. Ritchie is a prominent fiction writer and an authority on the West. A glance at his biography shows how he is equipped to supply just what Kalem required. He did not dash off a lot of "literary" stuff, but studied photoplay requirements, the Kalem stars and others to be cast, the locations, etc., and had many conferences with Kalem. Being above all a business man, he undoubtedly first assured himself that the Kalem Company is responsible and honest. Then he went ahead with his work, boosted his bank account and made a warm friendship with Kalem, which he reciprocated by turning out what is said to be a particularly fine lot of stories.

In some quarters it is fashionable to sneer at the Kalem company because it makes no features, but somehow the policy of sticking to one and two reel stories seems to work with exhibitors, and Helen is the only "series" pictures that has run for more than a year. They have not offered a lot of fancy prices they do not pay, nor do they undertake to educate writers. They have gathered about them a group of men who turn out about what they want, and they did it by treating their writers nicely and being quick to perceive merit even if it had no name attached. Frank Marion was a crack script writer in his time and Phil Lang is one of the best friends the script writer of the proper sort has. When he finds a "comer" he helps him along the road with suggestion instead of "instruction," and he has turned out some first class men. This really is not the proper page for the press notice, but it is so typical of the Kalem way that we are running it, though it will probably suggest nothing to the other editors who need most the suggestion it conveys.

Mr. Merwin Amends.

Writing of the third edition of "Technique of the Photoplay," which has just come to his hands, Bannister Merwin seeks to amend part of what he wrote and was quoted there. He says:

> The book is very well done indeed. It ought to be in the hands of every writer who is taking up pictures. What I specially like about it is your catholicity; you have not limited yourself to one narrow technical line, but have made it plain to all that, apart from certain specific technical problems, this work—like all other artistic work—depends mainly upon the human factor. If I had known you were going to quote me in what I wrote in my letter to you, I should have been a bit more explicit. I thought you would understand what I meant when I argued that the plot was the least important part of a photoplay. Evidently when I say "plot" I do not mean what you understand by that word. Anyone with imagination can conceive plots—and a good many people with no imagination can steal them. The thing is that, given the bare bones, you build up something which is alive. It is trite to say that there are only very few plots in the world, but, as you know, if three different writers take the same plot, one may develop it into a masterpiece; another into a play of moderate worth and the third into a commonplace fizzle. If there had been less emphasis on bald plots, as shown in synopses, and more emphasis on the development of those plots through characterization and incident, we should have had a great many better photoplays than have yet appeared.

All of which is in entire harmony with our own ideas if it is understood that by plot we mean the developed plot and not the bare plot suggestion, which Mr. Merwin seems to indicate by that term. In either case it means that the author should write a play and not merely a synopsis, which some other person is to elaborate according to his skill and his understanding of the author's aims. The author should and eventually must be permitted to do this work. It will have to be done if we are to have quality plays. It cannot be done by some dramatic scout or the brother of a famous man. It must be done by the author and passed upon by a man of intelligence.

Reads for F. P. Too.

In response to a number of inquiries it may be said that the combination of the Lasky and Famous Players has not yet, at least, resulted in the merger of the two script departments, but Mr. Turnbull is the head of the dual department and will put into practice his well-advertised method of telling the rest of the literary world how to write. This will probably put a nick in the results obtained from the "hundred plays at a thousand each" that the Famous Players advertised.

The Answer

"What's the matter with the comedy writers?" demands a producer in a dramatic paper. Then he goes on to say that he seldom, if ever, finds a good idea in the submission. He did not ask us, but if he wants information, we don't mind telling him what the matter is. They are grown wise—that's all. There was a time when he got the pick of the market, but he bought nothing. Then he hired as editor a man who has not the confidence of the authors, and put in a staff of writers. Naturally no one with sense enough to write good ideas was going to stack up against such a combination, and so the grade of the product submitted fell. We would suppose that anyone could figure out a simple little proposition like that.

The THIRD Edition of Technique of the Photoplay

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturer's Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 156.

What ought to be the height of the screen above floor stage, or above the main floor auditorium where there is not stage?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 146.

The Roll of Honor on Question No. 146 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; M. Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; W. E. Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; Leon Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; G. A. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.; Dean A. Snyder, Bangor, Pa.; F. N. Irvin, Lufkin, Texas; M. Capobianco, Roseto, Pa.; E. R. Havener, Marquette, Mich., and M. Moon, Sherman, Texas.

I think the reply of Brother Hays probably covers the subject best.

Reply to Question No. 146.

By Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.

The Questions:

In your opinion is it best for the operator to handle the house lights, or should it be done from the main house switchboard, or should the operator handle a portion of the lights and the rest be handled from the main switchboard?

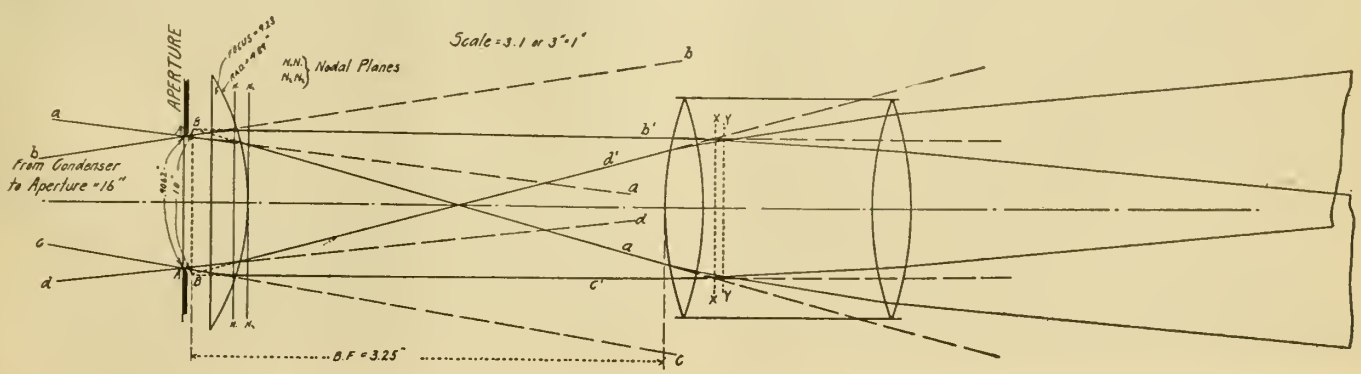
The Answer:

Lighting circuits should be so arranged that the operator can control at least one auditorium circuit, to the end that he be able to light the auditorium instantly in case anything goes seriously wrong in the operating room, such as, for instance, a fire. In some combination houses it is the custom to arrange the lighting so that the operator has to await the pleasure of the stage manager before he can control any portion of the lights. In other houses the custom is to feed the wires from two sources of supply, these sources being a switch on the stage panel and a switch in the operating room, or on the main house switchboard. Another freak wiring system is that of controlling the lights on the inside and outside of bowl fixtures by means of a double-throw, double-pole switch. When the switch is thrown in one direction the indirect lights are on, and when it is thrown the other way the direct lights are on. Another mistake that is sometimes made is that of controlling all the lights from one switch in the operating room.

In combination houses it is my opinion that the operator should only control a single auditorium circuit, which will enable him to light the auditorium in case of fire or serious trouble. The rest of the lights should be controlled from the stage, that is to say, in houses where vaudeville is used every day; if vaudeville is not used every day then the operator should control the lights, or that part of them which are extinguished during the beginning of the performance.

In straight picture houses the lighting should be so arranged that the operator may handle those lights which are to be switched on when the picture is off, so as to brilliantly illuminate the auditorium during intermission. The rest of the circuit should be handled from the main panel.

I do not pretend to say that this is a perfect answer. As a matter of fact it is not, but it is the best one that came in. The subject is a big one—perhaps too big to be handled in this way. My own view of the matter is that whereas the operator should always have under his control a circuit which will light the auditorium in case of emergency, it is not best that he should handle any other house lights, partly by reason of the fact that the house lights ought to be handled by dimmers, which should be worked slowly and carefully in turning out and turning on the lights; also switching on and switching off the lights requires the manipulation of several switches if the auditorium has any considerable size. I would like to see this matter discussed somewhat in detail in the department, because it is one of considerable importance and interest.



Aperture Lens.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., sends in the following:

In the drawing, the distance from condenser to aperture is taken at 16 inches, which is considered a fair average that present condensers will give when working at their maximum efficiency. The width of the standard aperture is shown at AA, and the lines aa, bb, etc., are accurately drawn to show the rays as received at the aperture under the conditions given.

An aperture lens of 9.23-inch exact focus, and of plano-convex form, is chosen for the present case. It is given sufficient diameter to eliminate the use of the outer edges, and thus avoid trouble from aberrations. But aside from this precaution it does not seem probable that a lens used in this capacity, so near to the object (aperture), would give any trouble because of its inherent aberrations, so long as it is placed as close as possible to the film, and is of good material and workmanship.

The precise action of the present aperture lens is, as found by analysis, to focus the real aperture AA to a virtual image BB. The image BB is located at the position shown, and is larger than the real aperture, having a width of one inch. Now the function of the aperture lens is to further concentrate the beam of light which passes forward from it toward the objective, but it also causes the rays of this same beam to proceed as though they actually came directly from points of the image BB. Consequently in calculating the E.F. of the objective, the width of aperture must be taken as an inch instead of .9062 of an inch. It is therefore very readily seen that for a given size of screen picture the E.F. of the objective will be a little longer than when the aperture lens is not used.

The effects of the aperture lens upon the original condenser beam are shown accurately in the drawing; ray aa is bent to the direction of aa^1, bb to bb^1, cc to cc^1, etc. The total beam as delivered by the aperture lens is tinted to make the drawing clearer. It is thus found that the beam proceeds toward the objective with an over-all uniform cross-section as far as section XX, from which position it starts to diverge rapidly. Now in order to take full advantage of the narrow beam, especially with small diameter objectives, it is very evident that the B.F. cannot be made much greater than the distance from the aperture to section XX. But there is another, more urgent reason why it cannot be done, for it is observed that rays such as are typified by a^1 and d^1 strike the rear factor of the objective near the outer edge, and at a very oblique angle; and if the converging power of the rear factor is not sufficient to bend such rays so that they will pass through the front factor, these rays will strike the inside of the lens barrel and be lost. In the drawing these rays have been made to pass through the front factor, but it is not known that this would always be the actual case with objectives in present use. Thus it is seen that the aperture lens gains the light that was formerly lost to the rear factor, then is the possibility of losing maybe an equal amount at the front factor. This discovery shows that the B.F. must be limited in length if all the light is to pass through both factors of the objective, and thus we are up against a probable conflict between the necessary E.F. and the desired B.F.

But there is another final fault which puts the present design out of business entirely. If the rays are now traced through the objective, it is found that the ideal shutter position is located within the lens barrel at section YY, and the condition of the beam before the lens is entirely unsuited for the use of the revolving shutter. The present design therefore falls down completely and must be reconstructed.

In reconstructing the design it is quite evident that the focus of the aperture lens must be made longer so that section YY will occur at least two inches in front of the front factor of the objective. It is also evident that lengthening the focus of the aperture lens will diminish the danger of loss of light between the two objective factors, and it will make the possible B.F. longer; but it will cause the light beam at the rear factor to be thicker in cross-section. Furthermore, there may be advantages to be gained by placing the aperture lens farther from the film; but this absolutely could not be attempted unless the aperture lens be duly corrected.

The first thing to do seems to be the determination of a standard condenser system with a fixed minimum distance between condensers and aperture, for if this is not established there will be too many variables to work with, both in theory and in final practical operation. In other words, it must be fool proof. I can see at this point that there is a possibility of success for the idea, and if the distance from condensers to aperture and diameter of objective were once standardized the remaining problems of design would be comparatively simple.

I don't know what to say to this so will not say anything, but pass it up to Griffiths, Deutch and Armstrong. It is a tough nut, but the Sabo Company has it at least partly solved, and I am sure we will finally get a satisfactory answer to the puzzle.

Little Things That Mean Much.

J. C. Hornstein, sales manager of the Picture Theater Equipment Company, New York City, contributes the following:

How many operators really go to their job each day with the feeling that they will produce better screen results that day than they did the day before—screen results which spell results at the box office? Possibly there are those who cannot be wholly blamed for starting the day's work with a feeling that there is nothing for them to do but "turn the crank." In the course of selling supplies I have met exhibitors who are on the lookout for "something cheap," although well knowing that the cheap article will not fill the bill in any satisfactory way, or meet the expectations of the long suffering operator. As a matter of fact it is that same "something cheap" which really cheapens his house by cheapening the result on the screen, and in the end compels him to spend his last few dollars frantically looking for something better, which he has finally, through sad experience, learned means perfect projection and a profitable business.

There are other exhibitors I have met who, when I have broached the subject of something new, which means better projection, look at me knowingly and conclude that I am merely engaged in an effort to separate him from some coin. How many of even the real, wide awake exhibitors are there who, when shown improvements which mean better screen results, improvments that have been brought into being to the end that better results may be had with less labor and less light consumption, and which will bring more money to the cash drawer, will even listen to you for a moment, let alone allowing you the opportunity for an actual demonstration even when these articles have been endorsed by such eminent authorities as Nicholas Power, F. H. Richardson and others. Their number is few, and I say it with regret, but these few are the real foundation of the motion picture industry. They are men whose praise should be sung in every convention hall, at every operators' meeting, and in the columns of every periodical of the motion picture industry. They are the money makers, but they make their money by spending some of it for those improvements the worth of which has been demonstrated.

Take for instance such a simple article as graphite. This may be obtained at any first class motion picture supply house at as low a price as 10 cents, yet how many managers will purchase it, even after being shown its value in the operating room? I have actually had exhibitors tell me operators objected to using graphite because it makes the lamp dirty; others simply claim their operators "don't like it." I know, the editor of the department knows, and every one else who is posted knows that the operator who really knows his business will welcome graphite in the operating room, literally with "open arms," because without it his lamp cannot possible be made to work in a satisfactory manner.

Another worthy little device is the film cleaner. How many theaters are using a film cleaner, which means perfection to them in the showing of the reels which are not "first run"? The cost of maintaining this article is one cent per reel, or seven cents per day where seven reels are being shown—not even the price of a single 10-cent admission. And think how much better how much snarper, clearer, and more brilliant the picture would be if all theaters used a film cleaner every time the reel was rewound. Some exhibitors when told about these helpful devices have replied to the effect that they have gone to the expense of purchasing a cleaner only to have the operator use it for awhile and then discard it through pure, unadulterated laziness. My advice to that particular exhibitor was to get another operator, and get him quick. That advice has been acted upon too, and acted upon distinct benefit to the theater. I have had some operators tell me it is not their fault that such devices are not used in their operating rooms, because they are compelled to fetch the reels, eat a hurried lunch and start the show at 2 P. M. My sympathy is certainly with those unfortunates who are willing, if given a decent chance, to produce for their incompetent managers better projection. In such cases the fault lies not with the operator, but with the manager. The operator should in all cases be provided with a competent assistant to get the reels, examine and repair them, thread the idle machine, trim the carbons, thus leaving the operator himself with nothing to do but project the picture. It is quite true that projection can be remedied in almost every motion picture theater in the country, but this will never be done until the operators and exhibitors get together and co-operate. It would be hugely beneficial if managers and operators would spend one hour every week in discussing possible improvements. In fact the wise theater manager will make a practice of calling his help together once a week and discussing matters pertaining in general to the welfare of the house.

There is a great deal of truth in Brother Hornstein's article—a very great deal, indeed. In particular I would call the attention of theater managers to the last paragraph. Such a meeting, if entered into in the right spirit, could not possibly result in anything but improvement. The most humble usher might be able to make suggestions which would be of distinct benefit, and most certainly if the discussion was carried on in the right spirit every one, from manager to janitor, would be benefited. The manager's end of such a meeting would be to discuss with his employes possible improvement in the conduct of their various positions; the employes' part would be to point out to the manager anything and everything which would seem to be likely to improve the service, and it would, of course, be up to the manager to receive these suggestions seriously, give them due consideration, and act on those which seem to possess value.

New Catalogue.

G. A. Metcalfe, 119 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, Cal., and 1210 Fourth avenue, Seattle, Wash., has issued a very complete catalog of the supplies in which he deals, the same being bound in an unique way. The list of supplies shown is remarkably complete. Presumably these catalogs may be had for the asking, and they certainly would be a convenience to any theater. I find listed therein condensers of all kinds, such as plano-convex, meniscus bi-convex, arc controllers, standard projection machines, Preddy condenser mounts, home projectors, fans, film menders, Pyrene guns and, in fact, about anything and everything one would find use for in a moving picture theater. The catalog is of goodly size. It contains 176 pages.

Nova Scotia Operators to Be Examined.

On September 15th all Nova Scotia operators are to be examined at the Technical School in Halifax. I am informed that on that occasion an attempt will be made to organize the men. It strikes me that the government is not exactly fair when it compels operators to pay railway fare for two or three hundred miles in order to be examined. Nova Scotia operators are by no manner of means high salaried labor, and the loss of time and the payment of fare is going to be a genuine hardship.

Tenth Birthday.

On my return from Canada one of the first things encountered was a nice, little box of sugar coated lunch, which was immediately and greedily devoured to the last crumb, after which the following card was resurrected from the wreck of the package:

We are giving a party today to celebrate our tenth birthday, and you are invited. Perhaps you are very busy and can't come. But I want you to celebrate with us, and so I am sending you herewith a piece of our birthday cake, hoping you will enjoy it. We have been in business just ten years today. Won't you drop us a line of congratulation? There is nothing that makes our hearts as glad as hearing from our friends what pleasure and satisfaction they find in dealing with Hommel's. Here are kindest regards from all of us, old and young, boys and girls, alike.

Sincerely, LUDWIG HOMMEL.

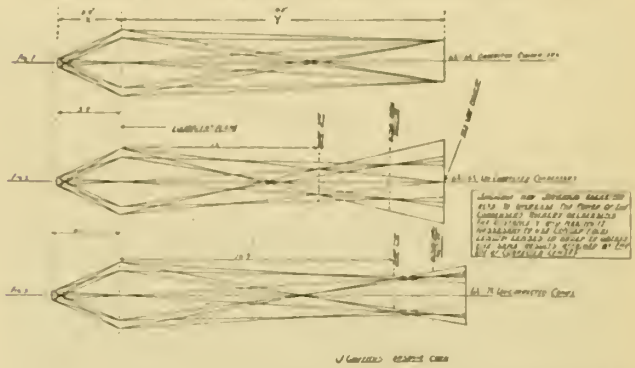
947 Penn Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., August 20, 1916.

Yes, Brother Hommel, to yourself, to the boys and to the sconery (polite for ladies) I do send heartiest congratulations.

Friend Hommel has been doing business for ten years, and the general consensus of opinion is that he has done it on the square.

He is a good fellow is Ludwig Hommel, and there are lots of good fellows in his office, too, both "boys and girls." Congratulations, old man! I hope that ten years from today I will find another Ludwig Hommel's sugar-coated lunch on my desk, and if so I will eat it with the same relish, and with the same hearty good will toward its sender which I now feel, and which is due to all those who succeed by being what we commonly term "on the level."

Spherical Aberration and Its Effect.



John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., says:

With reference to Brother Martin's article and table of white spots, August 19th issue, first let it be understood that table No. 2 was not compiled by me, but was the tabulation of the well-known law that the size of the image is increased by the size of the object each time the distance of projection is increased by the length of the E. F. of the lens system. As such, this table is correct only for corrected lenses. The reason Martin finds the X values in table No. 2 (Page 143 of the third edition of the Handbook.—Ed.) to be too great is due to the spherical aberration present in condensers. To find to just what extent spherical aberration alters the true value of the condensers, I drew Figures 1 and 2, and then, to remedy these conditions, drew Figure No. 3.

The effect of spherical aberration was found to be a shortening of the distance of the image from the condenser, and this, of course, decreases the value of Y in table 2, so that the image is actually only 12 inches in front of the condenser, instead of 19½ inches. This places the actual value of two 6½-inch condensers at the same value as a 5½-6½ combination of corrected condensers, so far as location of the image is concerned. Spherical aberration also results in a slight enlargement of the image over the proportion of X to Y. As a test of the foregoing Figure 3 was drawn, with result that the relative values of X and Y as a consequence of using 6½-7½ lenses instead of two 6½-inch lenses are X = 4.1 inches and Y = 16.3, instead of X = 3.95, Y = 12. When we compare this result with that obtained with two 6½-inch corrected condensers, viz: X = 3.9, Y = 19.5 the results are practically equal, because if we move the crater from 4.1 to 3.9, Y will increase from 16.3 to approximately 19.5. Thus spherical aberration increases the power of the E. F. of the condenser by about .25 of an inch. The foregoing would indicate that Martin's figures are approximately correct, except that his Y values are a trifle low—probably about .25 of an inch, which is due, I think, to the location of the white spot in his diagram, the same being in front of the narrowest part of the beam, which I consider to be the best position for the film. The fact that the spot at this position has a flare around it indicates that it is the position that we previously considered to be the actual image. The spot which he found to be as red as blood is the position where the cones from the extreme edges of the condensers have completely crossed at the axis, and are about to separate. In Figure 1 they are non-existent, except with a disc covering the center of the condenser, under which condition it would be located about two feet in front of the aperture. In Figure 2 the red spot would be located 19½ inches in front of the condensers. The sharp spot is 12 inches in front and the position we called the actual focus is 16.25 inches in front of the condensers in Figure 3, whereas the sharp spot is 16.3 inches in front of the condensers, and the actual focus 18.75, and the red spot 32 inches. I don't therefore see why the actual focus is an undesirable position for the film. One reason I call it the actual focus is because it has the same enlargement as corrected condensers would give. The flare, which is from the extreme edges of the condensers, is wasted light.

I would suggest that the tables be extended until the value of X equals 3½ inches, or more. Suppose, for instance, I am using 60 amperes D. C. I would not dare place my crater closer than 3.25 inches to the condenser, and my enlargement must not be more than 3.5 times. Now 3.25 plus the thickness of the lens equals approximately 4.25, and 4.25 × 3.5 = 14.87. This indicates that 3½ inches from the condenser would be better. Thus 3.5 + 1 = 4.5 which × 3.5 = 15.75, so that in order to get 15.75 inches between the center of the condenser and the film I would be bound to use condensers which would place the crater 3½ inches from the surface of the rear lens. Now according to Table No. 2 6½-7½ corrected condensers would fill the bill at 3½ times enlargement, therefore two 7½ condensers uncorrected should place the crater 3.5 inches from the condenser, with 14.75 between the condenser and aperture. These figures nearly agree with Martin's figures in the small table, but not with the table of white spots. It would be interesting to have some reliable operator using 60 amperes D. C. send in his crater diameter and distance from the central point between the condenser and the aperture, together with the exact diameter of his spot, so as to find out which has the nearest correct value for X, Table 2, with increased focal length condensers, or Martin's white spot table. I note in the table of white spots that Martin only moves his crater from 2.9 to 3.1 to change the film position from 12.75 to 22.75 inches, whereas in the small table he moves the crater from 3.7 to 2.7 to change the aperture position from 11.25 to 22.5, which is a big difference in the two experiments when using two 7½ inch condensers. It does not necessarily follow that because the Y values are low with heavy amperage the table is impractical, because the tables may be extended considerable before the X values become prohibitive. With reference to the advisability of placing a negative lens between the aperture and objective I consider it as being impractical.

Preference should be given to Martin's figures for the value of X, as he has actually experimented, whereas I, having no stock of condensers, am just theorizing; but, nevertheless, I would like to see operators report their crater position and aperture position when using 60 amperes D. C. and two 7½ inch condensers. Outside of the slight difference of opinion with regard to the value of X, I consider Martin's table as being excellent. When once the value of X is obtained and the tables are extended, the operator can choose condensers which will place his crater in any desired position, naturally choosing the shortest value of X that his condensers will stand, because if one section of the table places the crater too close, longer focal length condensers will increase the distance between crater and condenser without any notice being taken of the distance between condensers and aperture, because each combination of condensers will focus at the aperture, irrespective of what distance it may be from the condensers, but for each change of condensers the crater position will be different.

This is a very long article, but I would nevertheless urgently recommend to operators that they study the matter deeply, since it is, in my opinion, of very great importance. I would also ask operators who are using 60 amperes D. C. to send in the desired measurements. In fact, I would like to have all those operators who have a reliable ammeter to send in the exact distance from the crater to the rear surface of the condenser; from the front surface of the condenser to the film; the extreme distance between the apex of the two condensers, and the diameter of the spot. These will be sent to Brothers Griffiths and Martin, and will be of great assistance to them in checking up their deductions.

What this is all designed for is to enable you to get the size spot you want while still keeping the arc as close to the condenser as liability to condenser breakage will permit, since the withdrawal of the arc from the condenser is a very serious matter, bringing, as it does, into being the law which reads that the intensity of the light decreases inversely with the square of the distance. This matter is extremely perplexing, but it seems to me we are getting pretty close to some definite results, and those results will be in the form of a table very similar to the one already produced by Brother Martin. The main point now seems to be at what point in the light beam should the film be placed. Once that is definitely determined the rest will, it seems to me, be comparatively easy.

Charging for Film.

Herman Vutermeyer, Boston, Mass., says:

Concerning film exchanges charging for damaged film, I would like to say that before this is done it should be put up to the exchange to send out films in perfect mechanical condition. Where is the justice in the exchange charging for alleged damage to film when the operator who spends from one to three hours looking over his show and putting it in condition to run does not get a cent therefor, although this work is NOT part of his duty, but the legitimate sphere of the inspector in the film exchange? If exchanges are going to charge for damaged film, why cannot the operator charge the exchange for his time and trouble in looking over and repairing film? Most theaters refuse absolutely to pay for this work; also it is not the theater's place to pay for it. Then too, take some of the new films direct from the factory, with the splices pulling apart at the very first run. Why don't they cement them with something that will hold? If it were men who did the assembling, instead of girls, we operators would be tempted to think they used tobacco juice instead of cement. Then too look at the misframes, and loose patches in almost every reel we get; also splices in which the holes don't match; cracked sprocket holes; sprocket holes missing for several inches in places. Not long ago I had a film with the title stuck on so that the rest of the film would be shown backwards; also I had a split reel with the end of both subjects spliced together in the center of the reel. The first subject was all right, but the second one would be upside down, and these were inspected at the exchange, where I myself had to wait for the inspection to be made. I have taken lots of the bad stuff I have cut out of films back to the exchange, only to have them hand out the same old bull we have been getting for years. It's enough, Friend Richardson, to make a minister swear. Again I say, let the exchanges start out by doing the right thing, and I firmly believe that the large majority of operators not only will do, but have been doing the right thing by their film, so far as they were permitted to. Operators have been putting the film into condition for the exchanges, now for a change let us have that reversed. In closing I wish to express best wishes to the department.

Friend Vutermeyer's letter is every word of it true. Many exchanges complain of the treatment operators give their films, and in many cases operators unquestionably are careless, but I believe at least 80 per cent. of the operators are as fair, or even more fair to the exchange than the exchange is to them. There is a tremendous amount of damage done to films through excessive tension and over-speeding, but in the matter of over-speeding the fault usually lies with the manager, and until the matter was recently taken up by the editor of this department, no one has attached any importance to the amount of tension used on the machine. We have just begun to realize the tremendous amount of damage done to film by excessive tension, and it will take some little time to awaken the fraternity to the need of careful adjustment of the tension of the projectors under their care.

Change Over.

C. Ragsdale, Calfax, Wash., says:

With regard to the punching of holes in the film, I think there must be a neater and smoother way of accomplishing the purpose these holes are designed for. If allowed I would suggest that all multiple reel releases should end with a padded scene, and then the next reel open with a fade-in of the next scene, with a piece of opaque film at the end of the preceding reel. Now, don't you think that the operator who is wide awake would make the change right on the fade, and no one would ever know the difference? Of course, this is merely a suggestion, and I would not make it only I have heard you are very good natured.

Well, I don't quite understand you, Brother Ragsdale, but I think you mean there should be a fade-out with 10 or 15 feet of opaque film so that the other machine could be started while the opaque is on. Of course this is practical, but the trouble is many operators want a sign which will extend far enough back to allow them to light the lamp of the other machine, and get it burning steady before the change, and this means about fifty feet of film. I therefore think that the plan already suggested and agreed to by the Universal is best, though we nevertheless thank you for your suggestion.

Amazing.

Arthur Lovette, Billings, Mont., writes:

I am enclosing a letter, the reading of which will explain the reason for my sending it. Coming from the source that it does works great damage upon all who work for the up-building of good projection. I am changing my sprockets after eighteen months of continuous service. I am a $35.00 man, but am of the opinion that were I to act upon the suggestion of the letter and run my sprockets from four to nine years, I would still be in the $12.00 class—if screen results were the deciding factors. I think possible, were you to call the attention of the writer of this letter to the pernicious effect of advice of this kind to managers, and the damage it works to all, it would be a great help to operators, to managers, and to the industry.

The letter in question comes from an ex-executive head of one of the leading projection machine manufacturers. It reads as follows:

Your letter of July 14th, ordering certain parts received. These are being sent you under separate cover. Your question as to the life of lower and intermittent sprocket is a difficult one to answer as it depends entirely upon the care given the machine. We have an intermittent used by our mechanical engineer about nine years, incessantly, and it will show a satisfactory picture today. We have any number of instances where sprockets have been used for three years, but invariably sprockets are replaced after four years or over, owing to the fact that proper adjustment is not maintained, or a poor grade of oil is used, and in some instances where graphite is used sprockets will wear out very quickly. The lower sprocket should last one or two years at least.

This is indeed a surprising letter considering the source from which it emanates. The giving out of such misleading information as this is very bad indeed, and one sentence of the letter is rather amazing, viz, where the writer says: "We have any number of instances where sprockets have been used for three years, but invariably sprockets are replaced after four years or over, owing to the fact that proper adjustment is not maintained, or a poor grade of oil is used, and in some instances where graphite is used sprockets will wear out very quickly." The amazing part of this lies in the fact that the writer walks all around the real cause for sprocket wear, viz: Excessive tension, and never mentions it; also on this particular machine there is no means of adjusting the tension, yet the writer says, "proper adjustment is not maintained." As a matter of fact I have tested machines of this particular make at the time of their installation in the theater and found in some instances the tension was so tight that it was ample for a crank speed of 150 revolutions per minute, and in no instance have I found one of these machines with a tension not sufficiently tight to accommodate a speed of 120 feet of film per minute. As a matter of fact no sprocket should be used after it shows any appreciable symptoms of under-cut when viewed through a magnifying glass, and I have never yet seen a sprocket that would run three years without very serious under-cut indeed, unless, of course, it was simply two or three hours' work a day with a very carefully adjusted tension.

The Right System.

Pennsylvania, name of town suppressed for obvious reasons, writes:

Enclosed find check for $4.00, for which kindly forward copy of the Handbook, as I wish to learn all there is to be learned about projection. I like to not only have things running smoothly, but to have them run in the best possible way, but the regular operators here say: "As long as the machine gives a fairly good picture, let it alone." I am rather new in the projection game, but I like to know what is going on, and the projection department has been very interesting, so much so in fact that I hunted up all that I could find of the back numbers of the Moving Picture World. I certainly wish the manager and operator of this house would read the department, and improve on the "one horse" equipment. This is a good town for moving pictures, as there are really no good houses within thirty miles, but the theater only has one machine, a Powers Six A, supplied by a motor generator set; also there is an enclosed rewind which is more trouble than it is worth. Don't forget the Handbook as I want to be right up-to-date.

Your "regular operator" by his remark has advertised himself as in the mediocre class. One of two things is certain, viz: he does not know enough to dare to risk the attempt to make adjustments on his machine, or else he is too lazy and indifferent to do so. If the first, he could improve; if the second he is hopeless. If your manager does not watch out the first thing he knows he will have opposition. Many a man has ruined a good field by failure to put on the best possible picture, and thus invite competition from some one who is smart enough to know that the public go where they get the best screen results in return for their money.

Has Profited.

F. R. Dueks, Sandersville, Ga., orders a Handbook, and says:

Regarding "An Interesting Problem," August 12th issue, in which a piece of film with the sprocket holes torn out of both sides, and a hole burned in the film is shown, the solution is, in my opinion: The set screw in the top sprocket became loose and the sprocket slipped off the shaft, causing the top loop to run out and the intermittent sprocket to tear out the sides of the film. The hole was burned at the same time. Or it would be possible for the film to run off the top sprocket and give the same trouble. I have been operating for eight years, and am still operating, though I own half interest in four shows in small towns. Have been a reader of the "World" for years and have profited much therefrom.

Brother Dueks, I am sorry to say that your solution does not appeal to me as being correct. The loosening of the set screw in the upper sprocket would not and could not possibly make that sort of tear, and if the film ran off the upper sprocket there would be sprocket teeth indentions in the film, but nothing in the nature of the damage shown. Nope, old man, you are wrong this time. However, I have been wrong a couple of times during the last fifty years, myself, so you see you have company.

Getting a Job.

New York City says:

Kindly give me a list of agencies who obtain positions for moving picture machine operators; also inform me how managers of theaters usually obtain operators. I hold a New York license, and have had some experience.

I don't know of any agencies who "get jobs for operators." Len Spencer did something of that kind when he was located on 14th street, but I don't think he does now, and in fact, I do not know whether he is still in business. Union houses who need operators 'phone to the union to send a man; non-union houses select an operator from applicants who are continually hustling around looking for jobs. If you want a position I would suggest, New York, that you get out and go after one in the usual way. The man who has sufficient energy to make a first class operator will have plenty of get-up and hustleness to surround a job and capture it, at the point of the bayonet if necessary.

An Earnest Worker.

A few months ago a young man came to see me who had some samples of motion pictures which he had made of miscrosopic life and of small birds, animals and insects. They were so well done and so interesting that I asked him for permission to use some of his pictures and an account of his work which I felt would be of interest to the readers of this department, particularly to those enthusiasts who are far away from fellow-riders of the motion picture hobby. This young man was Geo. E. Stone of Berkeley, California. He was just on the point of leaving for Central and South America as the photographer of a scientific expedition and did not have time to give me the material that I wanted to use, but promised to write me an account of what he had done and to send some samples of his work which could be reproduced in cuts.

George E. Stone and His Micro-cinematographic Camera.

*Copyright, 1916, by the Chalmers Publishing Co.

The following article is reproduced from the letter which he wrote me. Using an Ernemann Camera for a foundation, he has built up a really remarkable set of apparatus and equipped a small but efficient laboratory with his own funds.

Making Insects Perform for the Motion Picture Camera.

For the small bird and insect life he uses a lens of fourteen inches focus mounted in a long focussing tube with a long light hood. This tube telescopes for focussing and on account of its unusual length is steadied and supported by a strut or brace extending down to one of the tripod legs as shown in the illustration.

As many of the insects and birds are of retiring disposition and hide themselves in the shadow of foliage, the task of lighting them sufficiently for motion pictures was a grave one until he devised the swivel mirror which is also shown in the picture.

The principal accessories which he uses for his photomicrographic work are a compound microscope, an optical bench and an arc lamp house with condensers and cooling cells.

Kinemaphotomicrography.

Regarding my work I wish you to know that I was assistant instructor in zoology in the University of California for one semester, Jan., 1912 to June, 1912. From July, 1913, to July, 1914, I was technician and laboratory assistant in the same department. In the fall of 1913 to spring of 1914 I was in New York with the firm of E. Leitz as a microscope salesman. While there I devoted myself to the theory of the microscope and perfected my plans for undertaking microscopic moving pictures.

I returned to California in the spring of 1914 and spent nearly a year before my apparatus was completely assembled and perfected. My first pictures in my new studio were taken in January of this year.

Some time was lost in experimenting but I am now able to take my pictures with a fair percentage of successes. I allow myself, however, nearly a third of my films for poor photography, for with such an apparatus it is an absolute impossibility to secure uniform conditions of exposure. Arc gaps vary—carbons vary in density or flare or burn out of center, or the material under observation is deceptive and proves either more transparent or opaque than one's judgment had decided—a thousand things may happen to upset one's calculations. And such material demands very perfect exposure for there is frequently little contrast—even visual, and most objects require a color screen. One third I plan to discard because it lacks "snap." One cannot direct "microbes," so it naturally happens that some portions are of greater interest—better grouping, etc., than others. About one third comes up to standard, and this I believe is enough when the difficulties of the technique are considered.

My work with birds and insects has been carried on simultaneously in order to speed my work and gain facility. Quite recently I have undertaken to work up a strict university circuit where films of a strictly educational nature can be placed. In this it is my plan to follow the lectures in science providing characteristic illustration in moving pictures to broaden the mental grasp of the student.

Already I have several universities arrayed on a tentative basis. When organization is complete a vote of the members will decide the subject to be treated and determine its length and method of treatment. I shall then produce the films and sell each of the universities a copy.

In addition to this I plan to make natural history films of popular interest and sell the negatives to producing companies.

All that I know about the moving picture applied to the microscope I have learned from the figures in such popular books as Talbot's "Moving Pictures. How They Are Made and Worked," and the rest I have worked out for myself. Mine is no new work, as you know—it has all been done before, but no technical articles (so far as I know) exist to explain the process. The most useful discussions are found usually in popular scientific magazines where one is oftentimes able to lift the facts out of an incorrectly written article.

I am a member of the American Microscopical Society, and the Cooper Ornithological Club.

My studio is located in Berkeley, two blocks from the State University, so that I have access to the research work and libraries of that great university. My studio consists of a laboratory, dark room, drying room and workshop. It is situated in a large garden with trees and flowers and a small brook—an ideal place for birds. The ocean is, of course, in sight so that marine forms are readily accessible. A wide and rolling farm country stretches back behind the hills which border the town. Patches of wild brush-covered land still is quickly accessible and redwoods can be reached by train within an hour. Each type of country contains its characteristic animal life. So you see—for my work, Berkeley is ideal except for the poor quality of its light. There is a long and gloomy winter—not cold, but dull and foggy, and the trade winds of June and July also make dense fogs and bad days. That is the only disadvantage.

So I see no reason why my little venture should not prove a success. I am most favorably located; for all kinds of animal life can be found within a few miles of my studio. I do not propose to turn out an immense volume of work, but the work which I do will be done right, so that the term "Scientific Film" will mean something more than Sunday Supplement Science now means.

Artisans of the Motion Picture Films.

Under the title given above the Scientific American for September 2nd gives a most interesting article, with many illustrations, showing the aspect of the motion picture behind the scenes. It is the feature article of the large double number, which sells for fifteen cents, but to anyone interested in the art it is well worth buying and preserving.

Especially interesting are the illustrations of the rear elevations of some of the enormous sets used in D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" and Thos. Ince's "Civilization," while the cover page is devoted to a studio interior view printed in colors.

Music for the Picture

Musical Setting for "The Dark Silence."

Released September 25 by the World Film Corporation.

Musical Suggestions by S. M. Berg.

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 9¼ T "A Week Later" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 7¾ D "Mildred enters Apartment" is a description of action.

Mildred and Derwent, art students in Paris, meet and fall in love with each other. Derwent is suddenly called to England and Dr. Martinez, who also loves Mildred, places a false construction upon his departure and intercept the lover's letters. War is declared and Derwent enlists, and Mildred becomes a Red Cross nurse. He is blinded in battle, and later proposes marriage to Mildred, believing her to be Jeannett, a nurse. Dr. Martinez, repentant of his action, restores Derwent's eyesight, and the picture closes "With the End of a Perfect Day."

The character if this picture is a Modern Society Drama. Care must be taken in handling the scenes of enlistment, battles, etc., from 3½ to 45.

Note particularly: English and French Airs are suggested. Battle effects at 43 to 46.

The THEME selected is "Souvenir"—Drdla.

Time schedule: 79 minutes (5 reels—5,225 feet).

Further inquiries concerning any phase of this work should be addressed to Mr. S. M. Berg, Columbia Theatre Building, New York City.

Questions About the Organ.

By S. M. Berg.

Amongst the innumerable letters received upon the previous published articles on the organ, the following letter from Edwin Lyles Taylor raises points that would so interest many of the readers of these columns that we are giving both the letter and the answers received.

My Dear Mr. Berg:

I am enjoying most intensely the articles on the subject of the moving picture organist in the Moving Picture World, written by you.

If permissible, I should like to bring up a few questions concerning the organ for your consideration in case you have not already dealt with them in articles yet unpublished.

What should be the dimensions at the console, that is, what should be the height of the bench, the height of the principal keyboard (keyboard played upon most of the time) above the pedals, etc.? Would these dimensions vary for a very tall or very short person? I am prompted to ask this, as I notice that the organ is not standardized, as is the piano, but varies slightly with different builders.

How can a bench be made comfortable for a picture organist? The church organist plays only a few times each week, and has many intermissions, such as prayers, sermons, etc., when he can leave the instrument, therefore the polished wooden bench is not so great of a hardship. A bench like this for continuous organ playing, however, is uncomfortable, as this instrument allows little if any support from the feet.

The organs built by Hope-Jones-Wurlitzer, American Master Organ Company, Moller, etc., are comparatively new and much is left to the ingenuity of the organist. Some prominent organist ought to write an instruction book for same. I have been a church organist for years, and am familiar with the orthodox methods of Stainer, etc., which are sufficient for church work.

To give a concrete example of my perplexity, when castanets, tambourine, etc., studs are placed at the left of the pedal board, should the right foot cross the left (which is busy with the bass notes and bass drum) in order to play "after-beats" on these studs? At this point I may say that if the height of the organ bench is not just right, it will be almost impossible for the player to avoid falling into the habit of using the entire leg instead of getting a good ankle action.

On a two-manual organ should the piano-forte manual be above or below the organ manual, and with which manual should the elbow (forearm and wrist) be level? The last part of this question, of course, brings up again the subject of the height of the bench.

There is one other matter which does not confine its application to organ playing only, but which is a problem with me. With the modern ventilating system, which produces a strong artificial current of air, what is the best way to prevent one's music from blowing down? The "clips" that band musicians have used for years are ideal where the whole piece is written on one or two pages, but are impracticable where the turning of pages is necessary.

Thanking you for past favors and valued information, I am,

Very truly yours,

(Signed) EDWIN LYLES TAYLOR.

In order to have what might be termed authoritative answers, I sent a copy of Mr. Taylor's letter to several organ builders and amongst those received to date are the following:

W. W. KIMBALL COMPANY,

September 5th, 1916.

Musical Editor, Moving Picture World, New York City.

Dear Sir.—I am glad to be able to answer some of the questions of your correspondent, Mr. Edwin Lyles Taylor, as follows:

The universal recognized console measurements allow a height of 29 inches from the top of the center pedal natural to the top of the white key of the lowest manual, and a minimum of 19½ inches from the top of center pedal natural to the top of the organist's bench, with provision for raising the bench to suit the comfort of the organist up to a maximum of about 21½ inches. The center pedal sharp should be 9 inches under the tip of the lowest manual white key—that is, farther away from the organ bench. The distance between manuals should be 2½ inches or 2⅜ inches.

The joint committee of the American Guild of Organists and National Association of Organists has prepared a report making slight changes in these measurements, as for instance, 8½ inches instead of 9 inches underswell for pedal sharp. Until these variations are formally adopted the old measurements will rule.

As to making the bench comfortable for an organist during the long hours in a theatre, I have seen many fitted with backs, either rigid, or spring backs, such as are used for stenographers' chairs. Many organists use a thin cushion either fixed to the seat or sliding on to the seat, and I have seen some organ benches supplied with a rubber pneumatic cushion, which last I should think would be very inconvenient because if blown up enough to be as effective as a cushion, it would detract from the stability of the organist's body and interfere with pedal and manual playing.

Though many builders are now following the indications of the late Mr. Hope-Jones, and instruments of the unit type are now relatively common, yet they differ so widely in details that it is scarcely practicable to write an instruction book for organists. It is easy to learn the fundamental principles, and from that each individual develops his own style.

I should answer your correspondent's question about the playing of castanets, tambourines, etc., when they are on the left of the pedal board by saying that they should never be put there. The principal swell pedal or the Swell Organ expression pedal in general, should be located over the space between middle D sharp and F sharp of the pedal keyboard, with the choir or orchestral pedal at the left, and the solo or echo pedal at the right of it, when these are used, and the Balanced Crescendo Pedal at the right of the group and raised at least ½ inch above the level of the other pedals. None but the composition pedals should be placed for the left foot to operate, and the special traps should be operated by the right foot, except those which are operated by first or second touch on manuals and pedals, which rhythmic method of playing is the only admissible one for drums and certain traps.

As to the question regarding the placing of the "piano-forte manual," I should say that I do not believe a piano-forte manual has any place in an organ, but that Harp or Glockenspiel should be relied upon for the percussion tone. Your correspondent leads again into the question of the relative position of pedals and manuals, and asks if these dimensions should vary for a tall or short person. They should not. The tall and the short man accustom themselves through life to the use of a dining table and of chairs of standard height. So they should and so they do to organ and piano standard dimensions, except for varying the height of a bench or stool. The standard console dimensions have been arrived at by considering the necessity of clearance for the knees of a tall man under the lowest manual, and of keeping the lowest manual as low as possible in order that the upper one may not be out of reach for the short man. The position of the pedal keys and swell pedals were determined in the same way.

Very truly yours,

W. W. KIMBALL COMPANY,

(Signed) R. P. Elliot, Eastern Manager.

September 5th, 1916.

Editor, Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir.—E. L. T. of Mobile voices some very pertinent notes re organ console adjustments to the personality of the organist. As he well says, it is a different matter entirely from church playing, as he is closely bound to the bench for hours on end.

How high should the bench be from the pedals?—Just high enough for his feet to reach the keys and afford easy ankle motion, and this will vary with different men from 18 inches to 22 inches.

How high should the principal keyboard be above the pedals?—Again the reply is so he can reach all the manuals with ease and comfort.

With a modern electric organ, the pedal board can be moved forward or back; or raised closer to the manuals. Similarly the bench can easily be blocked to meet the requirements of that particular organist for comfort.

Most organists like to use a thin cushion on the organ bench and a few have back-rests adjusted to the bench. An organist at an up-to-date electric organ has only himself to blame if he continues to be uncomfortable.

Castanets, tambourine, snare drum, etc., should not play from pedal pistons, but should have regular stop action and be available in one octave of the "vamp" register. It is admitted that these effects are of relatively small value in any organ, but if they are worth anything at all they are worth the small additional cost of the necessary stop action so that they can be played without awkwardness

We think that instruments with piano-console should have the organ manual below the piano keyboard, as that is best position to throw in thumb-notes and leaves the piano keyboard more free for the elaborate technique characteristic of it. That is, the organist can hold sustained organ work with his left hand and have a free sweep for big powerful arpeggios with his right hand.

Cordially,

C. S. LOSH,

New York Office, Moller Organs, Steinway Hall, N. Y.

I take this opportunity for expressing both to Mr. Losh and Mr. Elliot my sincere thanks for time and trouble given in answering this inquiry.

In conclusion I feel that the points raised are well taken, and of interest to all.

Edward Acker

EDWARD ACKER, the well-known photoplaywright, is hard at work on several big stories for feature companies. Mr. Acker, whose activities have been more or less bound up with the Biograph Company, has had a long and enviable career in the scenario world. As far back as 1908 D. W. Griffith, producer of "Intolerance," then with Biograph, accepted twenty-two stories from his pen—or rather typewriter. Some of these, produced by Mr. Griffith, were: "The Golden Louis," "What Drink Did," The Telephone Girl and the Lady," "A Strange Meeting," "The Jilt," "The Suicide Club," "A Terrible Discovery," "The Old Confectioner's Mistake," "A Cry for Help," and "An Unseen Enemy." It was the last-named story which gave Lillian and Dorothy Gish their initial chance in motion pictures, and sent them bowling long on the path of success. Among other Biograph directors who "put on" Mr. Acker's work were Mark Sennett, Dell Henderson, Edwin Middleton, "Tony" O'Sullivan, Lawrence Marston, Travers Vale, Thos. E. Heffron, J. Farrel MacDonald, David Miles, Wray Physioc, George Rheems, George Morgan and Walter V. Coyle.

Edward Acker.

As a free-lance writer Mr. Acker sold scores of stories to all the companies in the field. When his sales to Biograph had mounted to forty-three stories, he received an offer, which he accepted, of a staff position with Klaw & Erlanger, then combined with Biograph in the making of feature films. Among the many plays he adapted while with K. & E. were, "The Power of the Press," "The Indian," "Madelaine Morel," and "The Smugglers." After K. & E. and Biograph parted company, Mr. Acker accepted a staff position with the latter. In this capacity, during the next three years he adapted to the screen over one hundred of the world's most famous books.

A few months ago Mr. Acker severed his connection with Biograph, and since then has devoted himself to the writing of original features with marked success. Besides being adept in scenario construction, Mr. Acker is also master of a pleasing, striking style of composition, which has enabled him to sell several short stories to the leading magazines.

LETENDRE OPENS PUBLICITY OFFICE.

T. E. Letendre, for the past eight months associated with the publicity department of the World Film Corporation, has severed connections with that concern to take charge of the personal publicity of several well-known stars, including Robert Warwick, Mollie King, Emile Chautard and Irving Cummings. He has taken up offices on the third floor of the Heidelberg Building, corner of Broadway and 42d street. A feature of his publicity service will be a weekly news letter to Sunday newspapers on photoplay conditions in New York. Over one hundred newspapers have already subscribed for this service. Mr. Letendre is also the New York theatrical representative of sixty French newspapers.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS

A MANUFACTURER ON THE EDUCATIONAL PICTURE.

THE Moving Picture Educator desires to notice the splendid tribute paid to the educational pictures by Mr. George K. Spoor of the Essanay Co. Coincident with opinions often expressed upon this page relative to the desired harmony between exhibitors and educational institutions, Mr. Spoor says: "It is my opinion that exhibitors should encourage the showing of motion pictures in schools and churches. I do not believe they will encroach upon their territory; but will rather increase their patronage."

Speaking of the growth of the uses and powers of the educational and religious pictures, Mr. Spoor says: "It ought to be a source of gratification to all moving picture people (manufacturers and exhibitors alike) that church authorities and educators generally have come to realize the value of the moving picture as the greatest medium for instruction and moral uplift."

In further expressing his views Mr. Spoor has the right idea of the relations which may be fostered between moving picture people and educationists; the one using the pictures to amuse, the other using them to instruct; these purposes re-act upon each other so that the benefit is mutual, and, "what is good for one is good for the other," also, "what injures one will injure the other." The interests of all classes of pictures are, or should be, identical; when this is understood co-operation will render impossible all kinds of opposition or even competition; for as Mr. Spoor says, "each is creating a class of motion picture enthusiasts." No class will be satisfied with its own limited field but each will desire the other's contribution to the general curriculum of moving picture uses, it thus really begins to appear as those who in the early days were enemies will in these growing times become partners in one common progress.

MINISTERS TO HAVE MOVING PICTURE SCHOOL.

The Rev. James O'May, a Methodist minister of Aurora, Illinois, has opened a school for the teaching of moving picture methods for church purposes. Having thoroughly proved the value of the pictures in church work, this clergyman is, by lectures, telling his associates in the ministry of the good results obtained and giving them hints on the operating of the machine and the workings of the exchanges. At the conference where this school is held the majority of the ministers endorsed present-day methods of church activities which included athletics and moving pictures, contending that these met the physical and mental demands of the present day, showing that if the church must not only succeed, but hold her place with the young people at large, she must add the physical and mental care to the spiritual interests of her adherents. Without doubt this is the common and growing experience of all ministers.

AN OPTOMETRIST ON THE PICTURES AND THE EYES.

The person with normal eyes can follow a reasonable exhibition of pictures regularly without showing temporary unpleasant symptons, and with no fear of permanent ill effects. This is the opinion of Dr. R. H. Schofield, of Terra Haute, Ind.

The constant improvements in picture machines, lights and screens together with the art of projection is rapidly removing all possibilities of danger to the eyes.

When and How the Pictures Benefit the Eyes.

"Without any doubt," says Dr. Schofield, "the moving picture is a relentless sleuth when it goes searching for the strains, aches and pains of the eyes. It has a search warrant which permits it to try every nerve, test every muscle, explore every part of the ocular system both mechanical and physical, if therefore it does not uncover any trouble, there is proof that none exists."

If, on the other hand, the constant looking at the pictures produces any disorder of the eyes it is well for the individual. Latent eye defects that would ordinarily worry and annoy for years from common usage, are localized and irritated by the pictures, and, in a very short time, the individual is led—not to blame the pictures—but to seek relief. He is driven to the optometrist where he gets optical correction together with eye safety and comfort for the future. Many persons now wear glasses who hardly thought of their eyes until they began to see the moving pictures and proved thereby that real though hidden eye defects existed. It is, then, conclusive that a healthy person with natural or optically corrected vision can enjoy without fear the average possible attendance upon the pictures and gain knowledge or amusement without fear but with positive enjoyment.

THE BLIND AND THE PICTURES.

A young lady of 22 years, who has been blind from birth, has recently by means of successful operation been given full eyesight. The marvel of surprises which have greeted her can readily be imagined; strange to say, however, she accords to moving pictures the place of greatest wonder. Upon being asked what made the greatest impression upon her experiences in the new world of sight, she said "the motion pictures." In further explanation she told how she had heard actors and had been told what they were doing but no explanation of the motions in the pictures were intelligent in the absence of the spoken word. The deaf mutes have found the pictures a source of great educational value. The blind, however, must receive our greater sympathy in that the lack of sounds make it impossible to comprehend the two-fold loss of sight and hearing; to the blind the motion pictures treat them as if deaf also. The sympathy this arouses is not altogether met with the wonder experienced by this fortunate young lady.

ENGLISH EDUCATIONALS.

Two recent English Educationals are pictures of great though diverse interest. The first is a descriptive scenic of Bettws-y-Coed. To those who are familiar with this beautiful part of North Wales this film will be the reminder of many pleasant occasions, while to the unfamiliar ones, this typical piece of Welsh scenery will prove very attractive, giving a real introduction to the Switzerland of England.

The other picture is in illustration of the well known hymn, "Abide With Me." That this sacred poem suggests many thoughtful pictures can readily be imagined, and its arrival here will be most welcome for the value it will add to the sacred pictures of which we have only too few.

MATRIMONY CLAIMS ANNA LITTLE.

Anna Little, the famous horsewoman-star of American Films, has taken unto herself a husband—none other than Alan Forrest, who played leading man to Mary Miles Minter in "Dulcie's Adventure" shortly to be announced by the Mutual Film Corporation.

The marriage ceremony was a quiet affair, the bridal couple being attended only by their closest studio friends and the bride's mother. The call of the camera is so imperative just now that the newlyweds will forego the pleasure of a honeymoon other than that which they can enjoy on a motor jaunt to Los Angeles, which, of course, will be extended indefinitely in the beautiful bungalow which they will occupy on their return.

ANOTHER FLORIDA FILM COMPANY.

The United States Film Corporation is the name of a new motion picture producing company located at Jacksonville, Fla. The company is incorporated under the laws of the State of Florida with a capital of $15,000. F. H. Michaelis is president; Miss L. Abernathy, vice-president, and Frank Custer, treasurer. All claim to have had some experience with pictures.

Australian Notes

JACK GAVIN, a noted local producer, and pioneer of the picture industry in Australia, is at present engaged on a big subject to be entitled "The Birth of Australia." On this being completed he will start work on another two-reel comedy featuring Ernest Vockler, well known in Sydney because of his Charles Chaplin impersonations. I understand that Mr. Gavin is also considering the production of a feature with Vera Pearce in the leading role. Miss Pearce has been voted the most beautiful woman in Sydney, and she recently appeared in "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell," now meeting with big success over on your side. This picture also was produced by Mr. Gavin, who has a long list of fine Australian films to his credit.

After twenty-two screenings at the Theater Royal, Sydney, the Lasky production, "The Cheat," with Fanny Ward in the leading role, has been stopped by order of the Commonwealth Military Authorities, who stated that the Japanese villain might arouse public feeling against our ally. The film has caused considerable controversy in the newspapers here, and it was thought that after the first screening it might be taken off, but was not done. Several prominent Japanese in this city who saw the picture realized that it was not the aim of the producers to run down the Japanese race, but that the role might as easily have been played by any other person. I understand that an appeal against the ruling of the authorities is probable.

Another picture which was stopped the other week for a similar cause is "The Kiss of Hate," a Metro subject. This film deals with the hardships and sufferings of the Jews in Russia a few years back. As the ways of Russian Government officials are shown in a bad light, the production was not allowed to be given a public screening.

The local Police Censor has also been busy lately, and has looked with especial disfavor upon "Life's Whirlpool" (World), and "Undine" (Universal). In the former several murder and suicide scenes were toned down considerably, while in the Universal picture I understand that about six hundred feet of film was cut out. "The Phantom" (Kay-Bee-Triangle), is also among the unlucky pictures. It was originally scheduled to be screened at both the Lyceum and the Crystal Palace all next week, but as it is a story of the "Raffles" type, it has been stopped by the police. I have not seen the picture, but am told that it is one of the finest Triangle pictures yet.

Denver Dixon, American cowboy, formerly with the Selig Company, leaves for America this week after a very successful tour throughout Australia lasting over nineteen months. He has appeared at over 250 picture theaters in various parts of the Continent, giving lectures on the life of the cowboy, and giving exhibitions of the use of the lasso, etc. He has made a special study of the class of pictures which are in demand here, and has a good knowledge of the requirements. Mr. Dixon is taking back two pictures to the U. S. A. for disposal there. One of these is entitled "Unknown Australia," and is a very interesting scenic subject, containing many scenes of life among the Australian aboriginals, as well as many fine views of Australian scenery. It is also of value from an educational point of view. The other picture is a three-reeler, entitled "Hinemoa." This was taken in New Zealand, and is enacted altogether by Maoris. This should prove to be a novelty.

* * *

The Australian Photoplay Magazine is to make its initial appearance this month. It is to be devoted to all branches of the Motion Picture industry, though it will cater both to exhibitors and the public. There is no other publication of a similar nature being published here at present, though Australian Feature Films, Ltd., are bringing out a small magazine monthly. This, however, is devoted wholly to notes on Paramount pictures.

* * *

The George Willoughby Photoplay Company, which suspended activities a few months ago, is to start work again in October, when they will start on "Baffled," a story by an Australian writer. The former productions of the concern have met with great success all over Australia.

The first of the new Brady-made World pictures, "The Closed Road," was released this week, and is being screened at the new Hippodrome. The new brand has been widely advertised by Australian Films and "The Closed Road" is drawing large crowds.

California's "The Unwritten Law" has also proved a success at this theater.

Hoyt's Theater, which is to be opened the end of this week, will be one of the largest continuous Photoplay theaters in Australia. The management are screening double programs, the first one being "Blazing Love" (Fox), and "The Yellow Passport" (World).

* * *

The Censorship Bill has passed all the various stages in the New Zealand Parliament. A new clause allows for the right of appeal.

* * *

The matter of the censoring of motion pictures came before the City Council of Hobart, Tasmania, at its last meeting, when an Alderman moved:

That it is desirable that a censorship of moving pictures be instituted and that a committee be appointed to confer with the Premier in regard to the matter.

He explained that, in making the motion, he was not actuated by any spirit of antagonism to the picture shows. So far as he could judge the proprietors of the picture houses were themselves in favor of the appointment of a censor, and he felt sure if action were taken on those lines it would assist those of the proprietors who were most particular as to the character of the pictures brought before the public.

Alderman Williams pointed out that the matter had already been dealt with by the Government, and he did not think it necessary for the council to do anything further in regard to it. He desired to know whether Alderman Bottril (who made the motion) proposed that the council should undertake the censorship of pictures in conjunction with the Premier. It has been stated in the press that the Premier had discussed the matter with the Premiers of other states, and that some course of action had been agreed upon.

Alderman Bottril said there was likely to be considerable discussion as to whether the censorship should be carried out by the Federal or State authorities. He was strongly in favor of a State official being appointed to exercise the censor's functions.

The motion was negatived.

Triangle Plays opened in Fremantle (Western Australia) two weeks ago, and are keeping up the success accorded them in other cities and towns throughout the Commonwealth. The first program was headed by "Peggy," with Billie Burke, while the second program will consist of "Let Katy Do It" and "He Did And He Didn't."

MYRTLE STEDMAN TO CO-STAR WITH HAYAKAWA

Continuing its policy of presenting all star casts in its feature productions, the Lasky Company this week announced the engagement, by arrangement with the Morosco Photoplay Company, of Miss Myrtle Stedman, who will appear as co-star with Sessue Hayakawa, the popular Japanese screen actor. This will bring together for the first time two of the younger artists on the Paramount Program who have won great popularity by reason of a record of notable characterizations.

Miss Stedman recently appeared as the star in "The American Beauty," a production which won unqualified praise from exhibitors and public. The photodramatic work of Sessue Hayakawa is equally well known as he came rapidly to the front as a star in his own right after his performance with Fannie Ward in "The Cheat." Since then he has been starred in "Alien Souls" and "The Honorable Friend."

NEW FACES IN "FAIRFAX" SERIES.

Two important additions have been made by the International Film Service, Inc., to the cast producing the various episodes of the photoplay series, "Beatrice Fairfax." Olive Thomas, famous beauty of the Ziegfeld Follies, has been engaged for the baseball episode, the tenth, "Play Ball." May Hopkins, also a celebrated Broadway beauty, has been engaged for the eighth episode, "At the Ainslee Ball." They will appear in the support of Harry Fox and Grace Darling, who have the principal parts.

Universal Program

Attractive List of Subjects Scheduled for the Week of September 25.

TWO Universal special features and a five-reel Red Feather are released on the Universal program for the week of September 25. "The Flower of Faith"

Will Be the Title of the International's Second Golden Eagle Feature.

THE International Film Service, Inc., will offer as the second of its Golden Eagle Features, the five-reel drama, "The Flower of Faith," by Charles T. and Frank Dazey, the former the author of "In Old Kentucky." It was especially produced for the International by the Superb Pictures Corporation, Arthur Jacobs, president. Jane Grey is starred in the photo-play and Frank Mills is featured. They are supported by an all-star cast.

"The Flower of Faith" is a story of wondrous beauty, sublime in its teachings, with a grip at the heart-strings, or a thrill in every scene. It is a story of love and hate, of a girl's faith in the Almighty and a man's unbelief; of a community of fanatics inflamed to insanity against him who doubted and the vengeance of God meted out in His own way when the mob tries to vent its own vengeance.

"The Flower of Faith" was photographed in the striking scenery along the Delaware Water Gap, and the action of the play is supposed to take place in any small American community. Ephraim Judson is an itinerant evangelist, traveling about in a wagon and preaching the gospel to the countryside. He is always accompanied by his daughter Ruth and his son Tom; the latter a youth of 17. They enter a community of devout Christians and hold a series of meetings.

Jane Grey, the star of "The Flower of Faith," is one of the best known screen and legitimate actresses in the country and is peculiarly fitted to impersonate the self-sacrificing, faith-abiding Ruth. Frank Mills is Hugh Lee, the unbeliever. Percy Helton plays Tom, Albert Tavernier appears as Ephraim Judson, the evangelist. The production was directed by Burton L. King.

BELL & HOWELL OPEN NEW YORK BRANCH.

The Bell & Howell Company, of 1801-1807 Larchmont Avenue, Chicago, manufacturers of printers, perforators and cameras, have opened a New York branch in the Candler Building, 220 West 42nd Street, where they occupy offices 614 and 615. Edward S. Rinaldi, who for some time past has been the company's Eastern installation expert, will be in charge.

The new quarters contain ample floor space to show to advantage the entire Bell & Howell line, which will be on exhibition in such shape as to allow a practical demonstration to prospective customers. Donald J. Bell, president of the company, who came East to open the new branch, advised a World representative that, from now on, he would spend a considerable proportion of his time at the Candler Building offices. Mr. Bell expressed himself as being most optimistic regarding the business outlook.

While the shortage of lenses had been instrumental in holding up deliveries on cameras, he believed that this was something which would prove but temporary and, as evidence of the strength of his convictions, stated that his concern had under way sufficient new machinery to allow of the doubling of their output. Not only was the domestic demand for Bell & Howell products extremely gratifying, said Mr. Bell, but he was impressed with the export possibilities of American-built cinema machinery, particularly in South America and Russia.

As an instance of the opportunities offered by the latter country, he cited a recent case in which a hitherto unknown firm in Moscow had ordered the immediate shipment of a specimen of each machine made by his concern and asked that instructions be cabled as to the amount of the remittance which would be required against bill of lading.

LOWE BOOKS "THE CRIMSON STAIN."

Marcus Loew booked "The Crimson Stain Mystery" serial and presented it for the first time in Greater New York on Thursday, September 21st. In addition to this Mr. Loew stated that he was so well pleased with the picture that he intends to use it in more than eighty houses that he controls throughout the country. The competition in the serial market is extremely keen and Mr. Loew had a wide range of choice. He finally decided upon "The Crimson Stain Mystery," and contracts were closed with Edward Saunders, manager of the New York Metro Exchange, through which Mr. Loew will book the picture.

Mr. Loew said in connection with the picture that he considered it an unusually strong and remarkable production and that for action and rapid fire situations it is excellent. The first episode is known as "The Brand of Satan."

Arrow Plans Special Features

Contracts Have Been Signed and Arrangements Completed for an Enlarged Product During the Next Twelve Months.

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of Arrow Film Corporation, announces that he has signed contracts and completed arrangements whereby Arrow will, in the next twelve months, produce in addition to its five-reel pictures, a number of seven and eight-reel special features, and two serials, the basic stories of which include some of the best known novels and stage plays of world-famous authors, or else material written by them especially for Arrow.

Chief among these writers is Hall Caine, the Manx author, whose books have been published in twelve different languages and have sold, in the United States alone, into the millions of copies. Other famous authors who have written or now are working on stories acquired by Arrow, are Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, who has fifteen successful novels, much magazine fiction, and the ultra-dramatic "Who's Guilty?" series to her credit; Mrs. Maravene Thompson, who wrote, among her other literary triumphs, "The Woman's Law," which was Arrow's first five-reel feature; William Hamilton Osborne, whose Saturday Evening Post Stories have attracted wide attention to this lawyer-author; and a number of others.

W. E. Shallenberger.

Stories, the exclusive world photoplay rights to which have now been acquired by Mr. Shallenberger, will be produced in the motion picture length which is warranted solely by the dramatic value of the material. Some will be only five reels in length, others seven, some eight, and at least one of them ten. This length will not be accurately determined until the picture is finally assembled, titled and cut.

Arrow does not intend to abandon, totally, the production of program features. But Mr. Shallenberger feels that it is best not to agree to make anything but five-reel productions, turning every available plot into 5,000 feet of film regardless of whether it should be told in 3,000 or 7,000 feet. For the same reason the number of episodes in Arrow's serials will not be determined until the complete scenario has been made of the whole story.

Mrs. Wilson Woodrow.

In addition to the acquisition of these stories of world famous authors, Mr. Shallenberger has brought to the United States to appear in a number of Arrow Pictures, Derwent Hall Caine, son of the Manx author, and himself a famous London actor-manager. Derwent Hall Caine, who has produced and starred in several of his father's plays on the English speaking stage, will be seen in the same parts in Arrow's film version of these masterpieces.

Derwent Hall Caine's American debut will be made in an eight-reel Arrow production of one of his father's best known books. It is anticipated it will be ready for the market in about three weeks. Following this he will be starred in a five-reel American picture of remarkable dramatic strength, which Mr. Caine has helped to prepare for the screen. An augury of his American success can be found in a review of his work as John Storm in the English picture version of "The Christian." The Nottingham Daily Press, the largest paper in central England, said:

"No one will dispute the claim of Derwent Hall Caine, who played the beautiful part of John Strong in 'The Christian' for picture-house audiences as he has done so long in the theater, and, in his new impersonation of a part he has already made famous, he may be said to have brought fresh honors to picture playing as an art."

GAUMONT PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF SEPTEMBER 24

An average of a reel a day from its studios and laboratories each week is the present Gaumont contribution to Mutual Service. The importance of these issues is in their quality rather than in their quantity, since they comprise the three-single-reels released by Mutual, and an episode of the great Gaumont "Fantomas" series. "The Crook Detective" is episode Number Four in this remarkable three-reel series, the first of this length to be released in America. It will reach the screen September 28, as part of the film released by Gaumont the week of September 24. "The Crook Detective" gives some of the most vivid scenes from the life of Fantomas, the world's greatest criminal. The series is enjoying a great vogue.

The first Gaumont single-reel release of the week is "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film. It shows how to read one's life by means of the lines in the palm of the hand, then how a man whose arms have been cut off at the elbow makes a living by writing calling cards, and an interesting series or views of a baseball game played by marionettes, giving each of the plays in a world's series game last season. This is in "Reel Life" No. 21, released September 24.

The second single-reel is "See America First," released September 27. It takes spectators on a beautiful trip through the Adirondacks, a long time being spent at such well-known places as Saranac and Lake Placid. On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic, animated by Harry Palmer. It deals with "Pigs."

The third release of a single-reel is The Mutual Weekly which is edited and manufactured by the Gaumont Company.

OLCOTT LEAVES FAMOUS PLAYERS.

Sidney Olcott, one of the best known directors of motion pictures in the country, has resigned from the Famous Players directorial staff. This announcement will come as a big surprise to the many admirers of Mr. Olcott's creative genius and his loss will undoubtedly be felt by the Famous Players.

During his engagement with the Famous Players, Olcott produced some of their most successful pictures, among them being "Madame Butterfly" and "Poor Little Peppina," with Mary Pickford; "Diplomacy," with Marie Doro; "Seven Sisters," with Marguerite Clark, and "The Smugglers," with Donald O'Brien. He also directed Hazel Dawn and, latterly, Valentine Grant in the Irish epic "The Innocent Lie." He has just completed a Scotch story "The Daughter of MacGregor," with Miss Grant.

Olcott is widely known as the globe trotting director. His familiarity with Europe and its peoples, gained by years of producing abroad, has been strikingly illustrated in the above-mentioned productions. Practically every picture that Olcott made for the Famous Players had a foreign locale, and his ability to reproduce foreign atmosphere made him a valuable member of the Famous Players organization.

MABEL VAN BUREN ENGAGED FOR LASKY PRODUCTIONS.

Mabel Van Buren, one of the most popular screen stars who has played in many notable screen productions, has been engaged to appear exclusively in Lasky photoplays in the coming year. This is not her debut as a Lasky star by any means as she has appeared in the leading role of the Lasky-Belasco photoplay production, "The Girl of the Golden West," "The Man From Home," "Brewster's Millions," and many other Lasky screen plays. Miss Van Buren has also played leading parts in many stage successes including "The Man of the Hour," "The Virginian," and "The Squaw Man."

Chicago News Letter

Clean Pictures of Good Quality in High Demand.

ONE of the most promising signs of the moving picture industry is the growing demand for clean pictures by exhibitors, at the present time. The intelligent, progressive exhibitor will have none other, for he realizes that he fills a position of trust towards his patrons, who have confidence that he will provide entertainment that will not shock the nice sensibilities of themselves or their families.

In the neighborhood theater the exhibitor has become an important member of the community. He knows most of his patrons personally and frequently holds conversation with them regarding his show. They tell him their likes and dislikes, and while he may be unable to please all of them, he aims at pleasing as many of them as possible.

On one point all the heads of families are agreed—the shows must be clean. That is clearly fundamental. And every exhibitor of good morals and good standing will see to it that his pictures are clean.

Sex and vice problems in moving pictures have never accomplished any good for the industry. They have hurt rather than benefitted the business. They are viewed and craved chiefly by people of prurient minds, and they are usually exhibited by men who see nothing but the dimes that come into the box office. And the producer who makes them is out for the money, without any regard for the future of the industry.

The large and constantly growing demand for moving pictures that are clean is one of the best evidences of their permanence, and the fact that all our best producers are heeding that demand—indeed, have stimulated it—gives greater confidence in the future of the industry.

The following story concerning the showing of Henry B. Walthall in "The Misleading Lady," in a certain theater in Glasgow, Scotland, is going the rounds in the papers:

The theater owner, greatly impressed with the drawing powers of the Essanay photoplay, determined to bar all deadheads. On one of the large stands in the lobby he placed the following notice:

"In ancient days no passes were given. Don't take my word for it—search the Scriptures."

Beginning Monday, September 18, and lasting for a week, exhibitions of the centennial moving picture will be given for the benefit of the fund. "Civilization" a State Rights Success

Owners of Territorial Privileges Pronounce It a Great Money Getter.

"CIVILIZATION," Thomas H. Ince's famous picture, is demonstrating amongst other things that the salvation of the motion picture business may lie in the state rights method of marketing the films. While many people are asking what is the matter with the motion picture business, and declaring that it is suffering from the ills of over-production, keen competition, frenzied finance, and, generally speaking, is "going to the demnition bow-wows," Ince, a practical film man, is showing that there is as much money in it as ever, "if you go about it in the right way," said the genial Tom.

"Civilization," besides its showing at the leading theaters in New York, Chicago and other cities, has been offered to and acquired by state rights buyers. Those who have taken up territory have nothing but satisfaction to express with their investment. For example, the theatrical magnate, Al H. Woods, controls the picture for New York State, and to quote one of his most prominent lieutenants, "There is quicker money in 'Civilization' than there is in any regular show that I have handled."

The New England rights are controlled by the New England Film Distributing, Inc., and the picture under their auspices opened at the Tremont theater, Boston, on Labor day, and has done record business ever since. D. A. Lowrie, the head of the corporation, when interviewed, said: "Our business is astounding. I am delighted with the results achieved since we have been showing. We are putting the picture in all the largest houses throughout New England, and expect to be enormously successful. The wonderful publicity we had in Boston and vicinity has helped us as also the publicity emanating from New York. I am comparatively new to the picture business, but I must say that I am more than pleased and surprised with the quick returns on my investment brought by Mr. Ince's picture.

The Supreme Feature Co. of Minneapolis have the picture for that territory. "A month ago," said Mr. Rathmore, 'Civilization' opened in Minneapolis to S. R. O. and received the greatest ovation ever accorded any picture there." "Civilization" has been showing in Minneapolis ever since.

The Western "Civilization" Corporation, Seattle, Wash., which controls the picture in the remote northwest, finds its office flooded with requests for bookings.

The crowded pages of the Moving Picture World won't allow us to make all the quotations we would like from these state right men, who are pleased with backing this big picture with their money. The point is this: if you have a picture big enough and good enough and you find that there is no program or feature company which is in a position to handle your film, you have only to release it on the state right plan to make money for yourself, your buyers and your exhibitors.

Thomas H. Ince is an experienced and successful film man and state right men can do no harm in backing his judgment of "Civilization," or any other pictures that he might put on the state right plan.

"Fall of a Nation" in Russia

Spectacle Will Be Shown in Petrograd the First Week in November—Australia Next in Line.

THE first of the season's great spectacular films to be shown within the European war zone will be "The Fall of a Nation." Thomas Dixon has arranged for a showing of his American war picture at Petrograd, Russia, the first week in November. This will be quickly followed up by the distribution of ten prints throughout the Empire, so that before the Russian "little Christmas" (which falls twelve days later than our own big Christmas), the soldiers in the Czar's armies will be viewing it in the towns and cities adjacent to the fighting line.

The production, in the custody of an American traveler to Russia, left New York on the Norwegian-America liner Bergensfjord, on September 18. The circuitous and formerly extremely dangerous route is via Kirkwall, Orkney Islands; Bergen and Christiania, Norway; thence around the Gulf of Bothnia by rail to Karungi, and finally the two-day rail journey through Finland into Petrograd. Since the lull in the submarine campaign this route has offered reasonable security to passengers and goods, taking up about fifteen or sixteen days in the trip from New York to Petrograd.

Fast work was done by the National Drama Corporation in providing Russian titles for the story as well as publicity specially suited to the Russian requirements. The war has caused a great interest in things American throughout the land of the White Czar. America as a source of monetary and military supplies looms large. American banking houses are opening branches over there, and most large steel and rail-making firms have established permanent representatives. Closer industrial relation means also an awakening as to transatlantic art and literature. The Russian for the first time is anxious to learn the American angle towards world problems, and works like "The Fall of a Nation" will tell him.

Another production of the Dixon spectacle is booked for early shipment to Australia. Probably the manager in charge of this will be Jordan Dixon, the playwright's son, who has been in charge of the Dixon studios and laboratories at Los Angeles now being used by William Fox. The Spanish production opened for a tryout in a Buenos Aires suburban theater on September 15; the Portugese production goes on in Rio de Janeiro about the same time, and new productions now preparing for France and Italy.

REAL JEWELS IN NEW METRO FEATURE.

Special detectives were engaged to keep watch over the jewels used in Emily Stevens' new Metro-Rolfe photoplay, "The Wager," in which Miss Stevens plays the part of a high-class girl "crook." Only diamonds are purloined by this discriminating Lady Raffles, and her "loot" as shown in "The Wager" consists of about a dozen exquisite pieces of jewelry, including diamond lavallieres, diamond brooches and sunbursts, diamond rings and earrings, as well as unset gems.

The jewels were loaned by a prominent Fifth avenue jeweler, through the courtesy of his wife, who is a personal friend of Miss Stevens. They were carefully watched during all the scenes, and every night taken back from the studio and placed in the jeweler's vaults.

NILES WELCH TO SUPPORT FRANCES NELSON.

Niles Welch, one of the leading juveniles of the screen, has been engaged by Metro to appear in support of Frances Nelson in the five-part production. "Whom God Hath Joined." W. Christy Cabanne, who recently joined the Metro forces, is directing this feature as his first offering under the Metro banner.

Mr. Welch made his debut in motion pictures on the Metro program and was featured with Mary Miles Minter in "Emmy of Stork's Nest." He left Metro for a time, playing leads for Mary Fuller and Violet Mesereau with the Universal, and also was the leading man for Kitty Gordon in "The Crucial Test," with the World. Recently he completed the leading role with Pearl White in "The Blossom and the Bee," a Pathe production.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

THE FAUCET.

Powerful Temperance Drama Is Shown at Trinity Auditorium.

"THE FAUCET," a prohibition drama produced by Superior Films Company of Los Angeles, was given its first public showing at the Trinity Auditorium Monday last week.

The story is written by Robert Davis Sorver, of Pasadena and is based on a prohibition address by State Senator William E. Brown of Los Angeles. W. E. Wing wrote the scenario and Robert A. Brackett directed the production.

Considered solely as a motion picture designed to entertain, "The Faucet" is far more satisfying than most photo dramatic productions that carry a moral. Generally the moral is emphasized at the cost of the story, and the spectator's interest is lost. For this reason "The Faucet" should prove a remarkably effective vehicle for the presentation of the anti-saloon arguments.

Following several sub-titles of statistics which show that 80 per cent. of crime is caused by alcohol; that the liquor traffic requires for its maintenance 2,000,000 boys every generation, and that every fifth home in the country must supply a drunkard; there are a few symbolical scenes showing "Demon Drink" turning on the faucet, whence runs a flood that engulfs the land, forming pools of destruction out of which rise insane asylums, poorhouses, houses of ill repute and penitentiaries.

Then begins the real story which goes to show how a young man of promise is dragged down to ruin and ends in the penitentiary, how his sweetheart is debauched and driven into the red-light district, how an old man who had saved enough money to retire is forced into the poorhouse and his wife is driven insane—all through the curse of alcohol.

There are one or two comedy touches, but for the most the picture is stark tragedy. The cast includes Virginia Kirtley, Jack Frasier, Edna Mae Cooper, Charles Wheelock, Josephine Dillon and others.

Senator Brown, former Lieutenant Governor A. J. Wallace, Bishop Matt Hughes of Pasadena and D. M. Gandier of the Anti-Saloon League appear in a brief epilogue.

The Superior Films Company, Knickerbocker Building, Los Angeles, is offering state rights and bookings for this picture.

WORLD MAN IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Irvine Visits the North on Vacation. Much Theater News.

After three years a vacation came to me. I wanted to get away from "shop talk," theater programs and exchange news, so I hied myself to the north on a fast train to get away from the "film capitol." When I got to San Francisco and had settled down in a chair in one of the be-lighted palaces of terpsichore and foods, who should I see but Walter Edwards, one of Thomas H. Ince's directors. Of course, we had to talk, and even though I was on vacation, I naturally took notes, that he was there doing a picture with Frank Keenan and Marjory Wilson. The picture is called "His Slave," and is to be quite a feature. Edwards had with him Dave Hartford, who did some very thrilling water scenes up the river from the coast metropolis. Hartford even spoiled a perfectly good suit of clothes by jumping over the side of the boat for a singe scene. The river was so filled with various varieties of vegetable decomposition and debris that Hartford will be given a brand new suit in place of the old one, which could not have possibly been worn by anyone after its bath in the river. However, the scene was a good one. Harry Elwell was along too, and J. D. Jennings was there with his camera.

But what is a vacation anyway without seeing someone in the game? I went up film row in San Francisco and met Walter L. Stern, sales manager for G. A. Metcalfe, who introduced me to several of the boys. Manager Citron of the Fox exchange called the fellows up and we had quite an exchange of greetings. I dropped into the General, and met H. H. Hicks, the manager, who had just returned from a trip east. On the street I met Newton E. Levi, traveler for the Mutual, who used to be one of the regular army in Los Angeles. I also met the Mutual manager there, X. K. Stout, who has been two years on the job. He said that he always gets his advance news from the pages of the Moving Picture World. At the Triangle I met Benjamin F. Simpson, the manager, who reported business as being very good. At the Universal exchange there was much activity. I only met Charles I. Luntz, manager of the Blue Bird photoplays department, but he showed me over the big building. Mr. Luntz is making quite a success as head of this department. I stopped in at several of the other exchanges, but as it was nearing noontime, most everyone was out. However, I did meet a lot of fine fellows.

One evening I dropped into the Portola theater and met Manager Roth, who is head of the company, operating two houses. Not wishing to step on to the territory of our correspondent, T. A. Church, of San Francisco, I can only say that this firm is now erecting one of the largest and finest houses on the coast, just a block from the present center of activity. The building is to be a "multiple" story one, exclusively for the theater. Assistant Manager David told me a lot about the house, but said he had furnished Mr. Church with a picture, which will tell more.

For the last four days of my two weeks off, I went into the fastness of the mountains, far from the grinding crowd and diffusers and so on, but the second afternoon, as my car rested on its pneumatics under a big oak tree, and I lay in a hammock, I heard a familiar cry, and in a few minutes I was greeted by Jane Bernoudy of the Universal, who was in the hills doing a picture under the direction of Pat Hartigan. There was a funny thing, me trying to get away from the game, and running right into them. Milton Sinaberg, the assistant director, said the picture was a real funny rural and mountain comedy, made from the original idea of Miss Bernudy's. The series of stories are called the adventures or something, of Sally Sloppus, a character originated by Jane herself. The rest of the players were Ernie Shields, Big Ed. Sedgewick, Ralph Hawkins, Gene Walsh and Florence Noar, and lest I forget, pretty little Marcia Moore, the most ingenious ingenue on the Universal lot was there.

Well, I hunted deer in the hills, and returned to wrestle with this old Underwood. That's about all, but pictures surely do invade this country.

OSCAR APFEL "DOES A BRODIE."

Oscar C. Apfel, well known Fox director, was burned severely about the hands and body in the filming of William Farnum's latest "western." Presence of mind, plus that of water, saved him from serious injury.

Apfel took his company from the Hollywood studio to the Silver Lake district for some night scenes in the new picture. One of the most dramatic situations is where a band of outlaws lock Farnum and Nell Shipman in a jail, and then set fire to the building. The photographing of the blazing prison was responsible for the trouble.

Just before the torch was applied to the gasoline soaked timbers of the jail, Mr. Apfel made a hasty inspection, and decided that the structure would afford a better movie-sight if it were sprinkled afresh with the inflammable liquid. While the director was hurrying around to be certain everything was in readiness he himself became drenched in the gasoline spraying.

Torches were then thrown into the building, and as the flames roared up through the prison, the actors and spectators were horrified to see that Mr. Apfel, working with a firebrand, had caught the flames. His clothes flared up like a great candle, but before his friends could reach him he was groping and plunging as best he could with eyes closed tight toward the Silver Lake reservoir. Fortunately the water was near, and Apfel flung himself head foremost into the lake. He was scorched quite badly, but the first thing he said on recovering his breath was: "There's nothing like carrying a lake around with you for a fire extinguisher."

WILLIAM RUSSELL MAY GO ON STAGE. OTHER FLYING "A" NEWS.

William Russell, one of Mutual's best known stars, has been approached with an offer from a New York theatrical manager to play the leading role in the stage version of Mr. Russell's latest screen feature, "The Man Who Would Not Die." A big insurance company of New York City is backing the proposition, and is already in negotiation with S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, for the stage rights of this picture. Mr. Hutchinson's consent to allow Mr. Russell to appear in New York in the dramatized version of "The Man Who Would Not Die," will be made a condition of Mr. Russell's acceptance, should he decide to return to the stage in the leading role of this production.

"The Man Who Would Not Die" had its initial showing at the New York theater on Broadway, New York, August 31st, and will be presented in Los Angeles within a few weeks by one of the biggest of this city's theatrical managers. The subject of this story deals with twin brothers, thus making the lead a dual-personality one for the star, Mr. Russell. The theme of the story is one of particular interest to insurance companies, as it deals with an attempt to simulate death and later collect a policy of $500,000. The story was written by Mabel Condon.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Robert A. Brackett, manager of the Superior Films Company is the busiest man on film row, having just completed the equipment of his big studio and laboratories in the Knickerbocker Building. The laboratory is equipped, Mr. Brackett says with the only professional title machine on the coast and is working over time turning out orders for printing and developing. The Superior Films Company occupies the entire 10th floor of the Knickerbocker Building in the heart of the city, where they are most advantageously located. Mr. Brackett announces that in the near future he will release independently each week a one reel novelty picture.

Cameraman B. F. Reynolds of the Universal Animated Weekly took a desperate chance at Catalina Islands this week while securing views of a mountain explosion for the news pictorial.

The explosion had been arranged by the Los Angeles Harbor Commission who intended to use the rocks for improvements at San Pedro. The charge of dynamite blew off the entire top of the mountain and tons of stone fell from the peak at a height of almost 2,000 feet.

Reynolds placed his camera at a point which the superintendent of the quarry thought was dangerously near. "Young man," he said, "I must tell you to move further away. None of us has ever been as close to an explosion as you are now."

"Oh, I guess I will take the chance," answered Reynolds. "I'm used to this sort of thing—we have all kinds of explosions in our pictures, you know, and I feel pretty safe here; so let 'er go."

Reynolds remained where he was and when the explosion occurred the rocks fell all around him, but Fate was good to him and he escaped unscathed.

A fully equipped nursery, with hobby horses, dolls, wagons, Teddy bears, and all the paraphernalia necessary in a juvenile room, has been installed by Directors C. M. and S. A. Franklin for the Fine Arts kiddies during their two weeks' stay at Sunland, where the big scenes in the Triangle-Fine Arts production, "The Defenders," are being staged.

When the Franklin brothers went to Sunland they decided to make the stay as pleasant as possible for the Triangle youngsters. The kiddies, including George Stone, Violet Radcliffe, Carmen DeRue, Francis Carpenter, Beulah Burns and Lloyd Pearl, are having the time of their lives on the location.

The children are in charge of Mrs. Love, mother of Bessie Love, who is featured in "The Defenders." The Franklin brothers state that the nursery and playroom has proved to be a good investment.

Fred J. Balshofer, president and general manager of the Metro-Yorke Company, last week gave a party in honor of the starting of production on "Big Tremaine." The principal guests were Harold Lockwood and May Allison, the featured stars, their director, Henry Otto, his assistant, Charles P. Stallings, Irvin Martin, head of the technical department, Abe Canter, assistant to Mr. Balshofer, Lester Cuneo, Tony Gaudio, chief photographer, and several members of the supporting cast.

The party took place at noon, and was served on the outdoor stage. When the food faded away, Director Henry Otto yelled, "Clear the set, please," and the carpenters started to remove the table, which had been placed in the center of a large southern set.

A half hour later the first scene of "Big Tremaine" was filmed, and Harold Lockwood and May Allison did some very effective dramatic acting while General Manager Balshofer and the balance of the guests looked on with admiration.

"Big Tremaine" is a romantic drama of Virginia based on the popular novel by Marie Van Vorst.

William De Vaull, who played in 'The Birth of a Nation" and also in the new Griffith spectacle, "Intolerance," has been engaged by Director Henry Otto to characterize the role of John Nolan in the Metro-Yorke production of "Big Tremaine," co-starring with Harold Lockwood and May Allison. De Vaull is one of the veteran actors of the stage, having made his debut when a youngster. For the past three years he has been associated with Griffith. He did some of his best Triangle work with Lillian Gish in "An Innocent Magdalene," with Douglas Fairbanks in Bret Harte's "The Halfbreed," and with Helen Ware in "Cross Currents." The Lockwood-Allison supporting cast includes Lester Cuneo, Andrew Arbuckle, Lillian Haywood, Josephine Rice, Virginia Southern and William Ephe.

Scenes were taken by the Pallas Picture Company in the Empire Gold Mines at Grass Valley this week; the location being chosen for the gold mines scenes in "The Right Direction," a Morosco photoplay in which Vivian Martin is being featured. The scenes were taken at a depth of 3,400 feet below the earth's surface.

It took a lot of ingenious managing to transport by means of the tiny ore cars the bulky stage lights and the big electric equipment down to this subterranean gallery.

Scenes of the big electrical drills at work, the ore trains, and the actual veins of rich ore, were secured as a background for the story. The big stage lights, brought by train all the way from Los Angeles studios, made more illumination at this great depth than had ever been had before, and the stoical miners were delighted with this chance to make a minute survey of the underground workings.

"What are you doing, Carter?" she asked of her husband, "Moving?"

Ince studios. He was given a rousing reception by the players and directors at the plant, and then went immediately to work on a new composition.

Mr. Schertzinger revealed the quite astounding fact that seven numbers of the "Civilization" score are being featured by big New York musical productions. Three of these are now being used by Lina Abarbanell in John Cort's production of "Florabella." Two are being made popular by the Ziegfeld "Follies," one by Bert Williams and two more are being sung by Grace LaRue in vaudeville. Each number is the joint work of Schertzinger and Ince, the former having written the scores and the latter the lyrics.

After a good many weeks of planning and an immense amount of hard work in the way of preparation, everything is in excellent shape for the great indoor carnival that the Elks will give in their hall.

For the opening program the great comedy team, Kolb and Dill of the Flying "A" studio, will appear in what is said to be their greatest creation, never before given a public presentation. Kolb and Dill are now under contract with the American Film company, and they are among the highest priced artists in the profession, but their services on this occasion are donated, both of them being members of the Elks' lodge, and very fond of the order.

Other specialties will be given each night of the fair, the star feature for Friday night to be supplied by William Russell, illustrating the subject of "Preparedness" in tableaux and action. Saturday afternoon at 2:30, Mary Miles Minter, another bright star of the American galaxy, will entertain the ladies and children at the scene of the carnival, and she will give to each child a pretty souvenir.

While working in "water stuff" for "Atonement," a two-reel Flying "A" society drama, just released, Alfred Vosburg, who plays the lead opposite Vivian Rich, garbed in his best full dress clothes, took a bath which was not scheduled as a regular part of his toilet.

Supposedly unconscious, Vosburg lay in a rowboat which was gradually being wafted toward the shore by the gently rolling waves of the rising tide. As the waves approached the shore, they broke tempestuously over a submerged reef. The craft and its human cargo tossed aimlessly about, with first the bow, then the stern, then the beam shoreward. While in the last mentioned position, an unusually large roller swept up unannounced, and promptly upset the boat dropping Vosburg neatly out of sight in the foam of the breaking waves.

Only a hundred feet from shore, he came up blowing and coughing, and swam rapidly toward land. The completion of the scene and subsequent "shots" had to be delayed while the unlucky actor hastily repaired to his studio dressing room for a change of clothing to conform with that already photographed, and then the production proceeded without mishap.

BEVERLEY GRIFFITH LOST IN FOG.

Beverley Griffith, of Universal City, is thanking his lucky stars that he is not either at the bottom of the Pacific, or floating aimlessly on the ocean in a helpless motor boat, after his experience while returning to San Pedro from Catalina Island in a dense fog.

Director Henry McRae sent a radio message from Catalina Island to Universal City for additional film, and 200 pounds of black powder. Griffith left San Pedro with the supplies in an eight-cylinder power boat at 2:25 p. m., and arrived at Catalina at 3:55 p. m. He started immediately upon the return trip to San Pedro, and when about half way the launch became enveloped in a dense fog. The troubles of Griffith and the crew were multiplied by the fact that the engine became disabled, and the craft soon rolled in the trough of the sea. This condition continued for three hours, during which the men had no idea whether they were being drifted out to sea or washed nearer shore.

Fortunately just as the engine was started again Griffith caught sight of the big lighthouse at San Pedro, and by 7:30 p. m. the party was safe in harbor.

Partridge Special Representative

Will Act in That Capacity for the Greater Vitagraph-V-L-S-E Selling Department.

THAT the V-L-S-E, as the selling department of Greater Vitagraph, is determined to keep pace with the possibilities for enlarged service to the exhibitors, which the concentration of its efforts in the interests of one company permits, and that no step is to be neglected that will make for the highest degree of efficiency of its selling organization, is evidenced in the appointment by General Manager Walter W. Irwin of Joseph S. Partridge as special representative of the home office.

Joseph S. Partridge.

It will be the duty of Mr. Partridge, than whom no one is better acquainted with the needs of the exhibitors of America, to keep in constant touch with the twenty-three branches of the Vitagraph-V-L-S-E by personal visits and to see to it that everything that will make for the greatest good of the exhibitors, and consequently for Greater Vitagraph, is being done.

The large experience which Mr. Partridge has had in the film industry, the wide acquaintanceship which he possesses, and his practical knowledge of all that goes toward the upbuilding of an exchange and its customers, makes his appointment of especial interest.

There is probably no exchange manager in the country better known than he. For a number of years he was associated with the General Film Company in an investigating capacity. He was afterward made special representative of that company for the Dominion of Canada, and subsequentlty transferred to the Pacific Coast. He came with V-L-S-E, taking charge of the New York office at its inception, since which time it is doubtful whether there is an exchangeman in the city better liked by the exhibitors. On August 25 he was given a rising vote of thanks at an exhibitors' meeting, held in New York City.

Mr. Partridge, of course, will make the home office in Vitagraph-V-L-S-E his headquarters, but will be almost constantly on the road doing constructive work at the various branches of the V-L-SE, and seeing to it that the selling policies, as well as the operating efficiency of these offices, are furthered to the best interests of all concerned. He is succeeded as manager of the New York branch by George Balsdon, Sr., another film man known to all who have been in the industry for any length of time. Mr. Balsdon has been manager of the Boston branch of the V-L-S-E, where his conscientious service and responsiveness to the requirements of exhibitors won for him a large and loyal following.

Having himself been an exhibitor in Pittsburgh when he entered the film business and afterward general manager of the poster and advertising bureau of the General Film Company, he is most happily qualified to work with and for the exhibitors in the New York territory.

He has been with the V-L-S-E since its formation. To him was entrusted the opening of the offices of that company in Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Minneapolis.

J. L. Reardon, who has been assistant branch manager at Boston, has been appointed by Mr. Irwin as the manager of that office. Mr. Reardon is a young man who has made a remarkable record in the Boston territory, and who has the confidence of all the exhibitors in that territory.

EDWARD JOSE TAKES A SHORT VACATION.

Edward Jose, after sixty continuous weeks of work producing pictures for Pathe, during which time he has been hardly able to call an hour his own, is taking a week's vacation. On his return Mr. Jose will resume the direction of "Pearl of the Army," the new serial which Astra is producing for Pathe.

First Kipling Picture

Pathe to Release "The Light That Failed." Said to Be the Beginning of a Series Based on Kipling Stories.

TO PATHE goes the honor of being the first to release a picture adapted from a book by Rudyard Kippling. On October 15 "The Light That Failed," a five-reel Gold Rooster play produced by Edward Jose, will be for the first time shown to a public, the majority of which is undoubtedly aware that Rudyard Kipling is one of the most famous living authors, with a fame confined to no one nation, but embracing the earth. It is said that in the past Mr. Kipling has declined to permit his books to be put into motion pictures, as he felt that the art was still too new and immature—that he preferred to wait until better quality standards prevailed that his works might not suffer in the transposition. That he has finally consented to permit to be filmed what many consider his greatest work furnishes proof of his recognition of the great advances made in the last two years in motion picture production.

Edward Jose, to whom was entrusted the exacting task of giving the book a proper interpretation, selected for his picture a noteworthy cast consisting of Robert Edeson, Jose Collins, Lillian Tucker and Claude Fleming. Mr. Edeson, one of the most celebrated of our modern actors, plays "Dick Heldar," the hero; Miss Collins is "Bessie," the fiery, untamed and conscienceless girl of the streets; Miss Tucker is "Mazie," thoughts of whom filled Dick's whole life, and Claude Fleming is "Tarpenhow." How well the cast was selected is apparent on viewing the picture. The unreal fades into reality and "The Light That Failed" seems a page taken from life. When Dick goes blind and dies on the battlefield with teh word "Mazie" on his lips the pathos of it would move a heart of stone.

Some very remarkable and picturesque effects were secured by Mr. Jose in this picture, among them several scenes showing a long line of camels outlined against the sky. Hundreds of extras—British soldiers, tribesmen, etc.—were used and the picture has real atmosphere. The story of the book is followed closely.

BRITISH STARS IN GREATER VITAGRAPHS.

The great English drive on the photoplay has commenced. Stars of the London stage are beginning to take strategic steps preparatory to advancing to share some of the honors gained by the American stage stars. This is a bit of advance information just released by the Greater Vitagraph organization. On the 9th of October Vitagraph's first London-made release will be "The Firm of Girdlestone," a story by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, creator of the charatcer of Sherlock Holmes. In the cast appear the names of Charles Rock and Edna Flugrath. Mr. Rock is one of the most popular stars on the continent and has played prominent parts in the "House of Temperley," Dickens "Christmas Carol," "The Taming of the Shrew' and the "Sins of Society." He has also appeared in "England's Menace," "The Princess of Zenda" and many other productions. Miss Flugrath was at one time with the Edison Company. At sixteen years of age she was premier danseuse at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

Later on Vitagraph will present the film version of "Caste," with Sir John Hare in the role of Old Ecoles, one of his greatest characters. He will be supported by Peggy Hyland, who has just played her first Vitagraph picture as leading lady with E. H. Sothern. Then will come Sir Geo. Alexander in the "Second Mrs. Tanquery," followed by Henry Ainley in the "Great Adventure."

CORBIN SHEILDS, PARAMOUNT'S WASHINGTON PUBLICITY MAN.

Corbin Sheilds, a well-known theater owner and newspaper man, recently accepted a position with Mr. George M. Mann, manager of Paramount's Washington Exchange, as head of the Publicity Department.

Mr. Sheilds is well and favorably known to most of the exhibitors and newspaper men in the southern territory. He formerly managed theaters in Richmond, Norfolk, Newport News and Lynchburg, Va., for the late Thomas G. Leath, and more recently managed theaters in Augusta, Ga., Knoxville, Tenn., and Savannah, Ga., for Jake Wells, playing the combination road attractions. Two years ago he assumed the management of the Strand theater, Richmond, Va., installing and playing an exclusive Parmount Picture program and succeeded in making the Strand one of the most talked-about and successful photoplay theaters in the entire South. Mr. Sheilds is a native of Richmond, Va., and has been identified with the various branches of the amusement business for the past 27 years.

Vincent Serrano

VINCENT SERRANO, who, in the memories of theater-goers is linked with Augustus Thomas' play, "Arizona" as firmly as Denman Thompson with "The Old Homestead," is a stage star who has recently become a moving picture hero.

Mr. Serrano is now making "A Modern Monte Cristo," a play by Lloyd Lonergan, for the Thanhouser Film Corporation. Eugene Moore is directing the feature, which will be released through the Pathe exchanges.

Vincent Serrano.

Few actors have played one part more times than Mr. Serrano appeared as Lieut. Denton in "Arizona." More than a thousand times has Mr. Serrano, in the play, been accused of the murder which really was committed by Tony. Mr. Serrano has been on the stage nineteen years and for several years was a member of Richard Mansfield's company. He also has played leading parts in "The Little Brother of the Rich," "On Parole," "The Secret Orchard," "The Lure," "The Revolt" and "Pay Day."

Mr. Serrano has just returned from Block Island, where a number of sea scenes were taken for "A Modern Monte Cristo." He is delighted with motion picture work, especially because of the advantages of finer scenic effects than can be obtaind on the stage. He even enjoyed making a shipwreck scene in a storm which was so severe that nearly everyone but Mr. Serrano and the cameraman became too seasick to work.

New York is Mr. Serrano's birthplace. His father was Spanish and his mother was Irish. Before his Thanhouser engagement he had appeared only once in motion pictures, co-starring with Pauline Frederick in "Lydia Gilmore." He has a prominent part in the Thanhouser production.

UNITY HAS OFFICES IN CHICAGO.

The announcement from the Unity Sales Corporation's office that Andrew J. Cobe has opened executive offices for the company in Chicago is made. Even since the purchase of "The Yellow Menace," the sixteen episode serial produced by the Serial Film Company, Mr. Cobe and the Unity officials have felt the need of executive offices in Chicago to supplement the activities of the New York office, and the opening of the office at 207 South Wabash Avenue, is the realization of an ambition which has been in the minds of all interested in the Unity Sales Corporation for some months. Mr. Cobe plans to spend a greater part of his time in the Chicago office and will look after practically all the matters that affect the distribution of the pictures released on the Unity program. Chas. W. Allen, the president of the company, and Arthur Rosenbach, secretary, will still continue to be actively in charge of the New York office, and all the pictures for the program will be bought in and shipped from New York. The advertising and publicity departments will remain in New York as before.

Mutual Program

Week of September 25 Carries Thrilling Helen Holmes Railroad Feature—Other Good Numbers.

HELEN HOLMES in a star production entitled "The Manager of the B. & A." leads off the Mutual Film Corporation's schedule of releases for the week beginning September 25th. A second Mutual Star production, entitled "The Torch Bearer," featuring Lillian Russell, is released September 28. Next in importance among the week's releases from Mutual is the fourth number of the "Fantomas" series, under the title of "The Crook Detective." This is also released on September 28. More than the usual amount of amusement value is offered in the week's Mutual schedule, with the presentation of several of the best known artists of the screen in their favorite and most popular roles.

In "The Manager of the B. & A.," Leo Maloney, whose career with the Mutual has been so successfully bound up with the railroad pictures in which Helen Holmes has appeared, has an extraordinary opportunity for excellent work. Helen Holmes is up to her usual daring, dauntless, fetching self. As the daughter of aristocracy she finds little sympathy at home in her interest in "Dan Oakley," the new manager who succeeds her own father in his position with the B. & A.

William Russell plays the role of the aristocratic son of a line of Boston Blue Bloods in his characterization of John Huntley Knox, the young and aggressive editor of the Boston "Star" in "The Torch Bearer," from the American Film Company, Inc. It is a virile part, full of political struggle, human insight, and courage, such as Mr. Russell always plays at his best.

An element of humor is introduced in the character of Janet Dare, a girl from the wild and woolly west, who enters the straight and narrow household of the Huntley Knoxes, bound on the indefinite stay that the fact her father had once saved the senior Huntley Knox from death gives her privilege of. Charlotte Burton plays the role of Janet Dare, while Marie Van Tassell and Margaret Nichols appear as John's mother and sister. The remaining roles are played by Harry Keenan, Alan Forrest, Dick LaReno, Harvey Clarke and Nate Watt, popular Mutual players, all.

To those who have watched the famous master crook of fiction, "Fantomas" escape through the very fingers of the law when they had already closed upon him, in the first three episodes depicting the crime career of the great criminal, the fourth episode will bring another thrill. "The Crook Detective," the fourth installment, pictures the mysterious disappearance of a bill collector, sent out to collect a bill from one Father Moche, the occupant of the ground floor of a tenement in the poorer districts of Paris, and the recovery of his body, dead and robbed of the $1,200 he had collected, behind a wall.

It is "The Black Terror," a two-part Thanhouser picture, featuring Thomas Curran and Barbara Gilroy, is released this week. This also is a detective story, short, but packed from beginning to end with mystery and thrill. Mr. Curran is given an interesting characterization, one which it takes a real knowledge of psychology to interpret.

The comedy releases, four in number, for this week consists in two one-reelers and two two-reelers. The Vogue company comes forward with an amusing story mostly about ducks, geese and chickens, in the two-reel comedy "Poultry," featuring Ben Turpin and Rube Miller which goes out on October 1.

George Ovey, the funny "Cub" comedian, is featured in two funny pictures of the week. "Catching That Burglar," the one-reel release of September 29, and "Foiled," the two-part comedy of September 30, are each with the usual Ovey brand of funniness.

The Beauty release of the week is "The Deacon's Card," a picturized sermon against the evils of organizing anti-gambling clubs, from the pen of Edward Hungerford and featuring Orral Humphrey.

Mutual Weekly No. 91, picturing current events, "See America First," the Mutual Scenic and Cartoon, and "Reel Life," the Mutual's magazine in pictures, all of which are produced by the Gaumont company, complete the week's releases. The Weekly and Scenic cartoon appears September 27, the "Reel Life" reel on Sunday, October 1.

CHARLES BOWSER JOINS THE DREWS.

Charles Bowser, who plays Sidney Drew's "boss" in the Drew comedy by Tom J. Geraghty, called "Cave Man Buff," is one of the most distinguished actors now playing old men parts. He has appeared in the support of every prominent star in America. Generally it was with the consent of the stars, but on one occasion it was somewhat under protest.

Looks Good for Artcraft

Many Bookings Reported for Mary Pickford Subjects—Exchanges Busy.

FOLLOWING closely upon the development of its exchange system, Artcraft Pictures Corporation announces the closing of an unusually large number of contracts for bookings of the new Mary Pickford productions in the more prominent theaters of the country. Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, mentions offhand the Strand in New York, Keeney's in Brooklyn and Newark, the Gordon theaters in Rochester, N. Y., New Haven, Conn., and Worcester and New Bedford, Mass., the Walnut in Cincinnati, Portola in San Francisco and Stillman in Cleveland. The last named is a new house, which announces that it will open in October with "Less Than the Dust," the first picture Mary Pickford has made since she became an independent star with Artcraft as her distributing agency.

The Pickford invasion of Canada under the new policy is now on. Artcraft Pictures Corporation, Ltd., has been organized to handle her productions throughout the Dominion. Offices have been taken in Toronto at 12 Queen street, East, and announcement of the name of the Canadian representative is expected shortly.

Arthur S. Kane has made rapid progress in the organization of exchanges in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast territory, for which he is special representative. For his San Francisco manager he has drafted C. M. Simmons from Mutual. Mr. Simmons will make his headquarters at 443 Pacific Building with Mr. Kane and will cover California, Nevada and Arizona. T. Y. Henry is in charge of the Denver office at 1440 Welton street and will distribute the Pickford pictures in Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Wyoming and a slice of western Nebraska. In Seattle, H. G. Rosebaum has left Triangle to act for Artcraft in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

The Chicago and Minneapolis exchanges continue under the supervision of Max Goldstine, who has selected Ben E. Drum to manage the Minneapolis branch. Mr. Drum was formerly assistant manager for V-L-S-E in that section and was snapped up by Artcraft when he found that he would consider an offer. He has been a successful newspaper man and exhibitor.

Charles S. Goetz, assistant manager of the New York exchange, spent all last week in western New York closing contracts for bookings on the mass of applications received from that section.

GOFF MAKES TOUR OF V-L-S-E BRANCHES.

For the purpose of making certain that the sales representatives of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E thoroughly understand the possibilities for enlarged service and progress which are open to them, by reason of the absorption of the V-L-S-E by the Greater Vitagraph, A. W. Goff, Assistant General Manager of the V-L-S-E, left last week for a tour of the offices of that organization as far west as the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Goff's trip is primarily to confirm the grounds for this enthusiasm and to outline the plans which are being devised by the V-L-S-E, as the selling department of Greater Vitagraph, for added cooperation in behalf of the exhibitor. Incidentally, Mr. Goff will also outline the campaign of advertising, publicity and sales helps which is to be employed to aid exhibitors in making the most of Greater Vitagraph's super-serial, "The Scarlet Runner," which is to be released on October 2d. Mr. Goff will visit Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Salt Lake City, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, and upon his return, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

NEWSPAPERS TO FEATURE VITAGRAPH SERIAL.

"More good news in store for the exhibitors who have come to expect great things from the Greater Vitagraph," was General Manager Irwin's remark upon the completion of negotiations whereby metropolitan newspapers all over the country will exploit "The Scarlet Runner" as a fiction feature.

The most representative paper in Washington, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Richmond, Norfolk, Buffalo, Indiana, Louisville, Syracuse, Milwaukee, Omaha Detroit, Minneapolis, Portland, Seattle, Dallas, Denver and Salt Lake City have signified their willingness to make this big serial with Earle Williams in the leading role a pronounced success. They will be supported in their endeavors by hundreds of smaller dailies and weekies, who will receive "The Scarlet Runner" in plate or mat form from the Western Newspaper Union, whose head office is in Chicago .

Important Paramount Features

Program for the Week of October 2 Carries Two Subjects Featuring Lenore Ulrich—Other Features, Too.

THE Paramount Program for the week of October 2 is of particular importance, by reason of the fact that it marks the return to the screen of Lenore Ulrich in her first Morosco production for this season after the advent of her exceptional success on the speaking stage last winter, and also because it brings forth the second Famous Players production in which Valentine Grant appears. This week also marks the introduction to the motion picture industry of Paramount's first single reel comedy which has been heralded as being of the highest caliber that has yet been produced.

Lenore Ulrich returns this season in three productions, the first of which, released this week, will be "Intrigue," a very stirring drama, in which is contained many thrilling incidents. It is undoubtedly the best production Miss Ulrich has made since her adoption of the screen for the portrayal of characters. Valentine Grant will be seen in the Famous Players production of "The Daughter of MacGregor," a Scotch character piece written by Miss Grant herself. It is wonderfully clever.

Paramount's small features consist of four single reels for this week and will include the 34th edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; a Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Picture, the 35th of the series of "Trips Around the World," entitled a "Scotch-Irish Reel;" a Paramount Bray Cartoon, "O. U. Rooster," by C. L. Glackens, and a Paramount Comedy, produced by the United States Picture Corporation, "Nearly a Deserter."

Paramount's magazine-on-the-screen, the Pictographs, contains four interesting subjects this week, the first of which will be the beginning of a series of "Safety First" pictures, which will show in minutest detail, how people can safeguard themselves from injury in many unique ways. It also includes the story of "What Became of the Spinning Wheel," with which the grandmothers of days gone by spent many hours spinning out the wool into cloth.

Another interesting subject is that of "How Great Lake Freighters Are Handled," showing that it is possible to load one of these great steamers of our Lakes, a 600-footer, in twenty minutes. The concluding subject is "The Four-Footed Aristocrats," showing what has been accomplished by the eugenic breeding of cats and dogs.

Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures take an interesting trip to a portion of Scotland and Ireland. Many of the incidences and scenes are the result of Mr. Holmes' recent travels by motor, and hence give many more intimate close-ups than those which could possibly be obtained if he were to take his fellow-travelers all the way by train. They give the Scot an opportunity to renew his youth by again watching the shearers remove the woolly coats of the unwilling sheep, and so realistic are the pictures, that one can imagine he hears the skirl of the bag-pipes as he stands on the curb and sees a regiment of Kilties marching from the church to the barracks, while in Ireland, the Irishman has an opportunity of riding on the jaunting-car, and also goes to the horse show in Dublin, and visits St. Kevins Bay at Glendalaugh.

"O. U. Rooster," a Paramount-Bray Cartoon, is from the pen of C. L. Glackens, and is undoubtedly one of the best bits of animated cartoon this well-known cartoonist has done.

"Nearly a Deserter" is the first single reel Paramount comedy to be released by this distributing organization since its inception two years ago. It was produced by the United States Picture Corporation, and tells a story of how a tramp endeavored to gain a fifty dollar reward by passing a "pal" off for an army deserter, only to be caught in his attempt, during the interim of which many unique complications arise. Some of the most clever trick photography yet accomplished for the screen is shown, and the picture is full of surprises from start to finish.

Special lithograph paper, publicity and advertising, has been arranged for each of the five reel features on the program and the single reels that are issued this week for the exhibitor's aids, which is a part of the campaign Paramount has inaugurated to help the exhibitor.

PATHE CLUB HAS ANOTHER OUTING.

Members of the Pathe Club and their guests, to the number of 130, spent a very enjoyable afternoon and evening at Brighton Beach on September 9. Three big auto busses and several touring cars were used to take the party down and back, each one decorated with the club's banners.

The afternoon was devoted to the amusements of Coney Island. Dinner had been arranged for at the Hotel Shelbourne at Brighton Beach, the entire gallery having been reserved for the occasion. Dancing concluded what every one voted to have been a perfect day.

Among the associate members present were L. D Horkheimer of Balboa, George A. Powers, T. C. Wiley, Harry Mittenthal and Harold Davis. Patheites from out of town were H. M. Osborne, manager of the Philadelphia office; Manager Epstein, of the Albany office; Manager Abeles, of the New York booking office, and Manager Rheinheb, of the Newark office.

Club President J. A. Berst had taken an active interest in the outing which explained to a large degree the success of it. The committee on arrangements included P. A. Parsons, J. W. Kyle, F. C. Davidson and E. J. O'Connor.

Alicia Ramsey Weds Rudolph de Cordova

Culmination of a Twenty-Year-Old Romance—Bride and Groom Literary Collaborators.

A TWENTY-YEAR-OLD romance culminated September 14 in the marriage of Rudolph de Cordova, author and dramatist, and Alicia Ramsey, who has for several years collaborated with him in the writing of dramatic productions. Mr. de Cordova is now a member of Metro Pictures Corporation's staff of scenario writers, and assisted in adapting Shakespear's "Romeo and Juliet" for the screen version in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are starred. When Mr. de Cordova first met Mrs. Ramsey in London she was the wife of his intimate friend, Cecil Ramsey. He has always remained unmarried. Two years ago Mrs. Ramsey became a widow, and he was at liberty to declare himself.

The ceremony was performed at 8:30 o'clock, at the home of Mrs. Cora de Cordova Sanville, sister of the bridegroom, at 260 Riverside Drive, in the presence of a few relatives and intimate friends. Mr. and Mrs. de Cordova will be out of the city only a few days on a wedding trip, and will return to make their home in New York.

Together, Mr. de Cordova and Mrs. Ramsey have written "Monsieur de Paris," "As a Man Sows," "The Mandarin," "Honor," "The Password," "Edmund Kean," "The Price of a Hat" and "The Organ Grinder," as well as seven spectacular productions for the London Hippodrome, for the English stage; in the United States they have produced "John Hudson's Wife," "The Shadow Behind the Throne," "The Quicksands," "The Password" and "The Price of a Hat." They are at present working on a play for New York production.

Mrs. Ramsey wrote the novel, "The Adventures of Mortimer Dixon," published in London in 1913. Her independent plays have been "Bridge," produced in the United States, and "Only a Model," "Gaffer Jarge," "Isla the Chosen" and "Her Guardian Angel" in England.

Mr. de Cordova has written extensively for leading periodicals of America and England, and has made dramatic productions for the English Browning Society, the Shelley Society and others. Earlier in his career he acted in the companies of Madame Modjeska, Richard Mansfield and other notable stars.

POWELL WILL SHOW "CHARITY?"

"Charity?" the first feature of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., which has just been completed, will be shown to the trade at Loew's New York Theater Roof on Tuesday afternoon, September 26, at 2 o'clock. This picture, which has been made under Mr. Powell's direction from a story by Linda A. Griffith, and which marks his initial effort as an independent producer, already has aroused unusual interest. In it, and who are making their first appearance as stars under Mr. Powell's direction are Creighton Hale, Linda A. Griffith and Sheldon Lewis.

In the endeavor to eliminate the possibility of that which is oftimes an unfortunate feature of an otherwise presentable picture—bad titles—Mr. Powell commissioned James Clarence Harvey to write the titles for "Charity?" Mr. Harvey has long occupied a unique position in the world of letters as a writer of verse and prose that carries always an appeal to the heart strings.

In addition to the trade there will be present at the private view of "Charity?" numerous people prominent in various lines of endeavor who have displayed keen interest in the picture during its making, and who are interested especially in those conditions considered in the picture. "Charity?" will be released on a state rights basis.

Essanay Plans for October

Stirring Times at Big Chicago Studio, Where Many Subjects Are Progressing.

OCTOBER will be the stirring month for Essanay. Five large features and quality program productions will test its extensive studioi and laboratory facilities to the utmost, and, in keeping with President George K. Spoor's faith in the industry the construction of these plays will be accomplished with rather greater expense than is usual in the business. Mr. Spoor views the coming fall and winter season with optimism and this has led him to believe that more than customary expenditure for production is warranted.

"A brisk and healthy competition so far enabled producers to keep abreast of the demands of the public," he says. "It now behooves us to surpass our standards of the past year in supplying entertaining photoplays, lest the patrons decide that the industry is not progressing and is neither up to nor in advance of their requirements.

"This can be obtained only by additional expenditure. Essanay's system of manufacture, and its complete facilities for such, effect a saving in the technical end which permits of more being spent in the line of artistic production. I believe 'The Return of Eve' and 'The Prince of Graustark' offer an exposition of my meaning better than it can be placed in words."

"The Return of Eve" will be the first feature released through the new Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. The date is October 2d. Shortly after, at a time to be announced later, "The Prince of Graustark," adapted in five parts from George Barr McCutcheon's novel, will be released.

At this time final scenes will be taken for "The Chaperon," made famous on the stage by Maxine Elliot, and "The Breakers," taken from Arthur Stringer's story in The Saturday Evening Post. Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien will appear in the former and Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig in the latter. Each play will be in five acts.

Also at this time Henry B. Walthall will be appearing before the camera in his next feature, the title of which will be announced soon.

Essanay's October program for General Film Service offers an excellent selection of good stories well played. "An Old Fashioned Girl" opens the month on October 3d. It is a two-act piece featuring Marguèrite Clayton and its backgrounds are the beautiful spots around historic Starved Rock, Ill. On the next day "The Fable of the Kid Who Shifted His Ideals to Golf, and Then Became a Baseball Fan and Took the Only Known Cure," will be offered in one reel. Harry Dunkinson, comedian, who has not been seen in the popular George Ade fables for some time, plays the lead in this offering. The three-act offering for the week, released on October 7th, will give friends of Harry Beaumont an opportunity to see him at his best. He wrote, directed and played the lead in "His Little Wife," a heart stirring drama of small town life. Gertrude Glover plays opposite him.

The second week opens October 10th with "Money to Burn," a two-act piece featuring Lillian Drew. It carries a comedy touch throughout its more intense points and makes an ideal film of this length. Wallace A. Carlson's Canimated Nooz Pictorial, a split reel with scenic, follows the next day, to provide its customary number of laughs. The three-reeler on October 14th is "Los Twenty-Four Hours," a famous stage comedy. Richard C. Travers and Marguerite Clayton appear in the leading roles and the supporting cast includes many other leading Essanay players.

"The Fable of the Kittenish Superanns and the World-Weary Snipes," is a George Ade fable in two reels offered on October 17th. This fable contrasts the enjoyment gotten from life by a group of middle aged persons, with the bored outlook a lot of debuntantes and their dancing beaus have upon existence. It recently appeared in the Cosmopoliitan magazine and was deemed so good that it was placed in two acts with more elaborate settings, instead of the customary one reel.

On October 18th, Wallace A. Carlson, cartoonist, will bring back Dreamy Dud to his many friends in the usual split reel with scenic. The three-reeler for this week, offered October 21st, marks the first appearance of E. H. Calvert since "According to the Code," a five-act feature. It is entitled, "Isle o' Love."

Richard C. Travers and Marguerite Clayton take the leading roles in "Borrowed Sunshine," a delightful story built around the activities of a little girl of five. This will be released on October 24. Canimated Nooz follows on October 25th. "It Never Could Happen" is the title of the three-act piece for this week, released October 28th. Richard Travers and Lillian Drew appear in the leading parts. On October 31st, a two-act comedy, "The Lifesaver," with Harry Dunkinson, will be released.

VITAGRAPH COMEDIES FOR GENERAL FILM.

Hewing to the line of better and better comedies Vitagraph scores heavily on the General Film Program, week beginning September 25th. On Monday the General Film Company will release a Vitagraph one-part comedy made at the Bayshore Studio by Director Robertson. It is entitled "Getting By," and features Huntly Gordon and Shirley Moore. In this snappy comedy Huntly Gordon demonstrates that he is as much at home in a comedy role as he has proved himself to be in more serious parts. Shirley Moore gives a good account of herself as the stenographer who marries against the wishes of her husband's father.

Scene from "Getting By" (Vitagraph).

On Friday, September 29th, Hughie Mack scores and scores heavily in the comedy offering "She Who Last Laughs." This is another large scene production from the script by himself and Graham Baker. Patsey De Forest and the rest of Semon's "Sea Lions" support Hughie in great style.

LOU-TELLEGEN IN MORE LASKY PICTURES.

Lou-Tellegen, who recently created unusual attention by reason of his performance in "The Victory of Conscience" on the Paramount Program, is completing at the Lasky Studios two other feature photoplays which will be released soon.

The first of these is an elaborate picturization of Paul Potters's famous play "The Victoria Cross," which in its stage version had a long run in New York and en tour some years ago.

The Lasky Company has engaged Miss Nell Shipman to appear with Lou-Tellegen in one of the leading feminine roles in his third production of the summer which is a story containing a Spanish theme. This photoplay will mark Miss Shipman's debut as a Lasky player or in Paramount pictures. Her work, which is well known, has been done heretofore at the studios of the Vitagraph Company. Her last production for that concern was "God's Country and the Woman."

In Mr. Lou-Tellegen's last three productions the leading feminine role is played by Cleo Ridgely who heretofore has co-starred with Wallace Reid in Lasky productions.

THE STEVENSON STORIES.

September 7, 1916.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir: An item in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World stated that Mr. Martin Sabine had acquired the film rights to my series of mystery stories, "The Gloved Hand," "The Holladay Case," "That Affair at Elizabeth," "The Marathon Mystery," and "The Destroyer," and was proceeding with their production.

This is not at all the case, as Mr. Sabine himself would be the first to tell you. He has the rights to only one story, "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet." I still retain the rights to all the others, and intend to do so until I can make satisfactory arrangements for their production as a series. Yours truly,

BURTON E. STEVENSON.

TAMING GROUCHY BILL (Selig), Sept. 9.—Tom Mix becomes a "mother-in-law" in this one-reel cowboy comedy. That fact, however, does not deter him from riding the toughest broncho on the ranch. Bill's taming comes about mostly through the muscular arm of Tom, whom the former believes to be his wife's mother. The wife is played by Victoria Forde.

A BAG OF TROUBLE (Vim), Sept. 9.—Pokes and Jabbs, in the persons of Robert Burns and Walter Stull, get into a lot of trouble in this one-reel comedy over the question of ownership of a handbag. Poke's flirting with and subsequent gift to Jabb's wife of Mrs. Poke's new handbag starts things going, and the following many involved situations are humorous.

FOR THE SON OF THE HOUSE (Biograph), Sept. 11.—This one-reel reissue of a David W. Griffith production is a pleasing story of a simple girl's willingness to shoulder the blame for an attempted theft by the son of the woman who has befriended her. Mae Marsh and Charles H. West carry the leading roles in this story, whose happy ending comes when the son refuses to allow the girl to take the blame for his contemplated crime.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 73, 1916 (Selig), Sept. 11.—Mrs. Edna Passapae demonstrates new dance at Chicago; $1,000,000 fire at Vallejo, Calif.; Illinois National Guard ordered home, San Antonio; Mrs. Florita Moaderscheid, of Alameda, Calif., is expert cabinet maker; aviators fly to aviation luncheon in New York; President Wilson accepts Lincoln farm and memorial at Hodgensville, Ky.; King Nicholas of Montenegro visits Paris, France; Lloyd George views troops at Surrey, England, before their departure for France; Candidate Hughes attends fair at Loveland, Colo.; President Wilson accepts renomination for Presidency. Allenhurst, N. J.

BUSTING IN AND OUT OF SOCIETY (Vitagraph), Sept. 11.—When a tramp, in the guise of a count, attends a society affair as the guest of honor there is sure to be fun, and that is exactly what happens in this one-reel comedy. Further fun follows when the tramp's disguise is discovered. In the cast are fouad Paul Winsor, George O'Donnell, Dorothy Long and Thomas Reynolds.

A STRENUOUS VISIT (Vim), Sept. 13.—This is probably one of the most humorous one-reel comedies that Harry Meyers and Rosemary Theby have done. The story is full of laughs, as can be imagined when it is known that Harry is arrested three times for flirting with the wife of his friend Fred, whose home he was invited to visit. Harry is bailed out three times by Fred before introductions are made and explanations offered. Novel settings help the production and the new idea in police stations is funny.

STRANDED (Vim), Sept. 14.—Plump and Runt meet with adventure when they decide to quit the high life. They board a motor boat, planning a quiet day's fishing, but the boat gets in the way of soldiers at target practice and is wrecked. Ham and Bud swim to shore and find themselves in the midst of a group of picknickers. They have a good time and prove themselves heroes when they rescue the Poor Young Girl from the clutches of the Dastardly Villain.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 74 (Selig), Sept.14.—Bar Harbor, Me., closes season; Harvard football team at practice, Cambridge, Mass.; Prohibition candidates for Presidency and Vice-Presidency begin 10,000-mile campaign trip, Chicago; Santa Maria, replica of Columbus's ship, still at Newport News, Va.; New York City faces general strike on top of traction strike; Navy rookies return from practice voyage, Brooklyn; Cantebury race course opens at Sydney, Australia; Annual bathing fashion show at Idora Park, Oakland, Cal.

LOOT AND LOVE (Vitagraph), Sept. 15.—Disappointed in love, portly Hughey Mack becomes a burglar in this one-reel comedy. Five years later he meets his pal in a house he has entered to "burgle." Both carry the same sort of bags. Hughey is surprised when he finds that he is in the home of his former sweetheart and that still another crook is on the job. Three similar bags—one full of money—and the manner in which the money is recovered make a laughable picture.

General Film Company Specials

A MILLION FOR A BABY (Essanay), Sept. 9.—The three reels of this drama are crammed full of story. Fast action and intense situations hold interest suspended throughout. Commendable work is done by Bryant Washburn, Marguerite Clayton, John Lorenz and Lillian Drew. The photeplay tells a story of a wealthy, childless young couple and the efforts of the ne'er-do-well husband to obtain control of his deceased father-in-law's estate. The will decrees that the fortune shall go to charity unless a child is born. The husband's efforts to put forth a false heir are thwarted, however, and the denouement comes when the neglected wife is granted a divorce and is free to marry the man who has saved her fortune.

THE PONY EXPRESS RIDER (Selig), Sept. 11.—As the cowpuncher-stranger who has escaped from jail and obtained a position as pony express rider Tom Mix gives several exhibitions of exceptional horsemanship in this three-reel Western drama. He wins the regard of the boys at the Circle Diamond Ranch, and proves his bigness when he saves his friend from lynching, knowing that if he shows himself at the scene of the proposed hanging he leaves himself open to capture. He sacrifices his liberty for his friend's life. The cast is composed of Tom Mix, Victoria Forde, Sid Jordaa, Joe Ryan and Pat Christman.

THE BLOT ON THE 'SCUTCHEON (Biograph), Sept. 12.—Griffith's excellent adaptation of Browning's poem is being reissued in two reels. The picture is to be highly recommended for discriminating audiences. Dorothy Bernard, Charles Mailes, Edwin August and Claire McDowell are in the cast.

THE TREASURE OF CIBOLA (No. 6 of "The Girl from Frisco" Serial—Kalem), Sept. 13.—Romance and modern melodrama are blended in this two-reel chapter of the Robert Welles Ritchie serial. Barbara goes in search of the treasure which, ages ago, was hidden in a cave in New Mexico. A review of this picture was printed in the issue of Sept. 16, page 1821.

THE HOODOO OF DIVISION B (No. 97 of the "Hazards of Helen" Series—Kalem), Sept. 16.—In this number of the Kalem railroad series Helen prevents a smashup with the "hoodoo" engine. Unusual feats and exciting incidents are plentiful. A review of this two-reel installment was printed in the issue of Sept. 16, page 1821.

Fox Film Corporation

"WHERE LOVE LEADS" (Sept. 10).—A five-reel picture with Ormi Hawley and Rockcliff Fellows. The most exciting episode in it is a fight in a fashionable dive to rescue two perfectly innocent young girls brought there by a woman procurer who had got the job as their governess. A longer review will be found elsewhere in this issue of the Moving Picture World.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE COMBAT (Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature), Sept. 18.—An unusually interesting five-part production featuring Anita Stewart. THE CHATTEL (Vitagraph), Sept. 25.—A five-reel Blue Ribbon feature, starring E. H. Sothern. It is a story of modern life and holds the interest to the finish. The production is of the best. Peggy Hyland shares honors with the star. The subject is reviewed upon another page of this issue.

THE RETURN OF EVE (Essanay), September.—A photoplay of great interest, featuring Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien. The cast is exceptional throughout. The scenes are of idyllic beauty, and the photography and tinting add to the many charms of the production. It ranks among the best features bearing the Indian head brand.

Mutual Film Corporation

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 53 (Gaumont), Sept. 13.—"Along the North Shore of Massachusetts" is the subject of this number, in which well-photographed views of old historic points ou the Massachusetts coast are shown, as well as beautiful surf scenes. An animated cartoon entitled "Nosey Ned Commandeers an Army Mule" appears on the same reel.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 89 (Sept. 13).—Interesting items of this number are the freshmen and the sophs of the University of California pulling a lively tug-of-war; the Pacific liner "Ecuador" starts on her maiden trip to the Orient; German prisoners taken in the hattle of the Somme; a fire in a grain warehouse at Vallejo, Cal.; the light-weight champion Welsh with his trainer, and the opening of a campaign in California against the throwing of glass in the public highways.

JERRY AND THE BLACKHANDERS (Cub), Sept. 15.—A typical George Ovey comedy, in which Jerry swipes an accordion from a blind man and serenades his sweetheart. The police appear and knockabout scenes follow. Later he is employed by the blackhanders to carry a grip containing an infernal machine to the girl's father. The subject is an amusing one.

REEL LIFE, NO. 20 (Gaumont), Sept. 17.—Training merchant marine officers furnishes the subject of numerous entertaining scenes. Following this an expert fashion artist is seen fitting gowns to live models. This gives an instructive glimpse into feminine houdoir secrets. The tail piece from Life is amusing.

THE STINGER STUNG (Beauty), Sept. 19.—The comedy of this number loses weight because the point of the story is never clear. It has to do with the Beeville "Stinger" and its editor getting in wrong over some item inserted in the paper; also the trouhles of a hevy of women trying to clean up the town. Further than this suggestion of what it's ahout there is little to be said.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 54 (Gaumont), Sept. 20.—"The Beauty Spots of New Hampshire" shown in this number prove interesting and instructive entertainment. Among these is the birth place of Daniel Webster. On the same reel is a comic cartoon entitled "Pigs."

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

FANTOMAS, NO. 2. (Gaumont), Sept. 14.—"The Man in Black," which is the title of this number of an excellent serial, is unusually thrilling with an interest that never flags. In it a huge spotted serpent takes a prominent part, a thrilling train wreck occurs, and a mansion is exploded.

TANGLED HEARTS (Centaur), Sept. 16.—A two-reel suhject, featuring Margaret Gibson, Wm. Clifford, Al Blake and Nan Christie. The story centers ahout a young girl expelled from a finishing school for flirting with a chauffeur. Later the chauffeur is employed hy the elder sister's lover and numerous complications follow. The elder sister thinks her sister has married her own lover, but all ends happily for hoth couples. This runs along entertainingly, though not a suhject of any special strength.

DOCTORING A LEAK (Vogue), Sept. 17.—A two-part slapstick comedy of a very meagre entertainment value. The comedy of the production depends on the tardy efforts of two inexperienced plumbers to stop a leak in a hathroom.

THREE PALS (Mutual Star Production), Sept. 19.—A five-part Kolb and Dill comedy of moderate entertainment value. The story of the comedy is not strong enough for five reels, and the husiness of the picture is rather paltry, although many audiences might find the comedy amusing.

PASTE AND POLITICS (Vogue), Sept. 24.—A two-part slapstick comedy of very little account. A great deal of paste slinging and otherwise stupid husiness constitutes this production.

THE BLACK TERROR (Thanhouser), Sept. 29.—A two-part melodrama of considerable interest in which a young man is wrongly accused of theft and also of heing connected with a murder. At a house party given by one of his accusers the masked man appears and terrorizes the guests. The police, taking a hand, discover that the host, with his butler, are the guilty parties. A pretty love story is also a part of the production.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE DAUGHTER OF MACGREGOR (Famous Players), Sept. 17.—A five-reel picture, with scenes laid in Scotland and the United States. The character drawing is well done, and the story is of fair merit. Sidney Olcott has produced it skilfully. Valentine Grant has the title role. A full review ot the picture may be found in another department of this issuc.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS (Pathe), Sept. 18.—"When Betty's Sister Goes to School" is the title of this number of interesting fashion reviews. In it many pretty garments suitable to the needs of the girl who goes away to school aro exhihited.

LUKE AND THE MERMAIDS (Rolin), Sept. 18.—While there is nothing entirely new ahout this farce-comedy number, it is at the same time very amusing and interesting. That portion in which Luke and his pal follow the mermaids to their suhmarine home is cleverly contrived and entertaining.

Pathe Exchange, Inc. Specials

VICTIMS OF VANITY (Pathe), Sept. 18.—A two-part reissue of a moderately interesting melodrama, in which a woman takes a beautiful necklace which does not helong to her to wear at a ball. Before she has a ehance to return it a burglar enters the house and steals it from her. The indiscretion is the cause of much unhappiness and practically the ruin of her own career.

THE GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 11 (Balboa), Sept. 25.—This number of the serial entitled "Mammon and Moloch," introduces considerahle warfare on the Mexican border, and makes an opportunity for a young girl who has heen harred from the vaudeville stage until she has made a reputation for herself. The story is not very clearly defined nor of great strength.

SAINT, DEVIL AND WOMAN (Gold Rooster Play), Sept. 25.—A five-part production made at the Thanhouser studio, and featuring Florence LaBadie. The story of the produetion was written hy Philip Lonergan. A full review of the picture, which will he found moderately entertaining, appears elsewhere.

Unity Sales Corp.

YELLOW MENACE (Episode No. 5), Sept. 25.—The title of this week's continuation is "The Haunted House." The three girls are now in captivity and the terrible powers of Singh are still in evidence. For longer review see page 1684, issue of Sept. 9, 1916.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 37 (Universal), Sept. 13.—A diversified number containing many scenes of interest at home and abroad. Parades, sporting events and numerous war sidelights are included.

A DESPERATE REMEDY Imp), Sept. 24.—A pleasant little comedy numher introducing Gertrude Selby, an attractive young actress, in a different role from the burlesque in which she has been playing. She appears as a wealthy miss who follows a young novelist to the mountains and poses as a wild girl. The numher is quite well presented.

MODEL NO. 46 (Nestor), Sept. 25.—An amusing farce-comedy, hy Tom Gibson, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Gretchen Lederer and Priscilla Dean. Lee plays a doctor, who brings a lady patient to the hotel. Eddie has a fashion model in one of the rooms and his girl confuses the model with the doctor's patient. Some funny complications follow. This is presented in a breezy hut acceptahle way and should please an audience very much.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN JAPAN (Powers), Sept. 28.—This numher gives intimate views of Japanese citizens making a holiday in Nara Park. Street scenes in Kyoto are also shown. The tinted views of the famous Geisha girls are extremely attractive; in fact it is douhtful if any one has succeeded better than Dr. Dorsey in giving the public comprehensive glimpses of these native beauties.

THE SHADOW SINISTER (Big U), Sept. 29.—A western number, featuring Jane Bernoudy, Lloyd T. Whitlock and James Farley. It pictures the way in which a young girl, in love with the sheriff, rouuds up a had man for whom a large reward is outstanding. The handit is killed in a fall from a cliff while endeavoring to attack the girl, and is identified hy the scar. The plot is conventional but presented with a fair degree of strength.

THE INSPECTOR'S DOUBLE (Joker), Sept. 30.—A character comedy, featuring Gale Henry, Chas. Conklin, Wm. Franey aud Lillian Peacock. Gale's husband so strongly resemhles the health inspector that she mistakes them. She believes her hubby has gone "dippy," and he in turn thinks she is the same. The picture closes at Dr. Knutt's sanitarium. This is done in characteristic farce-comedy style and brings several laughs.

Universal Film Corporation Specials

THE CARAVAN (Universal Special Feature), Sept. 11.—A two-reel subject, written and produced hy Raymond Wells. The scenes are laid in Egypt, along the Nile, and some splendid atmospheric effects have been achieved. The Egyptian costumes are brief but in keeping with the traditions of the country. This strikes one as an entirely fresh suhject and is splendidly presented. Claire McDowell, Jay Belasco and Lena Baskette play the leads. The desert scenes are particularly striking and the plot an unusual one. The production as a whole is a desirable one.

TO ANOTHER WOMAN (Rex), Sept. 24.—A two-reel suhject by Harvey Gates, featuring Cleo Madison, Wm. V. Mong, Ray Hanford and Margaret Whisler. It tells of a husband, tired of his wife, who has her confined in a sanitarium, while he consorts with another. A young doctor aids her to escape, and she marries him after her husband has been shot hy his paramour. The theme of this is a little sordid, but it holds the interest. The wife's return, attired in the fine clothes her husband so greatly admired, made a good feature. This is presented with a fair degree of strength.

IF MY COUNTRY SHOULD CALL (Red Feather), Sept. 25.—A five-reel subject, adapted by Ida May Park from a story hy Virginia Terhune Van De Water. It tells of a mother who administers a heart depressaut to her son, so he is unable to go with his regiment to Mexico. Her husband, an Englishman, has already returned to fight for his country. This raises the familiar question of a woman's rights in time of war. It is dramatic and smoothly presented throughout. There are some unpleasant moments in the story, but theso occur in the mother's dream, and the story proper ends happily. Dorothy Phillips, Jack Nelson, Gretchen Lederer and others appear. A strong subject of an original type.

LIBERTY'S SACRIFICE (Universal Special), Sept. 25.—No. 7 of the "Liberty" series. This instalment continues the effort to penetrate further into Mexico hy Capt. Rutledge in order to rescue Liberty from the bandits. The government orders the invasion of Mexico to cease, but Rutledge leaves his men and goes into the desert country with Pedro alone to help him. The action is not as pronounced as in some numbers, but there is a wealth of picturesque scenic effects to hold the interest.

TIMOTHY DOBBS, THAT'S ME NO. 7, "A HERO BY PROXY" (Universal Special Feature), Sept. 25.—If all of the numbers of this serial reached the humorous heights of this particular one, it would be a great success. Carter De Haven is seen at his best in this instalment. He is funny himself and is provided with unusually funny business. He starts things going by posing as a hero and captivating a pretty girl. He then signs up with the movies again and does some excellent burlesque work. A laughable instalment.

A SURGEON'S REVENGE (L-KO), Sept. 27.—Dan Russell gets busy bringing out laughs from the very start of this two-reel number. He has some wonderfully funny facial contortions and puts over small business in a laughable way. He first appears as a hobo, who saves a doctor's canine from injury by an automobile. The doctor rewards him by taking him home, where Dan outrages his hospitality by becoming too friendly with the doctor's wife. Dan is injured in the auto chase and the surgeon gets opportunity for revenge in the hospital. A riot ensues in the latter institution. This contains a lot of fun of the comic sort and is free from offense. A good laugh producer.

THE LIE SUBLIME (Big U), Sept. 28.—A two-reel number, by Harry Ditmar, featuring King Baggot, Edna Hunter and others. The opening has a pleasing surprise in it, merely serving to introduce the hero as a character act playing a part. The main story is then taken up. This construction is a little awkward and it is some time before the real plot gets into action. It is interesting when it comes, however. The hero goes back after many years to wed the girl he asked to wait for him, in spite of the fact that he no longer loves her. This is pleasing in spite of some minor faults.

A JUNGLE HERO (Bison), Sept. 30.—A two-reel wild animal story, well constructed and containing much of interest. The first reel deals with English social life, and the hero sacrifices the use of one arm in saving the girl from an enraged lion at the zoo. The story moves to the African jungle and all of the second reel is given up to a picturesque war with the natives and thrilling encounters with wild beasts. A good offering of the type.

World-Pictures.

THE DARK SILENCE, Sept. 25.—Clara Kimball Young is the star of this five-reel photoplay, the scenario having been made from a story by Paul West. Its heroine is an American girl who is studying art in Paris. She is married to a wealthy young Englishman, who is blinded during the present great war. The picture is full of life and color. A review may be found in another column of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

HER SURRENDER (Ivan), Oct. —.—A five-part production asserting that love can be transfused. The picture is not one to be highly recommended, partly on account of the unreasonableness of its subject, and partly because the story on which it is based is badly constructed. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

"Grant" Starts October 20

Kalem Announces Release Date for New Series of Newspaper Stories—Larkin Thrills Jacksonville.

GRANT, POLICE REPORTER," the new Kalem series of stories of newspaper life, will start its career on Friday, October 20. Following that date a one-reel episode, telling a complete story, will be issued every Friday through General Film offices as a regular program release. Advance reports from the exchange managers indicate that the Robert Welles Ritchie series will start off with a list of bookings placing it among the most successful productions ever released by Kalem.

George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby, the featured stars in the new series, have just completed the initial episode, which is entitled "The Code Letter," and are beginning work on "The Missing Heiress," second in the series. Incidentally Daredevil Larkin has started on his task of giving Jacksonville a weekly thrill in the staging of the different episodes.

One of the thrilling scenes in "The Code Letter" calls on Larkin to let himself down, hand over hand, on the rope of a painter's scaffold from the roof of a skyscraper. When he is in mid-air, the other rope supporting the scaffold is cut by an accomplice of the man he is pursuing and Larkin swings through the air, escaping death by grabbing the rail of a fire ladder at the end of his swing.

The scene was staged in the heart of the business section of Jacksonville and caused a temporary suspension of business activity.

IVAN FEATURES FOR IMMEDIATE PRODUCTION.

As soon as negotiations are closed with several noted screen and stage stars to enact principal roles in the two next Ivan plays, entitled "The Sex Lure" and the special production, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," work on these features will commence. "The Sex Lure" will be directed by Edmund Lawrence, who has been specially engaged to direct feature productions for the Ivan company.

Ivan Abramson has completed the working scenario, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," on which he has been engaged for the last six months, and all parts in the story will be enacted by an all-star cast under Mr. Abramson's direction.

The Ivan studio in New York has been a scene of much activity in the erection of special sets required to properly stage the various elaborate exterior scenes required by the scenarios in these next Ivan plays.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter," when completed, will not be released as a regular production, but will be exploited as a special production, and all sorts of exhibitor publicity aids and newspaper advertising will be used to interest the public at large in attending houses at which this feature may be shown.

The Los Angeles studio of the Ivan Company, under the direction of W. A. Norton, is at present busily engaged in commencing work on a special feature to be released by the Ivan film exchanges. No title for the drama to be produced by the Los Angeles studios has as yet been announced, but it is by a well-known dramatist and will be produced by a celebrated director, with an exceptional cast.

It is the intention of the Ivan Film Productions to have enough features on hand of exceptional merit, which will enable them to cope successfully with any features on the market to-day.

PATHE'S "SAINT, DEVIL AND WOMAN."

Several of the most famous and popular novels in the English language are based upon the theme of dual personality. Stevenson's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" is an example that will occur to the mind of every one. Du Maurier made himself celebrated by "Trilby," the story of a beautiful girl struggling under the hypontic influence of an evil man. Now Pathe, in "Saint, Devil and Woman," has a Gold Rooster play based upon dual personality, combined with the hypnotic touch that added so much to the fascination of Trilby. Such a story is bound to be unusual and offers many opportunities for dramatic effect.

Thanhouser produced the picture from a scenario by Phillip Lonergan, and Frederick Sullivan, nephew of Sir Arthur Sullivan, directed it. Florenee La Badie, who gives frequent and convincing proof of her talent, is the star, and the notable supporting cast includes Wayne Arey, Ethyl Cook and Hector Dion.

Miss La Badie plays the part of Florenee Stanton, a young girl, fresh from the sheltered life of a convent school. Wayne Arey, is a philanthropic, self-saerifieing young doctor. There are many big seenes, among them the realistic battle between striking trainmen and hired guards. The element of suspense in the play is well sustained, and the audience is in doubt to the last moment as to whether good or evil will conquer. The picture will be released September 24.

"REEL LIFE" NO. 21 (Gaumont).

By the merest chance two subjects in Gaumont's single-reel, "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film, show the irony of life. An important seetion of the reel is devoted to explaining how the lines in the palm of the hand betray character and foretell the future. This is followed with the picture of a man whose arms have been cut off at the elbow, yet is able to earn a living by faney writing. The third section of the reel is the reproduction of a baseball game played during the world's series last season by Boston and Philadelphia.

Palmistry is held to be an exact science by those who have made it a study. The pictures for "Reel Life" were made in France by the Gaumont company under the direction of the ablest palmist of Paris. They show the variations of the head, heart and life lines, and also tell how to judge charaeter by the contour of the hand and fingers. It is a fascinating subjeet, and the Gaumont pictures are certain to create a great deal of interest among spectators.

The section of film showing the ball game reproduced by marionettes is called "Why Pay a Dollar to See a Ball Game?" It is produced not only for its interest as a novelty, but also to gauge public interest in film of this character. If there is a demand for more ball games with the actual reproduction of plays by automatons, the Gaumont Company will give the world's series of 1916 immediately after the games have been played.

FOREIGN MARKET BUOYANT.

As an indication of the strength of the foreign market on features, the Rialto Film Corporation reports that the European rights to their last feature release "The House of Mirrors" were purchased by Simonds, of London, and that in the past week the Australian rights were purchased by A. P. Hellmrich and the New Zealand rights by Vogel & Howells.

Several offers have been received for the South and Central American rights to this production, in which Frank Mills, formerly of the Triangle forces, is starred, and it is likely that one of them will be accepted shortly.

This is considered rather a record in view of the fact that the production, controlled in the United States, Canada and Mexico by the Mutual Film Corporation, released the production just five weeks ago. The closing of the South and Central American rights will have disposed of the feature for the entire world under four separate eontracts.

The Rialto Film Corporation is now at work on a massive production which in all probability will be released in eight reels. The name of this forthcoming release has not as yet been determined. It is from a story by James Ormont, the seenario by Dr. Harris. The method of distribution has also not as yet been determined upon.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"The Power of the Cross" (Selig)

"The Power of the Cross" Is an Unusual Drama to Be Released Under the Diamond S Trade Mark, in Regular Service of General Film Co., on Monday, Sept. 25.

The story is strictly out of the ordinary, telling as it does, of a beautiful young girl, who really in love with the man she has known from childhood, sacrifices her happiness for gold.

Scene from "The Power of the Cross" (Selig).

In other words, she weds a wealthy broker, realizing too late, that riches are not everything in this world, and that love is worth more than all the wealth in the world. Finally her husband dies, and then it is that the girl once more seeks the man whom she always has loved. However, happiness has fled never to be regained. The man whom she once loved and who loved her, has engaged in work for the Master, renouncing all the world. When he again encounters the girl he has always loved, and hears her pleading for him to return to her, he, with firm resolve, decides upon a higher sacrifice, for the power of the Cross is worth more than the power of Love.

FLORENCE LA BADIE IN "THE PILLORY."

A smashing blow at bigotry is delivered in "The Pillory," a Thanhouser feature starring Florence La Badie, which will be released through the Pathe exchanges on October 8. The story, by Philip Lonergan, tells of the injustice resulting from the fanatical acts of an intolerant woman who, with the literal words of the Bible as her authority, casts stones at an unfortunate woman who is trying to atone for a sin.

The feature gets its title from a denunciation scene, splendidly staged by Director Frederic Sullivan, in which a narrow-minded woman places one who has sinned upon a social pillory as cruel as the pillory of the middle ages.

Florence La Badie is a country girl who battles staunchly for her unfortunate mother, played by Marie Shotwell. Others in the cast are Ethyle Cooke, Marie Haynes, George Marlo and Yale Benner.

GAUMONT BULLETIN OF SINGLE-REEL RELEASES.

The efforts of both exhibitors and societies, schools and clubs to secure entertaining motion pictures, other than photo-dramas, will be made easier by the weekly publication of a bulletin of Gaumont single-reel releases. Hitherto it has been necessary for the person making up a special program to search through back files to find suitable material out of the three Gaumont single-reel releases. Now all information about these pictures may be had by simply referring to the Gaumont bulletins.

The preliminary bulletin, containing a list of subjects in "See America First" and "Reel Life," has already been issued. The weekly bulletin will give the contents of these current single reels and also of the current issue of the Mutual Weekly. By keeping a file of these bulletins finding any subject that has been released by Gaumont in Mutual service will be only a matter of a few minutes.

The Gaumont bulletins are being supplied Mutual branch managers, and through the branches they are distributed to exhibitors and others interested in film of this nature. With these three reels each week the Gaumont Company has the special field well covered. "See America First," the scenic, has also upon the same reel a humorous Gaumont Kartoon Komic, animated by Harry Palmer. "Reel Life," known as the Mutual magazine in film, bears the same relation to a high-class magazine that the Mutual Weekly bears to a newspaper.

"AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS" (Herald).

At last, Jules Verne's world famed novel "Around the World in Eighty Days," in pictures. Six delightful reels of thrilling adventure, depicting many scenes of great oddity, intermingled with which a clever story has been aptly woven, provides an evenings entertainment of rare charm. In rapid succession there are visited London, Suez, Alexandria, Hong Kong, Yokohama, Vancouver, New York, Cherburg, and back again to London.

The Herald Film Corporation will release "Around the World in Eighty Days" during the early part of October, thereby enabling the general public to take the same trip that it took Phileas Fogg eighty days to make, in eighty minutes.

ARKUCKLE IN NEW COMEDY.

Roscoe Arbuckle, the popular Triangle-Keystone star, who is known to moving picture fans the world over as "Fatty" Arbuckle, is just completing a new Keystone comedy over at the Fort Lee Studio, which promises to outshine anything that has ever been attempted in the way of screen comedy. Certainly so far as elaborateness in settings are concerned, it will be in a class all by itself.

For example, recently the entire studio was transformed into the interior of a theater, and the setting for the stage, proscenium arch and all, was the equal of most any moving picture theater in New York. Beside an orchestra of twenty pieces partially concealed behind banks of palms at one side of the stage, a stream of running water poured down a paper mache mountain on the opposite side of the stage.

By no means the least remarkable feature of the set which was built, incidentally in such a way that it can be transported around the country without any trouble, was the fact that the decorating was all done by means of wall paper, not an artist being employed on the set at any time.

Close to four hundred extra people were employed for the scenes taken in the theater, and that too, comes close if it doesn't actually establish a record for the number of extra people employed in the making of a comedy.

The new Keystone feature will be completed within a few days, and will be the last to be made in the East by Mr. Arbuckle before returning to the Pacific Coast, where he will continue to make Keystone comedies in the studio at Los Angeles.

"THE RUMMY" (Fine Arts).

Wilfred Lucas, Triangle-Fine Arts star, has come to the front rapidly during the past few months as one of the real big figures of the motion picture world. In "Hell-to-Pay Austin," his remarkable interpretation of the westerner won him a host of friends, and now in "The Rummy" he more than lives up to the predictions made for him.

The story is that of a newspaper man who temporarily loses his grip on himself through the shock of the supposed unfaithfulness of his wife. Letting go all restraint he fairly plunges down the hill of dissipation, and finds himself in a brief two years the scoffed at "rummy." His rehabilitation is as rapid, and the entire story gives Mr. Lucas rare opportunities for some exceedingly forceful and clever acting.

In the leading feminine role supporting Mr. Lucas is Pauline Starke, one of the youngest members of the Fine Arts company, but an actress of undoubted ability. Her characterization of the girl in the story is human and exceedingly convincing.

"The Rummy" is particularly noteworthy for its faithful representation of conditions that actually exist in a newspaper office. Unlike most attempts at a dramatic representation of newspaper life, it rings true throughout. Not a little credit for this realistic touch must go to both Mr. Lucas and to Paul Powell, who directed the taking of the picture. Both in former years were active newspaper men, and their early training guided them in this effort.

"The Rummy" is as strong and well told a story as has been seen on the screen in many days, and is certain to win no small amount of praise from the most captious of all critics—the active newspaper men who view with suspicion any attempt at reproducing the innermost secrets of their profession.

"THE GRIP OF EVIL" NO. 11, A STRONG RELEASE.

Henry Ford's belief that munition makers are responsible for war propaganda, has resulted in a million-dollar suit against him. In "Mammon and Moloch," the eleventh episode of Pathe's "The Grip of Evil," released the week of September 24, the Balboa Company has produced a powreful picture, dealing with the attempts of an unscrupulous ammunition maker to bring about intervention in Mexico.

John Burton has invested in an ammunition plant, which, for a long time has paid no dividends. The manager of the company foments trouble with a rebel leader, who attacks United States border towns with the guns furnished him by Rogers.

The latter, seeing an opportunity for more business, persuades Burton to work for intervention. Burton does so and is helped in the movement by Madge Kerr, whose husband had been killed by the bandit.

Burton organizes a company and goes to the front with it. Madge is also sent to the front as a newspaper correspondent. She is captured by the bandit chief. Burton rescues her and captures the rebel. Rogers pleads with Burton to let him escape, saying that he still owes the firm for the rifles and ammunition.

When Madge shows Burton a contract with Rogers, by the terms of which she has paid for her services, Burton is convinced that Humanity is in the Grip of Evil, but decides to continue his search.

INTERNATIONAL GETS CURTIS SCENICS.

The International Film Service, Inc., which recently secured the famous Edward S. Curtis scenics, has decided to present these wonderful pictures as a part of its split releases. The first of the series will be shown on September 25 and will continue each week thereafter until all have been shown.

The initial offering will be "The Yellowstone National Park, the World's Wonderland," which will be divided into a subseries of four pictures, one showing the mammoth hot springs, one the geysers, one the Yellowstone Lake and mud crater, and the last the wild animals of the Yellowstone. These will be followed with two pictures in the Yosemite Valley, two on the British Columbia Indians, and two on Niagara Falls. The pictures are declared by those who have seen them to be the most remarkable and interesting scenics ever shown.

SELECT CAST IN "A DIPLOMATIC ROMANCE."

A cast of favorite players has been engaged to support Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the Metro-Quality wonderplay, "A Diplomatic Romance," which Mr. Bushman himself is directing, with the assistance of P. Thad Volkman. Prominent among these is Helen Dunbar, the sweetest "mother" known to the screen. Another important player is Henri Bergman, well known to Metro patrons. William Davidson has an excellent part, and another favorite actor is William Mandeville.

Social and diplomatic circles are represented in "A Diplomatic Romance," and the cast has been chosen from among the players who will visualize those types.

RELEASE DATE SET FOR "PRUDENCE."

"Prudence, the Pirate," starring Gladys Hulette, will be the second Thanhouser feature released through the Pathe exchanges in October. October 22 is the date upon which "Prudence" will have her first public showing. Florence La Badie in "The Pillory" is to be Thanhouser's first October release.

The same stuff that made "The Shine Girl" one of Thanhouser's greatest successes is responsible for "Prudence, the Pirate." The star is Gladys Hulette; the director, William Parke, and the author, Agnes C. Johnston.

The feature is a comedy drama about a little girl with piratical ambitions who sets sail in the good ship "Bucket of Blood" and captures a houseboat. An exciting fire aboard the "Bucket of Blood" is one of the features.

In the supporting cast is Flora Finch, famous for her long engagement with the late John Bunny. Others in the play are Riley Chamberlin, Barnett Parker and William Parke, Jr.

"THE SOCIAL BUCCANEER" (Bluebird).

Through an arrangement with the Bobbs, Merrill Co., publisher of Frederic S. Isham's novels, Bluebird will introduce "The Social Buccaneer" as the first of a series of features to be made from the Isham novels. The immediate benefit following the enormous sales of the Isham stories will mean dollars to the exhibitor, and for those who have not read the narrative, the value of the play will of itself be satisfying because of Bluebird's method of production and casting.

"The Social Buccaneers" will have J. Warren Kerrigan and Louise Lovely in the leading roles, these two stars of earlier Bluebirds now combining their talents in acting while lending their names as advertising features in conjunction with the other publicity advantages the play possesses. In the supporting company will be Harry Carter, Hayward Mack, Mare Robbins and Maude George.

Jack Conway, who has been J. Warren Kerrigan's director in previous releases, has produced "The Social Buccaneers" from Fred Mynton's scenario. Mr. Conway will be the third director Miss Lovely has worked for since she came to America from Australia and joined Bluebird at the time the program was inaugurated. While unquestionably living up to her name, Miss Lovely has constantly improved in acting, and as Kerrigan's leading lady is said to do the best work she has ever registered upon the screen.

This will give a Knickerbocker production on the General Film Service every week beginning with the releases in October.

The first of the new features will be "The Better Instinct," featuring Jackie Saunders, the versatile Balboa star, assisted by Frank Mayo and Lillian West, directed by Bertram Bracken under the supervision of H. M. & E. D. Horkheimer.

Lucy Manley, a sweatshop worker portrayed by Jackie Saunders, is tempted by Maric, her fellow worker, to choose an easier path to life's pleasures. The girls attend a dance where they are followed by two cadets. Ted Gordon, a drunken derelict, saves Lucy in time. Release date is set for October 6.

The second Knickerbocker release of the month will be "From the Deeps," with Joyce Moore and Daniel Gilfether, and will be in three parts. Release date is October 13.

GAUMONT'S "SEE AMERICA FIRST" NO. 55.

Because of its proximity to so many centers of population, the Adirondack mountains are one of the most popular playgrounds of the American people. The fact that it is visited annually by so many thousands and is known by reputation to millions, makes a particularly happy selection for "See America First," the Gaumont single-reel scenic. This will be released as No. 55, September 27.

A special trip was made to the Adirondacks by the Gaumont cameraman for this series, Edward Guetlein. He has secured some remarkably effective pictures of Lake Placid, Paul Smith's and Saranac. The advantages of the Adirondacks lie in their combination of natural charm and comforts of civilization. One can enjoy life at a palatial hotel, lodge or club reached by train, automobile or boat, and then by going a few miles find himself in a comparative wilderness. These comparative scenes have been transferred to the screen to give spectators an idea of the unlimited and wonderful possibilities of this region.

On the same reel there is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic animated by Harry Palmer. It is called "Pigs," and relates in humorous fashion to some of the antics of porcine animals as transferred to the screen by a humorist with the pen.

"TIMOTHY DOBBS—THAT'S ME" (Universal).

The knife is a noble instrument. With its aid man has fought his way up from savagery to his present high state of kultur and civilization. On the end of a bayonet a knife serves some good purpose, but to eat peas with it is to demean its purpose in the scheme of things.

Here we have Robert Milash attempting to appease his appetite with a can of peas. He is having a hard time balancing the peas on the slippery blade, and Carter De Haven is vastly alarmed for fear that Robert will further enlarge the monstrous gash in his face which Milash calls his mouth. if the catastrophe can be averted in any way Carter De Haven may be depended upon to forestall it, for Carter is the greatest little fixer outside the legal department of the Universal.

The thrilling scene takes place in the eighth two-reel episode of the Universal "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" serial, which was written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Wallace Beery. Besides De Haven and Robert Milash, Marcia Moore and Dan Duffy also play important roles.

FIRST SOTHERN RELEASE SEPTEMBER 25.

If there is any exhibitor who is not familiar with the title of E. H. Sothern's first Vitagraph release, then he has not read his trade papers carefully. "The Chattel," in which Mr. Sothern is supported by Peggy Hyland, the famous English beauty, will be given its first run by exhibitors on September 25th. It is a powerful dramatic offering thoroughly worthy of Mr. Sothern's abilities as an actor and should prove a box office magnet wherever exhibited.

"The Chattel" is an original story written by Paul West to fit Mr. Sothern's personality and dramatic style of acting. It was produced by Frederick Thomson with Peggy Hyland, Rose Tapley, Charles Kent and John L. Taylor in the supporting cast.

The stock exchange scenes of "The Chattel" are correct to the minutest detail, more than 300 people being engaged for these scenes alone. Massive interior settings and picturesque exterior locations set this picture apart from the ordinary film production in a way that must be evident to everyone who sees it.

HERALD GETS "PRIMA DONNA'S HUSBAND."

The Herald Film Corporation is pleased to announce the acquisition of "The Prima Donna's Husband," starring Holbrook Blinn, Clara Whippel and Kathryn Browne Decker, produced by the Triumph Film Corporation, under the personal direction of Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden for the entire state of New York and Northern Jersey.

"The Prima Donna's Husband" was shown some time ago to a specially invited audience, including the press of New York. Journalistic and trade paper comments were unanimous in their approbation. Reviewers and critics vied with each other in lauding the picture. Booking arrangements can be made immediately.

"AMERICAN BOYS IN EUROPEAN WAR."

Recently the Triangle gave a private showing of "Our American Boys in the European War." Among the invited guests were several prominent members of the New York Stock Exchange. Enthused by the absolutely epoch making heroism of the young American drivers as shown on the screen, they immediately determined to give expression to their admiration. Quickly forming a committee they got into action and raised thirty thousand dollars. With this sum they bought and equipped twenty ambulances to present to the American Ambulance Field Service. These were shipped on the Touraine, and will soon be "rolling" on the Verdun battle front, manned by the young and skillful drivers of the Field Service.

Possibly nowhere in the world, at the present moment, is there a unit so fully in the public eye as the American Field Service operating on the firing line. War correspondents go abroad to write about the war, and instead send back copy devoted to the thrilling deeds of the ambulance drivers. In consequence every Sunday supplement and current magazine have columns of vivid stories of "Our American Boys in the European War."

Recently A. Platt Andrew, head of the Field Service, took our own Will Irwin out on the firing line with him. Mr. Irwin lived with young drivers, sharing their hardships, and perilous night trips, from trench to hospital. Now he is telling millions of readers the story of the young Americans, the moving picture cameras caught for the Triangle Film.

The showings at the various summer resorts are in full swing. The most brilliant of these this week occurred at Bar Harbor on the 6th inst. A long list of society leaders insured social success, and as the house was sold out by subscription the financial returns were splendid.

From all over the country patriotic societies and clubs are arranging to sponsor the picture in various communities. The first public showing in New York City will be on October 24 at the Rialto theater, which Mr. Rothapfel has donated for the occasion. Plans are rapidly maturing to insure a record-breaking success.

"DULCIE'S ADVENTURE."

"Dulcie's Adventure," the second of the Mary Miles Minter features produced by the American Film Co., Inc., for release through the Mutual, has been completed, and will go out to the public on October 2. It is said by those who have seen preliminary screenings of this picture that never has the charming little star been so fetching as she is in the role of the pathetic little southern girl, "Dulcie."

James Kirkwood, the director, may be depended upon, of course, to get the most that can be gotten out of a picture. "Dulcie's Adventure," his first Mutual offering, is no exception, and "Dulcie's Adventure" bears all the earmarks of the Kirkwood handling.

The most painstaking care has been given to the costuming and the setting of the picture. Whether in the garments of a poor lonesome little white girl, not allowed to play with the neighboring pickaninnies or the "poor white trash," in the antiquated hoop skirts deemed fashionable by her Aunt Netta, or in her gorgeous imported white satin wedding gown which crowns the picture, Mary Miles Minter is perfectly gowned. The atmosphere of "Dulcie's" prim southern home, then of the gay and dissolute social life among the pleasure-seeking millionaires in the colony in California gives a contrast of setting to the picture, which Mr. Kirkwood has made the most of.

There are many touching scenes, including both the little "Dulcie" at home in her sunny southland, and the sad little "Dulcie" away on her enforced adventure in search of a millionaire. There are the stolen games with the white children of the neighborhood, only to be discovered and reprimanded by the two aunts; there is the scene where "Dulcie" must return the pet squirrel given her by the grocer's boy and her only companion; there are the plans for her enforced marriage to a man much older than herself. But the ending, when her grocer's boy comes and claims her and takes her back again to the south, makes up for all that.

"Dulcie's Adventure" is permeated by the charm of the little star. It promises even to surpass the popularity of "Youth's Endearing Charm," her first Mutual release.

"WITH THE SPIRITS' HELP" (Universal).

"Is the spirit of Wamba, the Wombat, present tonight?" Scene: Any American home on a Sunday night. Period: 1865-1896, or in certain districts, September, 1916.

See the professor of spiritualism in the background. He is now in the throes of his incantation. He is whispering to himself:

"Hocus, pocus, mumbo jumbo, abracadabra, hoodoo, voodoo, swastika." These few electrobiological words never fail to produce Wamba, the Wombat, the professor's favorite "guide."

The professor is trying to make an impression on Emily (Priscilla Dean), the local banker's daughter. Jed (Eddie Lyons), who is cautioning Emily not to fear, is of the opinion that the professor is a piece of Ephesian cheese. He proves it in "With the Spirit's Help," on the night of the big seance, when he rises from a flour barrel in ghostly attire.

"With the Spirit's Help" is one of those inimitable light comedies in which Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean are funnier than ten dozen $500,000 comedians of the slapstick variety. The picture was scenaroized and produced from Virginia Kirkley's story by Universal Director L. W. Chaudet.

WILL HANDLE UNITY FEATURES IN MICHIGAN.

George Lichtenstein, the head of the Koppin Film Company, a well-known distributing exchange of Detroit, Michigan, was in New York the past week and arranged with the Unity Sales Corporation to handle its features and comedy releases for his territory. The Koppin Film Company, one of the best known of the independent exchanges throughout the country, have handled many big features throughout the Northwest.

While in New York, Mr. Lichtenstein saw "The Marriage Bond" and "The Lottery Man" and the first two of the "Tweedledum" comedies, all to be released on the Unity program, and immediately completed arrangements to distribute these features in the State of Michigan. While here, Mr. Lichtenstein will also book other big features for his company and expects to take all the Unity program releases which are put out in future.

"LESS THAN DUST" COMPLETED.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation announces that final scenes were made last week for "Less Than the Dust," the first of the new series of Mary Pickford productions. Cutting and assembling will begin at once and work on a preliminary shipment of eighty prints will be rushed rapidly, as this large number will be required by the sixteen exchanges in the United States and Canada for release in October.

Advance information reveals the fact that a complete replica of a city of modern India was erected on Long Island for the filming of the big spectacular scenes for Hector Turnbull's story. Temporary barracks and commissary were constructed for the hundreds of extras who were used for several weeks in the large ensembles by the director, John Emerson, and his staff. The cast numbers nearly sixty principals.

Miss Pickford promises the addition of a brand new characterization to the extensive gallery of successful roles which she has created in picture plays. She appears as a mischievous castaway, who rises above the degraded condition in which the superstitious natives of India would place her. Because her parentage is unknown they scorn and ridicule her and try to make her feel that in reality she is "less than the dust." But with the children of the village she is a great favorite and the scenes in which she appears with them show her in all the charming and adorable traits that have built up such a following for her. The highly spectacular scenes and the situations which demand a keen strain of pathos display her versatility in other directions, and all through the Indian uprising and the denouement in the desert where she has fled to death because a jealous woman has spoiled her love affair, she reveals a capacity for characterization that she confidently hopes will make Rahda in "Less Than the Dust" received as her best and most popular heroine up to the present time.

"TWIN FATES" (Essanay).

Here is a film constructed on a decidedly original theme, which will furnish ideal entertainment, even thrills, to any group of picture patrons. Of course, its predominating feature is the story itself, but a capable cast has accentuated this fortunate fundamental, and the combination makes a play of exceptional merit. It is one of the few three-act pieces written by H. S. Sheldon, the playwright. Mr. Sheldon is usually occupied with dramatizing strong stories for stage and film and producing at regular intervals an original hit for both. But he wanted to write what he believed an ideal three-act film. He had the idea and he wrote the scenario. Harry Beaumont directed the picture. Marguerite Clayton and Sidney Ainsworth appear in the leading roles. As the title suggests, it is a story in which the fates of two men run on parallel lines. When one man takes the identity of another something interesting is bound to happen, and in this play it does. An unexpected twist at the end adds a thrill to the already entertaining story. "Twin Fates" is recommended as a three-act drama of unusual strength.

Scene from "The Fates" (Essanay).

CHANGE IN SELIG BOOKING.

A change has been made in the Selig bookings in General Film service for the week of October 9th. "Converging Paths," a two-reel drama of unusual worth, will be released on Monday, October 9. This film will take the place of "The Temptation of Adam," formerly announced for October 9th. On Saturday, October 14th, the Western drama, "A Mistake In Rustlers," will be released. It is an exciting drama of the West, with Tom Mix in the leading role.

Bennett A. Molter, formerly assistant to Director Henry Otto, is at present assisting W. Christy Cabanne in the production of a five-reel feature to be released by Metro. Mr. Cabanne was signed up in Hollywood, Cal., by Fred J. Balshofer, to produce a fourteen-episode serial featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

Lillian Gish will soon be seen on the Triangle program in "Diana of the Follies," considered her best Fine Arts vehicle to date. She characterizes the part of a typical show girl with the usual amount of temperament and sentiment. Sam de Grasse is her leading man, and others in the cast embrace Lillian Langdon, Wilbur Higby, Adele Clifton, George Wilson, Edward Warren, Howard Gaye and A. D. Sears.

To Lift Plague Ban.

NEWARK, N. J.—Health Officer Charles V. Craster has mailed notices to the owners of the local theaters and moving picture places that the embargo upon the admission of children under sixte[illegible] of age has been modified to permit all children over twelve to attend the performances. This is the first breach in the line of fortifications built up by the Board of Health to safeguard the citizens from infantile paralysis.

The action of Health Officer Craster in removing the restrictions is the result of a visit paid to Mayor Thomas L. Raymond by a committee of the Newark Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, consisting of Joseph Stern, president, Philip Bornstein, secretary, and Herman Austerman.

Verdun Films Free for Red Cross

National Press Club in Washington Sees Twelve Reels of Thompson's War Films —Offered Free by Leslie's to Organizations Where Benefits Go to American Red Cross—What Is in the Pictures.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth Street, N. E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Donald Thompson, the first American war photographer to reach the fighting line at Verdun, at the National Press Club, showed twelve reels of war pictures, which, after official inspection, were purchased by the Army War College. These films, which pictured the actual explosion of shells in a full-manned trench, bore the official stamp of the French war office and were the "closest" battle pictures ever shown in America. Mr. Thompson, in the name of Leslie's Weekly, offered the use of this film gratis to any organization that would agree to donate the benefits to the American Red Cross.

Donald Thompson, whose bandaged head, as well as his first trench views, testified that he was nearer the battle front than most photographers, acted with the sanction of General Joffre as the official war photographer before Verdun. Mr. Thompson, who is the war correspondent of Leslie's Weekly, has been on every European battle front with the exception of Roumania, and his portrayal of "the real story of the war" was such that Major Moses of the General Staff, requested the privilege of purchasing his films for the United States Army War College.

As the films were shown, Mr. Thompson explained their significance and described the attitude of the men on the battle front, together with the peculiar means used to bring them to the condition where they were able to face the terrible ordeal of the charge.

"Men are kept in camps," said Mr. Thompson, "until the monotony of camp life makes them ready for everything that means change. Segregated from any diversion, they go through a monotonous drill and are given no entertainment or diversion of any kind. They see their comrades marching by and it is carefully explained that these men have done their 'bit' and are going home on a furlough. Then for days the drill continues, always within earshot of the booming guns. Finally, when they are ready to do anything rather than stay where they are, the order comes to advance. They are hurried to the first line trenches, and before they have time to think of danger or fear, comes the order 'charge,' then battle madness does the rest."

Mr. Thompson declared that this was universally true for all the troops on the battle front and that all were only too anxious to "do their bit" and get home.

Shells that tore the earth from beneath the very nose of the camera, scurrying men who sought shelter from the terrible death doled out by the "busy Berthas," and finally, the awful tragedy of an explosion in a fully manned trench, were actually pictured on the screen.

The audacity of the photographer, which enabled him to register this scene with his camera also cost him the wound which ended the picture and resulted in his being invalided home to recover. As he spoke, his head was bandaged. After the exhibition of the pictures, the Department of the Interior requested the use of the film, which was granted by Leslie's, and the Army and Navy League also registered their official desire to make use of the picture.

A chest full of battlefield relics, including German helmets, lances of the Black Hussars, officers' swords, gas masks and hand grenades, were exhibited and their uses explained by Mr. Thompson.

Interesting Building Rumor.

Washington, D. C.—During the past few weeks there has been considerable talk concerning big houses to be erected in this city in the near and the distant future, but thus far nothing has been done along these lines. Plans have been drawn for a large motion picture theater, involving several thousand dollars, on what is known as the Willard estate on F street. Another of the projected theaters is for F street, near Ninth street, while a third contemplates the rebuilding of the present Penn Gardens, on Pennsylvania avenue, at 21st street. It is reported that a Mr. S. Edelman, of New York, is in town in connection with the latter proposal, and that when the work is completed the house will have a seating capacity of 2,700, making it the largest in the City of Washington. It is stated that the plans call for the building of the new theater right over the present house, without any interruption to busines, and when the work is completed the latter is to be torn down. The airdome adjoining Penn Gardens would be included in the project, the new theater covering this as well as the present house. An effort will be made to secure a full story on this project in time for the next issue of the Moving Picture World, for it is believed that Mr. Edelman's plans will be highly interesting.

R. D. Craver on Way to New York.

Washington, D. C.—Among the visitors of the past week were R. D. Craver, of Charlotte, N. C., where he is at the head of the Craver Film & Supply Company, who is on his way to New York to contract for a number of state's right propositions for this territory. While here he obtained a number of bookings for films which he already has. Mr. Craver reports business improving in his section, and just prior to leaving he received an order for a Rembush silver fiber screen and two Motiograph projecting machines, which are to be installed in the new theater that is being erected in Greensboro, N. C., on the site of the McAdoo Hotel, which was destroyed by fire last year. This house will be ready for opening about the middle of October.

H. E. Flaherty Comes to Local World Film.

Washington, D. C.—H. E. Flaherty is the latest arrival at the local office of the World Film Corporation, of 1004 E street, northwest. Mr. Flaherty, who for a short time was connected with the New York office, comes to Washington to act as a representative of this branch and will cover the Capital and the Baltimore section. He has been making the rounds and getting acquainted with the local trade.

Manager Whitaker of Artcraft Busy

New Local Offices Not Quite Complete But Contracts are Not Waiting on the Painters and Carpenters.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—V. P. Whitaker, who has just opened the offices of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, at 1322 F street, northwest, is right on the job making contracts for future releases of the new company. He is, however, working under some little difficulty, for the work of getting the exchange ready is by no means completed, and there is the sound of hammering and sawing, which seems to predict the coming of a very attractive place when all of the work is completed.

The new exchange is quartered on the second floor of the building. Eventually the entire floor is to be taken over, but at present Mr. Whitaker must content himself with a single large room at the head of the stairway. This contains a partition, which sets off a part of the space for a reception room, the balance being the manager's private domain. There is another room to which entrance may be had from the private office, the reception section and the outside hall, which is to be used as a film and paper room, while the third room is also to be used for storage and office purposes, this room being opposite the one previously referred to.

The manager's office is attractively fitted out with quartered oak furniture, and when completed the exchange will be one of the neatest in the city.

The manager himself, V. P. Whitaker, is well known among the exhibitors of this section, and is an old-time showman with an experience of twenty-two years. He started in with the L. Lawrence Weber Company, and was located in Atlanta, Ga. He remained with this company for about fourteen years, when he joined Z. Poli, taking charge of his houses first in Waterbury, then in Hartford, Conn. In Syracuse, N. Y., he was manager of the Shubert house.

About two years ago Mr. Whitaker came to Washington, joining George Mann, who was opening up the office of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, becoming assistant manager of the exchange. He left this company to accept his present position. While with Paramount, he covered the entire local territory and made the acquaintance of large numbers of exhibitors, all of whom are now wishing him the best of success in his new endeavors.

H. F. Lavelle Going to Clarksburg U Office.

Washington, D. C.—Henry F. Lavalle, formerly manager of the Washington Film Exchange, stopped over in Washington, last week, visiting his brother, who now has charge of this exchange. He is on his way to Clarksburg, W. Va., to become associated with the Universal Film Company's exchange in that place, of which the brother, now in this city during the absence of J. Leo Yates, who is still very ill, is manager. The Washington correspondent regrets that there should be such a mixup between two brothers, and that a diagram should be required to tell who's who and why, but he did his best and then, both are on the same payroll, so why worry.

Baltimore News Letter

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Hope Plague Ban May Be Lifted.

BALTIMORE, MD.—It is like balm to the wounded to know that there is a hope that by the time this is published that the health regulations which have recently been issued by the Health Department, one of them being the prohibiting of children under thirteen years of age from attending theaters, will be abolished and that business will then again be able to resume normal conditions. What few cases of the infantile paralysis plague there have been in Baltimore, have fallen off rapidly for the past several weeks, and Health Commissioner Dr. John D. Blake's opinion is that he now holds no fear of an epidemic in this city, for the situation is well in hand. He will not lift the bans too quickly, however, owing to the uncertainty as to whether it will grow warmer or not. It has been rumored, however, that September 20 has been set as the date for the rescinding of the bans. On Tuesday, September 12, Frederick Clement Weber, president of the Lord Valvert Theater Company, and Paul J. Prodoehl, treasurer of the same company, representing several motion picture theaters called on the Health Department to ask whether the exhibitors could hope for a lifting of the bans in the near future. It was stated by Mr. Weber that forty-one motion picture theaters had been obliged to close on account of this edict.

Annapolis Health Ban Lifted.

The health edict in Annapolis, Md., barring children under sixteen years of age from attending moving picture theaters in this city, due to the infantile paralysis plague, was rescinded by Mayor Stranne on Saturday, September 9, since a clean bill of health was given to the city. The attendance of the theaters has again resumed its normal condition and the children are delighted with the news.

Twilight Theater Reopens.

Pittsburgh Selznick Office

Charles F. Schwerin Leaves World Film Office to Take Charge of the New Selznick Features in This Territory—Temporary Office in Exchange Building—Leo F. Levison Now at World Film Helm.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa

PITTSBURGH, PA. Considerable surprise is expressed in local film circles over the announcement just issued of the resignation of Charles F. Schwerin from the managership of the Pittsburgh branch of the World Film to take charge of the office of the Louis J. Selznick Corporation, which he will establish here.

Mr. Schwerin is well known to the moving picture fraternity, not only in this city but throughout the country, having been connected with the exhibiting and exchange business for about ten years. He opened the Dreamland theater in Chattanooga, Tenn., in 1906, and in 1908 went to New York, where he became secretary and treasurer of the Essanay Amusement Corporation, operating the Princess and Janice theaters there.

Later he became associated with the Actograph Film Company, which was absorbed by the General Film Company. He then became special representative for the Fox corporation, touring the country several times, and settled down to the managership of the St. Louis office of that company. For a time he was manager of the General Film branch at Twenty-third street and Fourth avenue, New York, and was connected with the home office of the World Film when placed in charge here.

Taking up his duties as manager of the new Lewis J. Selznick branch in this city, Mr. Schwerin has established temporary quarters in the Film Exchange building, 938 Penn avenue. Permanent quarters are now being arranged for. Mr. Schwerin states that he has already received many requests for the first releases of the Selznick Company, "The Common Law," featuring Clara Kimball Young, and the Nazimova feature, "War Brides."

To succeed Mr. Schwerin the World Film Corporation has named as manager Leo F. Levison, formerly manager of the Newark branch of the World. Mr. Levison is a familiar figure in the film business here, having successfully managed several enterprises in this city and having taken a prominent part in the activities of the Pittsburgh Screen Club in the past. Two years ago he had charge of the World Film office in Pittsburgh, but resigned to go with the Fox at Dallas, Tex. Later he returned to this city to establish the New Film Corporation office, after which he again joined the World organization, taking charge at Newark.

Weiland, owners of the Weiland Film Company, 113 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, into the exhibiting field with the erection of a large modern theater in Knoxville, a suburb of this city. Tentative plans are under way for other houses, and it is likely that the firm will secure a chain within the next year.

The lot measures 60 by 100 feet, and has been leased for a long term of years. The house will be modern in every respect, and will have a seating capacity of 1,000. Buffalo Club Wants Exhibitors

Idea That Exhibitors Are Not Wanted Has Got Around—Club Is Doing Its Best to Get Them In—Statement by Club's Board of Governors—Regular Monday Luncheons to Be Feature This Fall.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Plans for increasing the membership of the Buffalo Screen Club were discussed at a meeting of that organization on September 11, President Christoffers presiding. An effort will be made to get more exhibitors into the club. Many exhibitors have the erroneous idea that the club is antagonistic to them, but it was emphasized at the meeting that this was wholly wrong. The real object of the organization is the well-being of the entire film industry, all branches of it. In this connection the board of governors issued a statement:

"The primary object of the club is to work with and for the exhibitors and to eliminate misunderstandings, lack of faith, etc., that have existed between them and the exchange men. That is what the Buffalo Screen Club means."

Each member at the meeting agreed to try to bring in two new members at the next session. It was stated that the purpose of the club was not only to furnish social pleasures for the members, but to co-operate in opposing all unjust legislation directed toward the exhibitors and all others in the moving picture industry.

The club also decided to hold a series of Monday luncheons, about once a month, at which subjects of vital interest to the film business will be discussed by competent speakers. Prominent producers, projection experts and others will be invited to address the club.

"When these leaders are making a trip from New York to Chicago, for instance," said one speaker, "we would be delighted to have them stop off at Buffalo and pay us a visit. A few remarks by them would prove very beneficial to us."

Among the new members of the club are J. L. Levy, of the World Film, and Basil Brady, of the International Film. C. A. Taylor, representing the Motion Picture News, and Joseph A. McGuire, representing the Moving Picture World, were made honorary members.

"After each show, as my patrons are leaving, I ask them for suggestions," said Mr. Pappalardo. "I also show slides on which I request my patrons to tell me what films they want. In this way I am able to please them."

"The Shielding Shadow" is being booked extensively in this territory by N. I. Filkins, Pathe traveling representative.

Canada Lets in German Films for Soldiers

Need of Showing Rookies How Hindenberg's Men Move and Fight Lifts Censor Ban from Films—Will Be Generally Shown.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St., E. Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO, ONT.—Canadian soldiers now training at Camp Borden and other encampments in the Dominion for service overseas are being given a chance to see German soldiers in action before leaving the country by means of moving pictures which, otherwise, would be banned, it is officially admitted. These views are of Von Hindenburg's German army on the Eastern front, and were taken by Durburough and Graham, the press photographers. The subject consists of nine reels and the first showing under military auspices was at Camp Borden, Ontario, for the three nights, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, September 8-10, under the direction of Manager Bissell of the Strand theater, one of the camp's film houses. So far as the exhibition at this camp is concerned, the pictures were intended to reveal to the latest rookies of Canada's citizen-soldier army what German soldiers look like and how they move.

So interested have the military officials become in this release that the 234th Battalion paid the duty on the nine reels when they were being brought into Canada, it is declared. It is understood that Manager Bissell will look after the screening of the German war feature throughout Canada, as it has been announced that he holds the Canadian rights for the release.

Practically no German war views have been screened in Canada since the outbreak of hostilities, as the censorship has been very strict in this respect. Not long ago a Toronto exhibitor was fined in the police court for permitting the advertisement of a German army scene to appear in the list of subtitles for a news weekly when the said scene had been entirely "lifted" by the censors. The admittance of the nine reels of von Hindenburg into the country is, therefore, considered extraordinary.

Open Shop in Cleveland

Exhibitors' League Gets Report from Special Committee on Wage Controversy—Tells Why It Failed to Reach Understanding With Union—Breaking of Union Agreement—Recommendations to Come Later.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND, O.—An "open shop" has been declared by Cleveland moving picture exhibitors as a result of the failure to amicably adjust the wage dispute with the moving picture machine operators.

Coupled with the written declaration of an "open shop," the exhibitors blame lack of co-operation on the part of the exhibitors, violation of pledges by the operators, and the "fine Italian hand" of the legitimate theater managers for the failure of their efforts to defeat the operators.

All this is set forth in detail in a partial report submitted to members of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at a meeting, Sept. 12, by the special committee which handled negotiations with the machine operators. In part this report was as follows:

"The committee regrets to report that owing to lack of co-operation by the exhibitors of Cleveland, we have been unable so far to accomplish what we expected to do for our members in opposing the proposed increases of $3.25 per week.

"We held three lengthy meetings at union headquarters, first a meeting of all the operators lasting from midnight until almost daylight. At this meeting 120 operators heard our plea for a square deal and if necessary, arbitration of our differences by a neutral outside arbitration body. Mr. Sheck, New York representative of the I. A. T. S. E., practically "ran" the meeting, the operators being largely silent spectators.

"Our second meeting was a joint committee from both sides before Secretary Owens of the Cleveland Federation of Labor. This was on a request from Chairman Ernest Schwartz.

"Owens declined to assume the responsibility of acting further than to agree to allow the entire matter to go before the Federation Grievance Committee.

"Our third meeting was a joint committee hearing before the said Federation Grievance Committee on Friday afternoon, Sept. 1st, from 2 to 5:15 o'clock, at which time conditions, figures and statistics were submitted by Messrs. Schwartz, Bullock, Schumann, Slimm and I. Morris in detail, and the necessity for arbitration by outside parties was strongly emphasized in stating our grievances to this committee.

"However, it was noticeable that the Federation men were frankly and brutally prejudiced from the start in favor of Sheck's demand. For that reason two of our committee gave notice of our intention to demand arbitration in the event of our grievances not being favorably received by the committee.

"We finally offered to concede to a flat minimum scale of $18.00 per week, operators to be permitted to work at other occupations as formerly, or a scale of $25.00 per week (evening shows), with the services of an operator 42 hours per week, giving us about two hours each day of his services at whatever we could find for him to do. The answer came to Chairman Schwartz by telephone the next morning that our grievance was voted down by the committee. This we expected and Chairman Schwartz, with President Sawyer, dictated a written demand for arbitration. This was delivered at once personally by our committee secretary, Mr. Bullock, to Secretary Owens, inasmuch as he had conceded our right to this procedure under Federation rules.

"Notwithstanding this, we have been brutally ignored. The operators immediately followed the tactics of two years ago. Automobiles were requistioned and managers were waited upon with orders to sign or face the alternative of a strike on Monday at noon, Labor Day. Some signed, but we are proud to say that the majority did not and the result is that the operators' union, under orders from Mr. Sheck, have, by their action in signing up individual managers, made "open shops" of every theater in Cleveland. They thus deliberately broke their pledges, made to us in their all-night meeting, to deal with this League as an organization, a fact which our committee notified each member of by mail immediately after said meeting.

"The position of those who signed is an unenviable one. They are in the merciless grip of a coterie of I. A. T. S. E. professional agitators, whose expressed intention is "thirty dollars a week for all operators no matter how few hours we work." This may suit a few so-called "big" managers and it has undoubtedly been inspired by the so-called legitimate theaters whose love for the "little movie man" is proverbial. We propose to find out how the rank and file of managers feel on this.

"Your committee will make recommendations as to our future course of action at a later date."

This report, signed by Chairman Schwartz and committee members Sam Bullock, W. J. Slimm, S. F. Deutsch, William Miller, Samuel Aubrey, John Sliney and Henry Lustig, was unanimously approved. President Sawyer informed League members that non-union operators with city licenses, could be employed if needed by members.

Louisville U Exchanges Combine

Universal Film Exchange and Central Film Service Co. Now Conducted Under Single Management of A. C. Farrell—Takes Name from Latter Company and Has Office in Illinois Building—Manager Tickner Goes to Chicago.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—The principal happening in Louisville during the past few days was the consolidation of the local exchanges of the Universal Company, which were operated as the Universal Film Exchange, and the Central Film Service Co. Both of these exchanges have been handling Universal service, and to some degree working along the same line.

The Central company was a branch of the Central of Indianapolis, a Universal project, handling Universal films, and now a part of the main organization. The Universal office was formerly a branch of the Standard of Chicago, but was bought out by the Universal Company at the time the Chicago Standard was purchased.

H. B. Ticknor, an old Standard manager, who has been with the Louisville office for years, will return to the Chicago office, while the local Universal office has been closed, and the business taken to the Central Film Service Co., in the Illinois building. The business is to be handled under that name for the time being. The office will continue under the management of A. C. Farrell, who has been in charge for two years or thereabout, having succeeded Bob Shrader, who later managed the World and V-L-S-E offices at Cincinnati.

Local Exhibitors Show Good Feeling.

Louisville.—Showing the good feeling that exists among some of the managers of picture theaters in Louisville, it is interesting to note that almost all of the houses ran slides in their houses advertising Al. G. Fields' minstrel show, which opened at the Masonic-Strand theater, on Monday, September 4, under the management of Judge W. Allen Kinney, head of the Princess Amusement Co., which operates two picture theaters in the city. Judge Kenney leased the Masonic house to run a few special shows early in the season while Macauley's theater is being remodeled. This is the first time that the picture men have boosted a legitimate playhouse, and incidentally it was done by the exhibitors on their own hook, and without a charge of any kind being made, showing the esteem in which the exhibitors hold their friend the Judge. Judge Kinney recently gave out a statement to the local papers to the effect that he had not taken a regular lease on the house, and had arranged only to operate a few shows.

Hippodrome Man a War Prisoner.

Louisville.—News has been received from Charles Porter, formerly connected with the Hippodrome theater, who was thought to have been killed in the European war, while fighting with Canadian troops. At present Mr. Porter is a prisoner inside of the German lines in Westphalia.

Louisville.—Joe Goldberg, who for some time has been manager of the Hippodrome, has left that concern to go with the Big Features Rights Corporation, of which his brother, Lee Goldberg, is an officer and director.

Harry Bilger Is About Again.

Louisville.—Harry Bilger, formerly manager of the old Hopkins theater, and manager of Fontaine Ferry Park, has partially recovered from a severe nervous breakdown, and is able to be about again.

Blankenbaker at Helm of the Uno.

Pineville, Ky.—S. W. Blankenbaker, of Louisville, who has had a number of years' experience in moving picture circles, has taken charge of the Uno theater, and will reopen the house as soon as he can receive shipment of two moving picture machines which have been ordered. Freight congestion has been acute of late on account of the recent strike agitation, and the opening is being delayed.

J. H. Johnson Moves Theater.

Taylorsville, Ky.—J. H. Johnson has moved his moving picture show to a ground floor location in the Cox building on Main street, and has named his theater "Music Hall." New chairs, electric fans, etc., have been installed. Shows are now held on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights, with matinees every Saturday and on court days. "The Broken Coin," has been booked to show every Friday.

Cincinnati Theaters and Union Agree

All Moving Picture Houses in and Around the City, With One Exception, Have Signed the New Wage Scale.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CINCINNATI, O.—The announcement that all of the moving picture houses in and around Cincinnati, with a single exception in Covington, Ky., have signed the wage scale agreed upon between the exhibitors and operators, indicates that at least for another year there is no prospect of trouble between the exhibitors and their employees. Affairs between the unions and the houses have been handled diplomatically and for the most part good-humoredly on both sides, and in several instances threatened breaks have been taken care of in smooth fashion, demonstrating the superior wisdom of compromise as opposed to fighting.

Camera Work at Top Speed.

Cincinnati, O.—The inaugural auto race meet at the new Cincinnati motor speedway at Sharon on Labor Day, which was featured by the 300-mile International Sweepstakes, gave to Clarence Runey, the local cameraman, one of the hardest and at the same time one of the most interesting subjects he has ever handled. The speed at which the machines moved in the race, approximately 100 miles an hour, made it necessary to take the pictures at the highest possible speed of the camera, yet excellent results were obtained, although Mr. Runey figured that he got a picture at each three feet of movement of one of the speeding racers. The pictures at various Cincinnati theaters have made a decided hit.

Manager Holah Wants Bigger Quarters.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager C. E. Holah, who automatically becomes the head of the Greater Vitagraph Company's exchange, in view of that company's succeeding the V. L. S. E. organization, is much pleased with the change, which he had for some time had an inkling of. He is still looking for larger and more convenient quarters for the exchange under his charge, as the business of the exchange has for some time crowded the force considerably on West Seventh street. Ample space is desired not only for the office, but for those indispensable adjuncts of the modern exchange, an exhibition room, a storage room for films and another for paper. Available quarters in the center of town possessing these qualities are not common in Cincinnati just now, as rental space is at a premium, so Mr. Holah's search has so far not been successful.

Star Shines More Brightly.

Cincinnati, O.—The Star theater, one of the two houses in the very heart of Cincinnati, on Fountain square, has received a renovation treatment which has immensely improved its appearance, inside and out. The three-story front has been entirely redecorated, freshening it up wonderfully, and the rest of the house has been similarly handled, to considerable advantage. With short programs of one and two reel stuff, nearly always at a five-cent admission charge, the Star has been holding its own in fine style, and bids fair to remain a good money-maker indefinitely, despite the competition of the larger houses with their feature programs.

Middleport Theater Sold.

Pomeroy, O.—Earl Titus, one of the owners of the Majestic theater here, and Ralph Windsor, a former partner in its ownership, have purchased of J. H. Williams the Gem theater of Middleport, O. They have taken charge of the house and opened it for the season's business, with excellent prospects of success.

Smittel Sells Temple Theater.

Portsmouth, O.—O. A. Smittel, who has operated the Temple theater, on Eleventh street, for the past five years, has disposed of the house to J. F. Potts and Thomas Chucales. The house has been a success from the start, and Mr. Smittel sold it only because other interests demanded his personal attention. The house draws largely from the residents of the East End of the town for its patronage, and has acquired a hold on them which speaks well for the kind of work Mr. Smittel has done.

Pictures That Have Attracted Attention.

Cincinnati, O.—The success of the big eight-reel Vitagraph feature, "God's Country and the Woman," dramatized from James Oliver Curwood's novel, was so striking during its week's engagement at the Grand Opera House that the management promptly took advantage of the opportunity to book the picture there for a second week, beginning September 10.

Cincinnati, O.—A private showing of a Mutual star feature, "Youth's Endearing Charm," with Mary Miles Minter in the principal role, and written by Maibelle Hikes Justice, brought a larger number of exhibitors to the Colonial theater one morning recently, and they were much pleased with the picture. Manager R. H. Haines of the Cincinnati Mutual exchange was the host of the occasion, and reports very successful booking of this and other forthcoming releases of the company.

Chillicothe, O.—The recent meeting of the Ross County Teachers' Institute in this city was marked by a special exhibition at the Majestic theater, through the courtesy of Manager Meyers, of "Silas Marner," which was attended by the Institute in a body. The educational value of this film presentation of the well-known classic was fully appreciated, and served to demonstrate again the possibilities of the picture theater in this respect.

Canton, O.—Manager Abrams of the Odeon theater did himself a good turn not long ago when he entertained as his special guests the local organization of Boy Scouts on the occasion of the first showing of the new Universal serial, "Liberty." The boys were enthusiastic over the picture, and the chances are that most of them will hereafter attend regularly on the days when the installments of the serial are shown, in order to follow it to the end.

The Washington Raises Its Prices.

Detroit, Mich.—It is evident that the large photoplay houses will soon be getting increased admission prices. The Washington theater has raised the price of all balcony seats during the evening performances to fifteen cents, selling ten-cent seats only in the gallery. It is working out very satisfactorily and without any complaint on the part of the public. The Majestic theater recently announces: "Starting Sunday, September 3, prices of admission to this theater on Sundays and holidays will be twenty-five cents. On other days, the prices will be the same as usual, ten cents in the afternoon and ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents in the evening, with fifty cents for the auto boxes. While raising the price to twenty-five cents to everyone on Sundays and holidays may seem revolutionary to some, we beg to state that Detroit is far behind other cities in the regulation of theater admissions. Cleveland, a few weeks ago, prices in practically all the leading picture theaters were advanced to twenty-five cents for every day in the week."

Frank H. Marshall is handling "Purity" in the Middlewestern States for the American Film Company. He is disposing of state rights.

For Co-Operation in Detroit

Meeting Held on September 12 to Promote More Efficient Working Together of Branches of the Trade Results in Forming of Two Committees—These Will Be Separate Yet Work Toward the Same Ends.

By Jacob Smith, 303 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—A meeting of exhibitors and exchange managers was held at the Hotel Griswold, Tuesday afternoon, September 12, for the purpose of discussing the possibility of some sort of an arrangement to promote closer co-operation between those two branches of the industry for better protection on legislation, city ordinances, building codes and regulations. It was decided that an organization combining the two branches would be a good thing, but a mighty difficult thing to bring about, so instead a committee will be appointed by the exhibitors, and another by the exchanges; these two committees will work together and endeavor to get the same result. Any matters coming up for the attention of the moving picture business will be handled by these two committees, each committee representing its particular line of trade.

Through a Show with Manager Starr.

Detroit, Mich.—"The patron is always right" is the slogan on which M. Harlan Starr, manager of the Washington theater, Detroit, constantly works. He does not believe in arguing with patrons or questioning them about details; he would rather give them the benefit of all doubt and keep them good natured. The writer has stood in the lobby of the Washington theater many and many a night, watching Mr. Starr handle the tremendous crowds—often you run across a patron who tries to put something over, but Mr. Starr nevertheless does not argue with them.

"Make every patron your friend," he says. "We go to any reasonable limit to make our patrons thoroughly satisfied, and while often in little things that come up, they may be wrong, we find it does not pay to argue with them. Let them believe they are right and NEVER ARGUE. Often on Sundays for the last evening performance we find patrons who are sore because they cannot get seats—we assure them that we will gladly refund them their money or else we do our best to seat them. When you are handling thousands and thousands of people every week, you are bound to run across kickers and patrons who do things that they should not, possibly unintentionally, but we continue to hold our temper—to be patient and say to ourselves 'the patron is always right.' It pays."

Jack Weil Assistant at World Film Office.

Detroit, Mich.—Jack Weil, direct from the main office of the World Film Corporation in New York, has come to Detroit to become assistant manager of the local exchange. He will co-operate with Manager Dembow.

"We have had a big jump in business in the last two weeks," reports Mr. Dembow. "It has come suddenly and most of the exhibitors have signed up for regular service. Mr. Brady has the confidence of the exhibitors and he has shown what he can do in the latest World pictures. We look for a tremendous fall and winter business."

The Regent Theater Opens.

Detroit, Mich.—The Regent theater, Woodward and Horton avenues, Detroit, owned by William F. Klatt, opens as we go to press with invited guests; the public opening is to be Tuesday afternoon, the 19th. The Regent is certainly one of the most beautiful photoplay houses in this country and one of the largest—it must really be seen to be appreciated. It seats 3,100 and is a mammoth place. Charles W. Porter is house manager, while the booking of the pictures is done by C. A. McVicker, who has been appointed general director of all the William Klatt houses. For the first week the Regent will run one picture, "God's Half Acre" (Metro), for which it has exclusive first run; the regular policy of the house, however, will be twice-a-week change. There is a throw of 135 feet from the booth; this booth has three six-Powers B machine, two generators and three thermostats. Next week we will have an account of the opening and details of the house with full technical description later.

Girl Ushers at the Empire Theater.

Detroit, Mich.—The Empire theater, Detroit, has put in all girl ushers, replacing the young men. A. J. Gilligham says the new arrangement is much more satisfactory—the boys were changing too often, while he believes the girls will be more permanent. The problem of ushers has been solved at the Broadway-Strand by the employment of girls—there being few changes since this policy was adopted over a year ago.

Harry Garson's Advertising Auto.

Detroit, Mich.—Harry I. Garson recently purchased a special designed motor car for use as an advertising medium for the forthcoming Clara Kimball Young productions, which he controls in Michigan. He is having attractive signs made for the front and back. The machine will travel all over Michigan, advertising the Young pictures.

Pros and Cons of Open Booking Plan

Detroit Exchange Managers and Picture Men Discuss Programs and Free Booking —Both Have Advantages for Certain Houses.

DETROIT, MICH.—There has been a growing sentiment lately for open booking, but it's a question whether this would be a good thing for all concerned. The writer has put the question to quite a number of exhibitors and exchange men, and this is the result: From the standpoint of the exchanges, it is not thought to be a good thing—it makes the business too uncertain and leaves a lot of film on the shelf; it also causes much wrangling and keeps the exchange constantly in hot water. It is not a good thing for the exchange nor the producer, according to local exchange managers, even though there is sentiment for it.

From the standpoint of the exhibitor, it has its good and bad side. An exhibitor running a daily change policy can well afford to book four days, say, of program film, and then shop around for the other three days. It makes a mighty fine program, gives diversity to the exhibitor and gives him a chance to book in a lot of money-getting pictures that come out as specials that he could not book if he had to play an all-program show. On the other hand, he gets four days of good protection.

One exchange man who has been in the business a long while said that the open booking policy would break any producer who is getting out just one feature weekly. The best answer in favor of contract booking is the policy of Detroit's leading and most successful playhouses, the Majestic, Washington, Broadway-Strand and the houses that book a new picture every day, such as the Empire, Drury Lane, Strand, Alhambra, Knickerbocker, Rosedale and many others. These houses do very little open booking.

Getting Special Films.

No house playing a daily change should tie up its entire week on program booking, said another exchange man. He is better off by letting at least two days go on open booking. Of course, exhibitors admit that with the many new special releases that are coming out they find that in order to get them, their houses must be on the open booking basis at least two or three nights a week, otherwise they will not be in a position to get these specials. There isn't any question that there has been a growing sentiment in favor of open booking, but it is sure to apply to only a part of the motion picture business and would put the business in a chaotic stage if all pictures were put out on that basis. The producer must know where he stands if he is going to be encouraged to make good pictures. Take the legitimate business as an example. A house playing the Klaw & Erlanger circuit or the Shubert attractions, plays all of them as they come along.

Where the Plan is Good.

Some houses do better on open booking than they do on contract booking, such as the Garden and Liberty theaters, owned in Detroit by John H. Kunsky. Business has picked up considerably at these houses with open booking, but then that is due to their location and local conditions. Mr. Kunsky admits himself that the same policy would not be a good thing in all cases. His advice is to study your location and then act accordingly.

Knoxville Theater Picketed

Operators in Majestic Theater of the Crescent Amusement Company Walk Out—Union Makes Claim of Unfairness—Company Says That This Is Not the Truth—Pickets Arrested.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.—After terming the policy of the Majestic theater as unfair, the operators employed at that house went on strike September 4, in response to an order issued by their international organization. The Majestic is operated by the Crescent Amusement Company, Tony Sudekum, president, which company controls a string of about twenty houses in Tennessee and Kentucky. It is claimed by the labor people that a contract was made between the Moving Picture Operators' Union and the local house, in which it was agreed that all other houses operated by the Crescent Amusement Company should employ union operators, and that violation of this clause would render the contract null and void. The amusement company refused to sign the union contract at Nashville, some months ago, and the union operators in all its Nashville houses went out on strike as a result.

Officials of the Crescent Amusement Company steadily maintain that they have at all times treated their employees in a fair and just manner, and have been rewarded with efficient service. As evidence of this fact on Labor Day a signed statement from the employees of the company at Nashville was presented to the president, in which they declared their loyalty to the company, and willingness to stand by it during the current period of strike agitation throughout the country.

After the operators had walked out of the Knoxville house, certain of the men were assigned to "picket duty" outside the theater, and cards were handed out, informing the public of the alleged unfairness of the Majestic. The city police department then interfered and the striking operators were rounded up and carried to jail, where they were assessed individual fines on a charge of disorderly conduct. Attorney J. Alvin Johnson represented the amusement company in the case, together with City Attorney J. Pike Powers, with Attorney C. L. Cates for the defendants.

A representative of the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of the United States and Canada has been in Nashville for a number of months in the interest of the local operator's union, and claims to have been treated unfairly by the Crescent Amusement Company. It was stated at the company's headquarters, however, that this was positively not the case, and that it was merely a question where the company preferred to operate its shows as it saw fit, without domination by the union, and that so long as the satisfactory service was maintained by the present arrangement, no quarter would be allowed the striking operators.

Two Cleveland, Tenn., Houses Sold.

Cleveland, Tenn.—The Ocoee and Moneta theaters, two local houses which have been closed for some time, pending litigation, were sold by Trustee W. O. Taylor at public auction, bringing $925 on first bid. Geo. N. Shorey, owner of the Gay and Queen theaters, Knoxville, was the highest bidder, but owing to contention on the part of a number of the audience, the crowd accompanied the trustee to Chattanooga, where the matter was submitted to the Federal authorities. Approval of the sale was declined, and bids were ordered again opened on the property in the Chattanooga Federal building. The second bid was won by W. H. Durkee, of Cleveland, who took over the houses for $1,185, but on his return to Cleveland he transferred the property to Mr. Shorey for the sum of $1,200. One of the houses will probably be operated at this point, and the equipment of the other transferred to Mascot, Tenn.

Big Indiana Theater Company

Albert F. Brentlinger, a Fort Wayne Exhibitor, Organizes Stock Company to Buy Up and Operate Many of the Better Class of Picture Theaters in the State—No House Will Be Taken That Has Paid Less Than Forty Per Cent.

From the Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

FT. WAYNE, Ind.—Albert F. Brentlinger, for a number of years the owner of the Orpheum theater, the most prosperous house in the city, has organized a moving picture theater stock company which is called the Bankers' and Merchants' Theaters Company, with himself as general manager, and Brentlinger has started on a campaign to buy up and operate the biggest and best theaters purchaseable in the state. It is the announcement of the new stock company that only theaters paying 40 per cent. or better will be owned by the new company. Stock is selling at a rapid rate, and the plans of the well known theater owner are expected to go through without a hitch. The Orpheum is already under the management of the new company, and negotiations are under way for the purchase of other theaters in other cities of the state. The names and locations of these theaters have not been announced, but deals for them are expected to be closed in a few days. If the plans of the managers of the new concern go through, they mean in Indiana, the organization of the biggest company yet operating moving picture theaters in this state.

A close study of the conditions presented by the company in the sale of its stock shows no flaws. It is a well established fact that individual owners and small firms are reaping big profits from high class theaters throughout the state, and the plans of Mr. Brentlinger seem reasonable to this writer.

Says the Film Had Nothing to Do With It.

Vincennes, Ind.—The fact that Robert J. Sullivan, the owner of the Princess theater, was showing his patrons the film, "Where Is My Husband," on the same night that his marriage to Miss Jessie Herschell took place, had nothing at all to do with the marriage or what may be expected to follow. He explained this by saying that the picture had been "booked" ahead of his marriage, which, while expected by many of his Vincennes friends, was rather impromptu. Mr. Sullivan is reported to have made some enemies among his friends by stealing away and returning with a bride. They wanted to be "in" on the ceremonies, and all of this was known to Sullivan. Perhaps he knew or suspected, anyhow, no one was told. The wedding was quiet, and now the bunch is sore.

Muncie's Arcade Has New Front.

Muncie, Ind.—The Arcade theater, owned by Allen R. Hiatt, got a new "front" recently. The theater had been housed in one of the old land marks of the city, which did not hurt its popularity a bit, but now it is beautifully finished, and is a credit to the city.

The Triot Theater in Marshfield Opens.

MARSHFIELD, WIS.—The Triot theater is the name bestowed upon the handsome new house which has just been opened here by Kliner, Lang & Scharman, with E. S. Kliner in charge. The derivation of the title from the fact that three men are interested in the enterprise is obvious. Roominess for patrons is the keynote of the house, which seats 519 comfortably in the tastiest of surroundings. Peter Post will have charge of the projection and Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Judkins will be responsible for the musical program.

Alderman Van Slyke Champions Films

In Anderson, Ind., Mayor Mellett Wants a Censor Board—Alderman Brings a Few Plain Truths to General Attention.

ANDERSON, Ind.—Anderson is witnessing a pretty little scrap between Mayor Mellett and Councilman Albert Van Slyke, both of whom have met before in combat. The cause of the latest altercation is moving picture censorship. Mayor Mellett has announced that he believes a board of censors should be established in this little city to view all films or those reported questionable before they are thrown on Anderson screens. Van Slyke took the floor on behalf of the moving picture theater owners, who are set against permitting a board of censors to pass on the films which they show. Van Slyke said he did not believe a censorship could be established in Anderson without the creation of more than one board, which would put heavy expense upon the city. Then, he said, the censorship of the films would probably be worthless. He said he believed the citizens of the city could trust the theater owners to show no pictures which would in any way tend to corrupt the morals of the city. Van Slyke continued with the remark that censorship for any theater should include censorship for all, including the burlesque houses which have operated here. Nothing has been done officially by the mayor or city council.

New Theater in Warsaw.

Warsaw, Ind.—Contracts have been placed for a new downtown moving picture theater for Warsaw, and it is said by the owners of the proposed theater that it will be one of the finest and most up to date in Northern Indiana. It will be known as the Widamanz McDonald theater, it is said. In the building which is being erected for the theater will be store rooms. The theater will be ready for use the latter part of November, the work on the building to be rushed through as rapidly as possible. The house will seat 600 persons, according to the plans.

Kansas City License Fees Remain Too High

Finance Committee of City Council Thinks Exhibitors Pay Less Than in Other Cities—No Very Good Argument.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The finance committee of the upper house of the City Council reported adversely on an ordinance reducing the license fees for moving picture theaters from $100 to $12.50 a year. Exhibitors were present to show that this tax is far in excess of the tax of merchants operating with similar volume and capital. The basis of the rejection of their claims was the statement of Mayor Edwards that the exhibitors in Kansas City pay less now than exhibitors in most cities.

The Moving Picture World is now compiling data to show what other communities are asking for licenses to conduct picture shows. But we fail to see what the civic conscience of other places has to do with Kansas City. If the City Fathers have no other reason, the one they have is somewhat thin and shoddy.

Club Wants Outside Members.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Screen Club is about to start its membership campaign among the exhibitors outside the city. There are now around one hundred active members who are Kansas citizens, and it is believed that the visiting exhibitors will enjoy the facilities of the club. The club is on a self-supporting basis already, and is even now arranging for social events to keep interest lively, and to accomplish the most good. Frequent dances will be arranged, and every Friday night is to be ladies' night. I. H. Case, distributor at Kansas City for the Fotoplayer, is installing a machine in the club rooms for demonstration purposes, which will be used for club purposes also.

New Theater at Columbia.

Columbia, Mo.—The new Hall theater has had its formal opening, but is to undergo slight remodeling before the horde of students arrive for the state university. The Crystal seats 740, and the airdome 650—and both are being used this summer, at five cents for children, ten cents for adults. Mr. Kuhn is quite sincere and serious in his praise of the paper—he studies his business carefully and technically, and the Moving Picture World is his text book, where he gets practical help, suggestions and ideas.

Minneapolis News Letter

By John L. Johnston, 814 Produce Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

During the State Fair Week.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Minnesota State Fair week brought thousands of people to the Twin Cities, and incidently thousands to the theaters of the two cities. The weather during a greater part of the week was cool and rainy, but this aided rather than harmed the theaters' business. At the Lyric, Minneapolis, Elliott and Sherman began an unlimited run of "Ramona" on Sept. 3, and the picture drew large crowds at each performance. At the Minneapolis, the Shubert "Civilization" continued to attract capacity houses, and the New Palace, New Garrick, New Grand, Strand, Orpheum, Aster, Unique, and New Garden all did a good business. In St. Paul the Strand attracted crowds with "Whispering Smith," and the Princess, Majestic, Blue Mouse, and Alhambra did well respectively with "Gloria's Romance," "The Stronger Love," "The Count," "God's Half Acre," and "The Patriot."

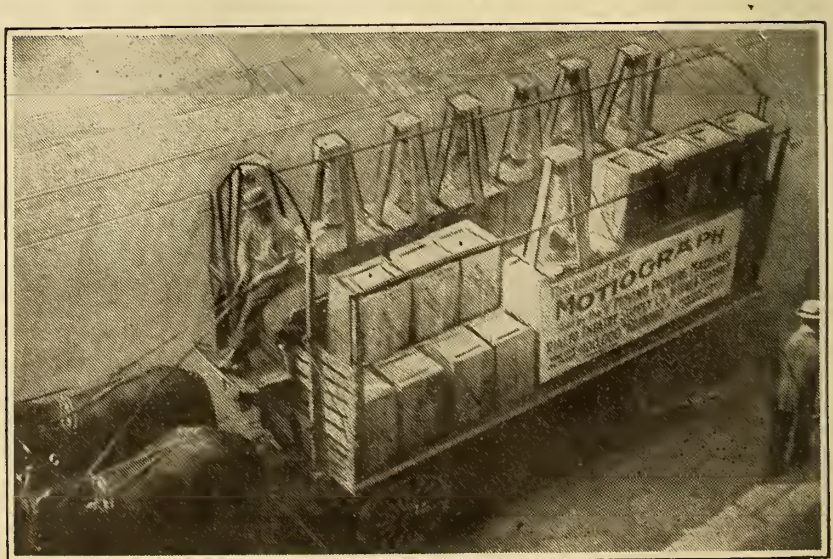
The Alhambra Theater Burglarized.

St. Paul, Minn.—Cracksmen made an unsuccessful attempt to rob the safe at the Alhambra theater here Saturday night, Sept. 2. The men it is belived waited until the watchman had gone home to the bedside of his sick child, broke into the back door of the theater, and tried to get into the safe by filing the combination knob off the outer door. They were successful in filing off the knob and getting the outer door open, but it is believed that when they reached the inner door and found it locked they feared capture and fled. The safe contained two days' receipts of the Alhambra and Gem theaters. Entrance to the theater office was secured by breaking the glass door from the outside and reaching in and turning the Yale loek. The Alhambra is owned by James G. Gilosky, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' league of the Northwest.

Out Ahead of "The Spoilers."

Minneapolis, Minn.—Benjamin Friedman of the Friedman Film Corp., here, has sent his road man, Mr. Wilke, through Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska to arrange for dates on the "Spoilers" road show Mr. Friedman intends to put out about October 1.

"End of the World" Road Show.



Minneapolis, Minn.—Following a run at the Starland theater, St. Paul, during the first half of State Fair week, M. R. Dick's "End of the World" road show started on its initial trip Thursday, Sept. 7. Mr. Dick will send out a second company Sept. 22. Harry Rowe, who has "Uncle Tom's Cabin" working as a road show with a Pickaninny band and orchestra, reports a big success through Southern and Central Minnesota.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ben E. Drum has changed his mind. His exchange will be located on the sixth floor of the Film Exchange building.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Harry Rathner of the Supreme Feature Film Co. of Minneapolis, has announced that his attorney has secured an injunction restraining the Fine Arts Film Co. of Omaha from displaying a feature entitled "Where Are Your Children?" and claimed to be a re-edited copy of "Where Are My Children?", controlled in Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota by the Supreme Co.

The South St. Louis Chiefs

The World Representative Makes Visit to Pow-wow Wigwams Among South St. Louis Cherokees and Chippewas—Finds Game and Tepees Filled the Tribes of the Contented—Fall Weather Good Medicine.

By A. H. Giebler, 236 Vanol Building, St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—When you go down in one particular South St. Louis neighborhood, it is just like paying a visit to an Indian reservation. The streets are named after various bands of noble red men, and to make the similarity more striking, the big chiefs of the pow-wow houses have built them altogether, in a sort of village, or community, which makes it mighty easy on the small change and the corns of a correspondent, since he can walk from one wigwam to another.

We took a scouting expedition down among the Cherokees, Ohios, Chippewas and Winnebagos the other night, and found all of the big chiefs alive and kicking, and gathering much wampum from the various tribes.

Begins as Usual with the Best.

The first stop was made at the Best theater, ruled over by Fred Wehrenberg. We'll admit that doesn't sound much like an Indian name, but Fred is a "good Indian" all right, and just as full of schemes to get people into his lodge as any wily sachem ever was in arranging a tribal war dance. Mr. Wehrenberg formerly conducted a big meat market and grocery store, and was in the show business as a side line, but he has sold out everything but "The Best," and is now devoting all his time and energy to pictures. Just now he is in the throes of his annual popularity contest, with sixty of the young braves and squaws of the bailiwick in sharp competition for the elegant prize he will give to the one who gets the most votes. Fred is a firm believer in short length films and serials. He runs four serials a week, "The Iron Claw," "Liberty," "Beatrice Fairfax" and the "Mysteries of Myra." He has a cart and donkey that parades the neighborhood boosting the show, and he tours the town in an automobile that looks like a perambulating lobby display of banners and pennants.

Chief Renzow's Vandora.

The next stop was with Charles Renzow, of the Vandora, just around the corner on Jefferson avenue. Renzow was happy. He was filled with satisfaction, and his tepee was filled with a fine array of tribesmen and tribeswomen, resplendent in their feathers and war paint, and applauding Theda Bara very vigorously as she depicted the story of the "Eternal Sapho." The Vandora has always been a five-cent house, but a month ago Mr. Renzow started running features on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights, and raised the admission to ten cents. The success that the experiment has met with was another cause for the satisfaction of the manager of the Vandora. Renzow has also added to his orchestra, and has made a number of minor changes in the house for the comfort of his patrons.

The Cinderella Heap Big Tepee.

Down the street two or three pony paces is the Cinderella garden, the outdoor wigwam of the Cinderella theater, just across Iowa avenue. Here we smoked the cigar of peace with Chief Eugene Freund, and listened to him make talk about the opening of the Cinderella, which will take place on the 25th. The Cinderella is the largest seating capacity house in the city. It has been redecorated during the summer, and a large portico added to the entrance. The orchestra has been increased to eight pieces by the addition of a cello, saxophone and flute. Five hundred loge box seats have also been added. Seats in these boxes will be twenty cents. This brings the seating capacity of the Cinderella up to the three thousand mark. The Freund brothers, Harry and Eugene, who operate the Cinderella, are two of the pioneer exhibitors in the city, and the Favorite theater, a half block east of the Cinderella, was the first building erected in South St. Louis exclusively for the showing of pictures. The Favorite and the Cherokee theaters have both been dark during the hot weather, but will open again about the 25th.

Chieftainess Stoddard's Theater.

It is only a hop, skip and jump from here to the settlement of the Chippewas, and we hopped and skipped it to the Monroe airdome, which was doing a nice business. Mrs. L. B. Stoddard, proprietor and manager, was very proud of a new stage she has had built. The stage has full sets of scenery, and all the other appurtenances of a regular theater. Mrs. Stoddard will open her theater, the Monroe, around the corner on Chippewa street, in a couple of weeks.

Down in the twenty-nine hundred block on Chippewa, the Melvin, presided over by Joseph Halleman, was just closing, with the audience of the second show coming out as we went in. Joe was on the job, though, and said business had been good all summer, good enough for him to keep inside during the hot months.

Pageant Theater's Newspaper Space.

St. Louis, Mo.—A. E. Morcloek, manager of the Pageant theater, at 5851 Delmar block, has been spreading himself and some mighty good advertising copy all over the daily papers for the last three weeks. Mr. Morcloek started his campaign when he put on a V-L-S-E review program. One Big Four subject was used each day for a week. After that he changed to week runs, starting off with "The Spoilers." Big newspaper space was used in all St. Louis daily papers, the campaign for the three weeks amounting to very nearly a thousand dollars. That it pays to advertise is amply proved by the capacity houses that have been the rule at the Pageant since the fall opening.

Rosenthal Exploits Liberty.

Barney Rosenthal, manager of the Universal exchange, at 2116 Locust street, has again shown his ingenuity in advertising the serials his company puts out. When "Peg o' the Ring" was ready for release he mounted a "Peg" impersonator on a snow-white horse, and sent her all over town, with a clown and ring-master following. This time he exploited "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," by decorating his automobile with bunting and flags, and having an actress, dressed in the costume of Liberty, on a raised seat in the auto, with an American soldier on one side and a Mexican on the other. The decorated automobile with the three strange passengers attracted much attention on all the streets in the districts through which it passed.

Ft. Worth Sunday Show Fight Is On

"Daddy Joe" Phillips, Manager of the Odeon Theater, Takes Lead in Fight for Sabbath Freedom—Fined $35 by Criminal Court for Violating Old Blue Law—Case Will Be Taken to Higher Court.

By E. E. Belcia, 902 West 2nd Street, Fort Worth, Texas.

FORT WORTH, Tex.—As a result of the conviction in the County Criminal Court of J. S. Phillips, manager of the Odeon theater, who was found guilty of operating a picture show on Sunday, the case probably will be taken to the Court of Criminal Appeals. A stenographer was present to take down the entire court proceedings. According to Attorney Baskin, representing the manager, the case will be appealed immediately providing a new trial is refused by Judge Jesse M. Brown.

Motion for a new trial was filed soon after the jury returned its verdict assessing a fine of $35. It is alleged that the evidence was insufficient, and that the court erred in refusing to admit any plea that the city has passed an ordinance on giving picture theaters the right to open on Sundays. It is further claimed that the court erred in refusing to allow the defendant to present his license from the city allowing him to open his show on Sundays, and that the court also erred in failing to instruct the jury that it should bring in a verdict of "not guilty" if it believed Phillips opened his show without intent of violating the state law.

This case took less time to try than any or the three preceding Sunday opening cases, when two convictions and one acquittal resulted. Messrs. Fiegel and Andrew Zucarro having been found guilty and fined $25 and costs each, and Pierre Levy, manager of the Hippodrome having been acquitted. There are now more than one hundred of these cases to be tried, but should the Phillips case be won in the higher court, no doubt they will be thrown out. Should the case be lost it is feared that it will have to be appealed to still higher court at considerable expense, or film men may ask that this law be enforced to the letter throughout the state, which means that nothing can be sold on Sunday except prescriptions at drug stores. This law having been made more than forty years ago is of little value at the present day, and sooner or later will have to be repealed or another passed to take its place, and moving picture men throughout the state have been working to this end for several years.

The leader of the Fort Worth managers is J. S. Phillips, in fact "Daddy Joe," as he is familiarly known among the trade, has been a leader not only in this movement but in nearly every movement for the best interests of exhibitors everywhere. For many years he was manager of the Pathe exchange in Dallas. He was also an exhibitor at the same time owning and managing indirectly the Odeon theater at Fort Worth. Several years ago at an Exhibitors League meeting someone raised objections to "Daddy Joe" being present, as he was a manager as well as exhibitor, but the majority voted unanimously that he stay as his heart had always been with them first, last and all time. Shortly after this he resigned from Pathe, and these people had such confidence in him that they asked him to select his own successor, which he did, in W. G. Underwood, who still holds that post. Mr. Phillips was at one time national vice-president of the league, and we do not believe that there has ever been a movement for betterment of exhibitors' conditions that was not either started by "Daddy Joe," or if he did not start it he was the leading factor in its movement and accomplishment. When it became time for the shows in Fort Worth to open on Sunday Phillips had but little support among the managers. He had almost a lone battle to fight at first, he went to it bravely, and now nearly all the managers have stood by him, and not only the managers but the biggest part of the Fort Worth business men as well.

Strand Soon to Reopen.

Fort Worth, Tex.—The World correspondent called on J. D. Wheelan at his Strand, which is now being remodeled after the fire several weeks ago. When we walked into the New Strand it fairly took our breath away at the improvement. Mr. Wheelan was personally "straw-bossing" the contractor, and we will say that he certainly has good taste in the decoration of a theater. The entire inside of the building is covered with staff work with blending colors of gold, ivory, and tan, which is undoubtedly one of the prettiest combinations we have ever seen. A new exterior will also be put on the building, and we have no hesitancy in saying that if the "front" averages with the interior it will be a good looking theater. The Strand seats 500, and is a 20 cent house.

Texas Exchange Notes.

Dallas, Tex.—L. B. Remy was a visitor in San Antonio and Houston last week. This week Mr. Remy is taking a few days off visiting some of his customers, and prospects in Eastern Texas.

Alfred Raymond has accepted a position with the Mutual Film Corporation as roadman. Mr. Raymond was formerly with the World.

Other Film Men in town this week were, Joe Gillican, Pathe; Ed. Kennedy, Gloria's Romance and Kleine; J. W. Salles, Universal; H. F. Botto, Universal; E. C. Leaves, Serial Film Corporation; D. Callaghan, Metro.

C. B. Peterson the money-handler of the Consolidated Film (Universal) is back on the job after a two weeks vacation. We never did learn where Pete went, but we bet he had a good time anyway.

H. F. Botto has just finished his third week with Universal, and has averaged a new account for each day of this period including Sundays.

Among Local Exhibitors.

Fort Worth, Tex.—The Hippodrome theater, Pierre Levy, manager, has installed a $10,000 pipe organ and unit orchestra. Prof. Fillimore and an assistant from Los Angeles will be in charge of the music. Mr. Levy has been on a two weeks extended vacation spending several days in San Antonio, Houston, and Galveston. House Manager Gould reports an enormous Labor Day business at the Hippodrome.

Waco, Tex.—L. P. Everett, manager of the Hippodrome (a Hulsey House), reports business excellent. Mr. Everett has had charge of this theater for more than a year and a half, and deserves especial credit for having built up the business to its now large proportions.

San Francisco's New Royal Opens

Neighborhood Theater at Polk and California Streets Has Brilliant Premier on September 6—Mayor James Rolph, Jr., and Other City Officials Present—Some of Its Noteworthy Features—Prices of Admission.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The Royal theater, at Polk and California streets, was formally opened to the public on the evening of September 6th, and the opening performance was witnessed by an audience which included many of the merchants of the Polk and Larkin streets districts and a number of city officials, including Mayor James Rolph, Jr.

The entrance to the new photoplay house is on Polk street, but the theater proper runs parallel to this street, with the rear on California street. It has a seating capacity of about 1,600, the ground floor accomodating over one thousand and the balcony the rest. The house is decorated in quiet tones of brown and yellow, with designs in blue and gold. Some of the distinguishing features of the theater, which represents an investment of about $200,000, are the excellence of the seating arrangements, the care given to heating and ventilating, the pipe organ installed at a cost of $20,000 and the system of indirect lighting. It is a beautiful neighborhood theater, erected along the lines of a downtown playhouse.

The opening exercises were held under the auspices of the Polk and Larkin District Association and the presentation speech was made by L. H. Honey, chairman of the executive committee, in behalf of the owners, Oppenheimer, Karski & Levy, who are well known here as the proprietors of the Sunset theater. Later Mayor Rolph was introduced by A. C. Karski, manager of the new house, and was enthusiastically received. The program for the opening evening consisted of a Bluebird feature, "Little Eve Edgarton," the latest International Film Service Weekly, and a Vitagraph comedy, "The Yellow Girl." The pipe organ was not in a completed form, but appropriate music was rendered by organist Edward White.

The prices ruling at the Royal theater are 10 and 15 cents for evening performances, with loge seats 20 cents. The latter can be reserved two weeks in advance. The matinee prices are 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children. Program will be changed every Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, and use will be made of World, Big-Four and Bluebird features. Smoking will be permitted in the balcony, and so perfect is the system of ventilation that it is believed that no one will be inconvenienced by the granting of this privilege. Hats and robes are checked free of charge and a maid is in regular attendance in the ladies' rest room.

The operating room is equipped with two type S Simplex machines and is complete in every detail, the experience of the owners in other houses having brought home the need of the very best in projection. The organ was made by the American Photoplayer Company at its factory at Berkeley, and is one of the largest of its kind turned out there. Full advantage has been taken of the long lobby to install built-in poster and photograph frames and a fine display was made on the opening evening, when more than 2,000 persons inspected the house.

Exchangemen Stop Indecent Exhibition

Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco on Guard for the Good of the Business Has Undesirable Posters Destroyed.

San Francisco, Cal.—The members of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco recently demonstrated in a striking manner that an indecent exhibition can be stopped in short order without a Board of Censorship or any ordinance other than those now in effect. The Empire theater, on Market street, recently offered "The Traffickers," a film alleged to have been made up of parts of "The Inside of the White Slave Traffic," with additions of portions of other films of a similar nature. No particular objection was made to the film, but film exchange managers objected strenuously to the lobby display. This purported to depict the interior and exterior of brothels, all being scenes not shown on the film. Manager J. D. Gibbs of the theater was interviewed and asked to remove the objectionable display and upon his refusal F. S. Peachy, manager of the Board of Trade, swore to a complaint and caused his arrest and the removal of the posters. When the case was called by Police Judge T. I. Fitzpatrick the magistrate asked to be shown the offending pictures, and at once gave the theater manager and the promoters of the show a stinging rebuke, ordering that the posters and literature be destroyed within five days. The decisive manner in which this matter was handled has brought forth many expressions of satisfaction from other theater owners and from the members of women's and welfare clubs.

Doing Big Feature Business.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sol L. Lesser, head of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., states that a splendid business is being done in booking the new Clara Kimball Young productions. Among the houses that will show these are the Portola and Royal theaters, of this city; the Pastime theater, Eureka; Brown's theater, Fruitvale, and the house at Modesto, conducted by A. A. Richards. Sam Wolf, of Brown's theater, enjoys the distinction of having been the first exhibitor in California to book these.

Since returning home Mr. Lesser has completed arrangements to handle "The Little Girl Next Door," "The Battle Cry of Peace," the Capt. F. E. Kleinschmidt war pictures, and "War Brides" in California, Arizona and Nevada. Irving Lesser, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the firm, was a recent visitor here to confer with his brother in regard to the handling of these new productions. Word has been received from Fresno to the effect that "Where Are My Children," which recently played at the Barton Opera House for eight days, broke all former records for attendance there.

Artcraft Exchange Soon.

San Francisco, Cal.—Arthur S. Kane, the Western representative of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, was a recent visitor here with C. Mell Simmonds, and a location for an exchange is being sought. It is understood that Mr. Simmonds will have charge of the San Francisco branch and, if true, this will be welcome news to exhibitors in this territory, as he is very popular here.

Visitor from Australia.

San Francisco, Cal.—William Szorka, of the firm of Szorka Bros., which conducts the Enmore theater at Sydney, New South Wales, was a recent visitor here and before returning home will tour the United States.

Metcalfe Visits Northwest.

San Francisco, Cal.—George A. Metcalfe, of the supply house bearing his name, is home from a trip of several weeks through the Northwest. He visited many dealers and exhibitors while away and reports that the newly installed Seattle branch is making a fine showing.

Carl Laemmle Visits San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was a recent visitor here, coming up from Universal City for a few days to inspect the local branch exchange. In commenting on the foreign demand for American made films Mr. Laemmle stated that there is a very heavy call at the present time from Great Britain for comedies, more of these being wanted now in that country than here. France is taking very little film of any kind and the same is true of Italy.

Supply Man Visits Northwest.

San Francisco, Cal.—Tom Maguire, of the Breck Photoplay Supply Company, Inc., has returned from a trip to Portland, Ore., where he made his home for several years, and other cities of the Northwest. He called upon exhibitors and dealers and made a number of sales of machines. Among the California houses that have been fitted up by this concern of late has been the Liberty theater at Hollister, which was recently reopened.

Edward H. Kemp Visits Factory.

San Francisco, Cal.—Edward H. Kemp, who represents the Enterprise Optical Company in this territory, has gone to Chicago to confer with the management regarding improvements planned for the Motiograph. Before leaving projection equipment was disposed of to the First Congregational Church at Oakland and the Empire theater at Napa.

Portland Admits of No Appeal

City Council Knifes Motion Picture Men's Right of Appeal to Courts in Censorship Ordinance—Plea to Commissioners of Approximately 30,000 Theatergoers of No Avail.

PORTLAND, Oregon.—By a vote of three to one, the City Commission knifed the censorship ordinance requested by the film men, disregarding the petitions of approximately 30,000 theater-goers and business men for fairer censorship. The action of the Commission was anticipated by the film men. Commissioner George L. Baker, who introduced the ordinance August 9, cast the only vote in its favor. Those voting against it were Mayor H. R. Albee, Commissioners R. G. Dieck and C. A. Bigelow. Commissioner Daly was absent.

The censorship of motion pictures in Portland comes under the city department, of which Mayor Albee is the head. In order to show the unfairness of the no-appeal censorship to which Portland's films are now being subjected the film men cited instances of censor board unreasonableness in their recent campaign for the ordinance which necessarily censured the mayor's department of the city government. Said the mayor after the ordinance had been defeated:

"If an appeal board is all you want, I would suggest that you back up and get a new start. I will say that you had better come here with a clean slate and make an appeal on that basis rather than in the manner the fight has been conducted heretofore. Some of your members have come dangerously near the criminal in their statements in the past. In view of the falsifications, I would suggest that you wipe the slate clean and organize some more of the level-headed picture men in the interest of an appeal board."

The picture men strongly resent the falsification charges by the mayor and his attitude on the appeal question as above stated, and it was the opinion of many of them that the big issue, namely, their plea for the American right of appeal to the courts, was clouded in the council chamber by these falsification charges.

Ask for Right of Appeal.

Members of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association said that no amendment to the present ordinance is desired that will provide for an "appeal board" such as referred to by the mayor. The picture men have made it clear that they desire the right of appeal to the courts and that they are not going to give up the fight until they have exhausted every means the law gives them to obtain it.

Commissioner Baker read extracts from the report of a committee in Congress on a proposed Federal censorship bill and showed wherein the Federal censors, if the bill had passed, would have had their rulings reviewed by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. Commissioner Dieck, who sided with the mayor, stated he believed the film men's complaint to be with the administration of the ordinance and not with the ordinance itself. D. Solis Cohen, representing the picture interests, repeatedly asked the mayor and the commissioners to tell the people present why they were so determined that the picture men should not have the right of appeal to the courts granted to them by ordinance, and each time the question was put the big issue was evaded.

Club Women Believe in Appeal.

Club women of the city addressed the commissioners on the subject before them. Mrs. Josephine Sharp said she believed the rulings of the National Board of Review to be sufficient censorship. Mrs. A. L. Stephens of the Parent Teachers' Association stated that her organization was not opposed to giving the picture men a right of appeal, but believed the Municipal Court was not the proper tribunal to review censors' decisions. Commissioner Baker explained that appeals to the courts from matters comprehended by city ordinances must be started in the Municipal Court.

The plea to the commissioners was the first step of the picture men in their outlined campaign for censorship fairness, and, it failing, they are preparing to proceed with their next step.

Globe Theater Sold.

Portland, Ore.—The Globe theater has been sold by the Portland Amusement Company to Louis Gerlinger, of the firm of Gerlinger-Richards Company, insurance men. Mr. Gerlinger will operate the house himself. The first show under his management was given Sept. 15. The house has been renovated and beautifully decorated.

The Portland Amusement Company, former owners of the Globe, and who now operate the American, Casino, and Burnside theaters, still have their offices in the Globe Building.

Circle Theater's Children's Shows.

Portland, Ore.—During the summer months G. T. Holtzclaw, Circle theater, has been giving a treat to the kiddies who could not get out of town for vacations. He gave free shows for children each Saturday at 9 a. m. Mr. Holtzclaw says he had most appreciative audiences because only deserving children had ambition enough to be at the theater at that early hour.

Round-up Picture Plans.

Portland, Ore.—L. E. Chalenor of Chalenor & Van Tress of Spokane, owners of the film rights to this year's Pendleton Round-up, spent a few days in Portland arranging for the photographing of this event. J. G. Sill has again been employed as cameraman. Mr. Sill was run over by a runaway stage coach and severely injured while photographing last year's Round-up, but that experience did not prevent him from taking the job again. Chalenor & Van Tress are making elaborate plans to handle this year's picture. L. E. Chalenor formerly conducted the Alta theater in Pendleton, and C. G. Van Tress is an old state rights man.

Theater Change in the Dalles.

The Dalles, Ore.—Lew Cullins has sold the Casino theater to T. O. Mead, a former operator in the house. Mr. Cullins has conducted the Casino for several years and is a well-known showman in this part of the country. He has not divulged his future plans.

Ben Ketcham at the Columbia.

Portland, Ore.—Ben Ketcham, formerly manager of the Alhambra at Seattle, is temporarily relieving E. J. Myrick as manager of the Columbia. Besides being manager at the Columbia, Mr. Myrick is president of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association, and his strenuous duties during the censorship campaign have earned him a two weeks' rest.

Pertinent Portland Briefs.

M. E. Mead, road man for Triangle, passed a few days in Portland en route to Seattle. Mr. Mead says he booked his service second run in a house in the eastern part of his territory, which theater also has its first run. It's that popular, says Mr. Mead.

R. C. ("Foxy") Montgomery, road man for Fox, has returned to Seattle, now that the first step in the censorship campaign is over.

A. T. Lambson, Reelplay Feature Company, Seattle, was a recent visitor in Portland.

Mike Rosenberg, De Luxe Feature Film Company, Seattle, spent a few days in Portland trying to get a few of his pictures passed by the censor board.

Last month the censors didn't condemn a single picture in Portland.

Pendleton Round Up in Great Fashion.

SEATTLE, WASH.—When the Mission theater puts on the pictures of the great annual round up at Pendleton, Ore., it will be in regular Western style. The girl ushers will be dressed as cow girls and the door men as cow boys. The pianist will be armed with a revolver in each hip pocket, and when the exciting shooting scenes are thrown on the screen he will make them more realistic by firing his own guns. The first showing of the "Round Up" will be Sunday, September 10.

Colonial Theater's Labor Day Crowd.

Seattle, Wash.—Manager E. H. Smith of the Colonial theater beat his biggest days when he put on Charlie Chaplin in "The Count" Labor Day. Although the Colonial is one of Seattle's oldest motion picture theaters, more than a thousand more patrons came that day than the house had ever shown to before.

"Purity" a Tremendous Success.

Seattle, Wash.—The first viewing of Triangle's new feature, "Purity," met with instant success. The De Luxe Feature Film Corporation has purchased the state rights of the film in four states, viz., Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho, and Manager Rosenberg anticipates big things for the picture in the Northwest territory.

Houses Change Hands.

Ballard, Wash.—The Idle Hour theater, Ballard, Wash., which has been closed for some time, is to be opened shortly by J. T. Nelson, former owner of the Princess theater, Columbia City.

Sumner, Wash.—The Leonard Brothers of the Ruston theater, Tacoma, have taken over the Sumner theater from its former owner, F. D. Robinson.

Interesting Personal Notes.

Seattle, Wash.—The new manager for the George Kleine exchange has just arrived in the city. He is Carl Stearn, formerly with Bluebird in Denver.

Harry K. Brinn of the Western Import Company, foreign representative for Triangle, is spending three weeks' vacation in and around Seattle.

J. Von Herberg of Jensen and Von Herberg, Seattle theater owners, is just back from his trip to California, where he spent several weeks looking over the film industry.

The Alhambra of Seattle has closed for changes and improvements before being opened as a vaudeville house on the Orpheum Circuit, as announced in last week's Moving Picture World. Ben Ketchum, its former manager, acting for its owners, Jansen and Von Herberg, has gone to Portland to help out E. J. Murrick, manager for Jansen and Von Herberg of the Columbia theater of that city. Mr. Murrick is off for a vacation.

W. A. Crank, road man for Metro, has just returned from a trip to the territory north of Seattle. He has been booking Metro features and the "Crimson Stain Mystery" in towns along the Sound, and SPOKANE FILM NOTES.

From S. Clark Patchin, E1811 11th Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

Good Business During Fair Week.

SPOKANE, Wash.—With the return of fall and the opening of the Spokane Interstate Fair, moving picture exhibitors of Spokane reaped big profits during the week, and every house had an extra good program to attract the visitors to the city during the week.

Starting with Sunday, the houses were packed to capacity, and hundreds waiting to get in for the next show. As fast as seats were vacated others took them that day, and business continued good during the week.

Strand Opens at Livingston.

Governor S. V. Stewart of Helena, attended the opening of the new $60,000 Strand theater at Livingston, Mont., recently. It was built by A. W. Miles. Including the equipment the place represents an investment of $100,000. It has a large pipe organ.

Members of the Spokane Business Girls' Club appeared in moving pictures, their club having a candidate in the popularity contest for the fair, who won third prize. The pictures were shown at the Liberty theater, and the girls gave a theater party.

Changes at Local Famous Players.

Calgary, Alberta.—A number of changes have recently been made in the staff at the local headquarters of the Famous Players Film Service, Limited—the head office for Western Canada, in charge of H. J. Allen.

Harold F. Moore, for many years with the General Film, has been installed as booker and assistant manager.

Irving H. Allen, formerly in the office, is going out on the road to meet the exhibitors face to face. Mr. Gleason, representative of the Western Canadian offices, is also making an extended trip, and will cover the Western territory thoroughly.

Mr. Sessions has also been added to the staff, and A. Smith is the new shipper.

A new film cleaning machine has been installed, and with the assistance of Miss Smith, is keeping the film in first-class condition.

C. O. D. Rule in British Columbia

Vancouver Exchanges Supplying All British Columbia Now Require Payment for Films in Advance—Checks Must Be on Hand or C. O. D. Shipments Go Forward—Discontent at Move Expected to Pass.

By E. C. Thomas, 621 Rogers Building, Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—On September 4, in accordance with a previous arrangement, all the local film exchanges, supplying the whole of British Columbia, put into effect the pay-in-advance system ot collections for service, and this method will be continued hereafter. Considerable trouble has been experienced with collections in some quarters, and the exchanges decided that this was the only way to protect not only themselves, but also the exhibitor who expected to pay, and did pay, for his films.

The exchanges are requesting payment on Friday morning for the following week's service, although of course an exhibitor may obtain films at any time by paying for them in advance. In the case of out-of-town exhibitors, if the rental for films to be supplied has not been received, a C. O. D. shipment will be made.

Although there has been some objection to the plan on the part of exhibitors generally, the fact that the rule will be rigidly enforced in all cases removes any possible cause for any exhibitor to feel offended, and it is thought that within a short time, when the beneficial effects of the system have become apparent, all objection will disappear.

Sunday Shows for Patriotic Benefits.

Winnipeg, Man.—If the moving picture exhibitors of this city desire to run their theaters on Sunday with the object of donating the proceeds to patriotic purposes, they will not be likely to find any difficulty about the matter, according to hints dropped recently by Hon. A. B. Hudson.

Mr. Hudson said he would not promise immunity to the picture men for this purpose, but significantly added that he was not compelled to issue a fiat for the prosecution of exhibitors provided the exhibitions were legitimately patrotic ones.

This may be the opening wedge for Sunday shows.

For Film Distribution Moves

Vancouver, B. C.—The Dominion Exclusives, Limited, distributing Fox features in Western Canada, is the latest local exchange to move, and Manager E. R. Fauser is now located in the Orpheum Theater Building, which is fast becoming the film center of the city. The Fox offices are on the fifth floor, while directly underneath, on the second floor, are the Metro quarters, with the Famous Players Film Service located on the third floor.

Paris Apaches and the Empire.

Winnipeg, Man.—The inter-provincial board of censors, with headquarters in this city, has just condemned a picture for a peculiar reason, which parallels the British Columbia censor's excuse for rejecting "The Campbells Are Coming"—the reason for the latter being that East Indian troops, now fighting with the Allies, are shown in revolt.

In the present instance the Manitoba-Saskatchewan board has followed this highly diverting line of reasoning: France is an ally of Great Britain; therefore the Paris apaches are friends of the British Empire. As the five-reel film, "A Child of the Paris Streets," bares the life of the underworld of Paris a little too vividly, and shows the apaches to be persons whom one simply does not know, the picture has been condemned.

An appeal has been entered against the decision, but as the appeal board has so far upheld the judgment of the censors in every instance when an appeal has been taken, there appears to be little likelihood of a favorable decision following the review of the film.

Charles Robson, the Saskatchewan representative on the censor board, is at present on a vacation, and his place is being filled by Mr. G. Cooke of Regina.

A Tax Bill Not Generously Worded.

Calgary, Alberta.—The proposed municipal business tax on musicians in this city, recently put forward by the city council, has encountered determined opposition among all classes of people, and a largely attended meeting in regard to the matter has just been held at the public library. A committee was appointed to present the musicians' side of the case to the council, in an effort to have the question reconsidered. There is no objection to a tax on musicians' incomes, it is stated, but a flat rate, without regard to the income of the person paying the tax, is considered unjust.

Lieut.-Col. Dennis, presiding at the meeting, as well as many other persons present, commented particularly on the generosity of local musicians at this time in playing without charge at patriotic and other entertainments, and agred that this is an inopportune time for levying a new tax upon them.

British Columbia Notes of Interest

Calgary, Alberta.—J. B. Cronk, manager of the Allen Theater, has returned to the city, and reports that business has picked up wonderfully in the past few weeks.

Victoria, B. C.—B. S. Heisterman, proprietor of the Majestic Theater, recently closed the house for a week, to allow an opportunity for a complete renovation of the theater, and reopened on September 6, using Mutual service. A great change is noted in the appearance of the interior of the theater.

Winnipeg, Man.—Jack Herron, road man for the Mutual Film Corporation, recently started on a trip covering the whole of Western Canada, and at the present writing is working through the Alberta territory. He is expected to reach the coast about the end of September.

Fernie, B. C.—H. J. Allen of the Famous Players Film Service was here a short time ago, calling on G. M. Alexander of the Orpheum and Isis theaters.

Trail, B. C.—G. H. Adams, formerly of Prince George, is about to build a moving picture theater here.

Edmonton, Alberta.—Manager Max Allen of the Monarch Theater has just increased his orchestra, and reports constantly improving business.

Vancouver, B. C.—Dr. T. B. Hall of this city has just purchased the Western Canadian rights for the Williamson Submarine Pictures, which will be exhibited at the Orpheum Theater at advanced prices for three days, commencing September 14. These pictures have never before been exhibited in this territory.

Calgary, Alberta.—B. Allen, president of the Famous Players Film Service, is on a trip through the West, and after spending some time here has visited Edmonton and Moose Jaw, where he attended the opening of the new Allen theater.

Vancouver, B. C.—Miss C. M. Smith, accountant, and Miss Helen McDonald, stenographer, have been added to the staff of the local Mutual office.

KALEM.

PATENTED BY HAM (Sept. 12.)—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); Mr. Gettout N. Push (A. Edmondson); His Daughter (Ethel Teare).

"Gettout N. Push, the millionaire auto manufacturer, offers $10,000 reward to the inventor of a substitute for gasoline," says the newspaper story. It requires but a few seconds' thought for Ham to find a substitute, and fortunately for him the daughter of the auto magnate passes at the moment. Her ninety-cylinder car suddenly comes to a stop and she discovers that it is out of gasoline. Ham puts his substitute to work—which consists of nothing else than having Bud push the car, unknown to Ethel.

The following day Ham is in strong favor with Gettout N. Push and his daughter as arrangements are made for the official test. All goes well, even though the car does do some weird stunts when it strikes a hilly section and gets beyond Bud's control, until the latter, pushing valiantly, falls down a manhole. Then the deception is discovered. Ham's rescue of Bud from the water main is shown in the finish.

THE TREASURE OF CIBOLA (Sixth Episode "The Girl From Frisco"—Two Parts—Sept. 13.) The cast: Barbara Brent (Marin Sais); John Wallace (True Boardman); Ace Brent (Frank Jonasson); Harris (Ronald Bradbury). Directed by James W. Horne.

Searching through the library of the monastery of Santa Barbara, Barbara Brent learns of the Moqui Indian legend which tells of a fabulous treasure supposed to be hidden in a cave in the mountains and guarded by a ghost clad in mailed armor. Her adventurous spirit prompts her to get up a party for a visit to the cave, though she is warned by the padre of the mission that it will arouse the Indians, who revere the "iron ghost." Included in the party is Harris, an Eastern promoter seeking to interest her father in a railroad deal.

An Indian guide takes the party to the foot of the mountain where the cave is located. The appearance of the "iron ghost" frightens the guide and he refuses to allow the party to go any further. Barbara determines to press on, but the others in the party decide to camp in the valley until the following day. Harris offers to accompany her. By sliding down ropes they succeed in reaching the cave, but the Indian guide, his superstition aroused, pulls the rope up, preventing their return. The guide then speeds to the pueblo village to arouse the Indians.

How the discovery of the treasure uncovers the real character of Harris, how Barbara succeeds in escaping from his brutal clutch and later, when the campers in the valley are besieged by the enraged Indians, she saves the day for them, are the subjects told in the following scenes of this drama.

THE MYSTERIOUS DOUBLE (Sept. 15.)—The cast: May Wells and Thelma Deane (Ivy Close); Jack (Arthur Albertson); Bookwormer (C. D. Peruchi); Jazbo, the Janitor (Henry Murdoch). Director, Robert Ellis.

May Wells leads a double life—to the "low-brows" she is May Wells, the popular cartoonist, to the "high-brows" she is Thelma Deane, writer of deep scientific works. All goes well until she falls in love with Jack, who admires her cartoons, and under the name of Thelma Deane is pestered by Bookwormer, who reads her scientific essays. She leads a merry life for a time trying to maintain the two identities until Jack discovers the truth when the main problem becomes that of getting rid of Bookwormer, which they do neatly.

THE HOODOO OF DIVISION B (No. 97 of "The Hazards of Helen"—Sept. 16.)—The cast: The operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Kent, a veteran engineer (G. A. Williams); Bexton, just breaking in (P. S. Pembroke); the new superintendent (George Routh). Author, E. W. Matlick; producer, James Davis.

The new superintendent scoffs at the men's fear of Engine 3615, and declares that it must be put into service at once. Engineer Kent, a veteran of the road, refuses to take the throttle and is discharged. Dick Benton, a young engineer, is induced to take the engine out and "kill this talk of a hoodoo." But the engine lives up to its ill-fame, and after a series of exciting incidents runs wild with Benton disabled in his cab. Helen, who receives word of the impending disaster, saves the day by a daring exploit that brings her within inches of death.

THE MUD CURE (Sept. 19.)—The cast Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); Doc Pullem (A. Edmondson); his daughter (Ethel Teare).

Poor Bud has a toothache and Ham brings him to Doc Pullem to have the offending molar extracted. The dentist's pretty daughter aids him in administering the gas, but as she is busy flirting with Ham she bungles the job—and what a dream follows for Bud. He finds Ham and himself the attendants at a mud bath health resort where Doc Pullem and his daughter come for treatments. The things that happen then would make any Welsh rare-bit dream seem a sweet lullaby.

THE GUN RUNNERS (Seventh Episode "The Girl From Frisco"—Sept. 20.—The cast: Barbara Brent (Marin Sais); John Wallace (True Boardman); Ace Brent (Frank Jonasson); Arenzo (Ronald Bradbury); "English Rose" (Josephine West); Jimmy, a reporter (Edward Clisbee); The Blind Mole (Karl Formes, Jr.). Directed by James W. Horne.

Barbara, finding her automobile disabled, is forced to go to the Storms reception in a taxi. The chauffeur brings her to the wrong house, and she finds herself greeted by The Blind Mole, as "English Rose." The Blind Mole, a picturesque Central American character, takes her into his confidence regarding his plans for a revolution in Costa Blanca. Suddenly Arenzo, a rival revolutionist, arrives with his followers, and in the battle that follows The Blind Mole is killed. Arenzo also thinks that Barbara is "English Rose," and forces her to accompany him.

The scenes that follow, telling in exciting manner how Wallace and a reporter succeed in unravelling the mystery of Barbara's disappearance and how that adventurous girl thwarts the schemes of the "gun runners," culminate in a spirited conflict aboard the schooner which was to bear the revolutionists' arms to Costa Blanca.

THAT PESKY PARROT (Sept. 22.)—The cast: Nell (Ivy Close); Jack (Robert Ellis); Pete, the paperhanger (Henry Murdoch); the maid (Mary Taylor Ross); Jack's boss (William McKey). Director, Robert Ellis.

The newlyweds have a parrot quick of memory and loose of tongue. With the aid of Pete, the paperhanger, the parrot causes all sorts of mix-ups when Jack goes away on a business journey and returns unexpectedly. Jack finds the parrot alone in a wildly upset house, and decides that his bride has been kidnaped. But after a swift succession of laughable incidents all ends well.

DEFYING DEATH (No. 98 of "The Hazards of Helen"—Sept. 23.)—The cast: The operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); President of the road (G. A. Williams); Dick Benton (P. S. Pembroke); Riggs, the rival lawyer (George Routh). Director, James Davis.

Dick Benton, a young attorney of the railroad, is on his way to the Capitol to deliver evidence involving Riggs in a conspiracy arising out of a fight with the railroad over a franchise. At Lone Point he learns that by leaving the package to be picked up by the express it will reach the Governor sooner than he can bring it on the local. He leaves it in Helen's care. But Riggs, who has been following Benton, succeeds in getting away with the box and boarding an auto standing outside the station. He has scarcely gone a hundred feet when a momentary loss of control causes the car to ram a telegraph pole.

Helen recovers the box, but looks up to find another automobile with Riggs' aides bearing down upon her.

While they are tending the injured Riggs she boards an electric speeder, a development of the handcar, and races down the track. In a moment the conspirators are after her. Suddenly the express swings around the curve, on the adjoining track. Ahead, Helen sees the switch which will send her to almost certain death under the wheels of the express unless her speeder is brought to a stop. She tries frantically to apply the brakes, but they will not work, and in a twinkling she is at the switch and under the express. By a matter of inches she escapes the wheels of the train and races along the other track apace with the express above her. When she has finally mastered the brake she calls to the trainmen above her, and both express and speeder are brought to a stop together. The trainmen quickly effect the capture of Riggs and his fellows.

POWER OF THE CROSS (Three Parts—Sept. 25).—The cast: Madge Johnson (Virginia Kirtley); Her Mother (Eugenie Forde); Francis Randall (Robyn Adair); Horace Anderson (E. J. Brady). Written and directed by Burton L. King.

Madge Johnson, a young stenographer employed by Horace Anderson, a wealthy broker, is loved by Francis Randall, who is working his way through college. The broker for whom Madge works, admires the young girl, and ultimately the time comes when she must choose between the love of Francis Raudall, which love she returns, and the love of the wealthy business man, whom she really does not care for.

In her imagination, she sees the struggle with poverty she will have as the wife of Francis Randall, and on the other hand, she appreciates the luxury that will be hers should she consent to marry Anderson the broker. Between happiness and wealth, she chooses the latter and marries the rich man, and Randall's heart is broken.

Randall becomes interested in the work of the Salvation Army. Finally he joins the organization, and resolves to devote his entire life to the cause of religion. He rapidly rises in the ranks until he becomes an official and has charge of the meetings in the Salvation Army barracks. Madge's married life is not happy. She does not love her husband, who, seized with an attack of heart trouble, dies suddenly. Then it is that Madge resolves to seek Randall, the only man she has ever loved.

When they meet face to face, Madge tells him of the mistake she has made, and that finally she appreciates that love is more than all the riches in the world. Randall, however, tells her that it is too late, that he has sacrificed all worldly thoughts in order to work for the Master, and that the power of the Cross is greater than the power of Love.

THE RAIDERS (Sept. 30).—The cast: Tom Gardner (Tom Mix); Vicky Nelson (Victoria Forde); Jim Nelson (Sid Jordan); Ramero (Pat Chrisman). Written and produced by Tom Mix.

Later, Ramero and his band give chase to Nelson and his daughter, who are returning home with their supplies. Nelson is killed during an exchange of shots. Tom hears the shots and goes to the rescue, arriving just in time to save Vicky. Ramero escapes. Tom and Vicky pursue him, and later he falls dead before Tom's well directed shot. Then it is that Vicky consents to become Tom's new deputy for life.

VIM FEATURE COMEDY.

ARTISTIC ATMOSPHERE (Sept. 27).—Wife reads that every woman must create an artistic atmosphere in her home to avoid becoming old. She thinks she already shows signs of age, and takes up painting—the first thing that enters her head.

Hubby stands for the litter of artist's paraphernalia all over the house, but objects when wife decorates his collars with her landscapes, causing him to become the laughing-stock of the men in the office. When wife gets his best friend to pose as a model for "A Perfect Man," hubby is fired for staying at home, jealously watching lest a love affair develops.

Hoping a baby will cure her mania for painting, hubby adopts one, only to find that babies are not in her line, and he puts it on a rich man's doorstep. A policeman is about to arrest him, but hubby claims he was only going to change its diaper, producing his handkerchief to prove it. He takes it home, gets it to sleep, and goes out to look for work. Wife tells him to get something artistic. He gets a job as butcher. Returning home, he sees the painting outfit flying out of the window, finding that wife has discovered a Caruso in the person of the baby. Hubby is overjoyed to hear that wife intends to find her "artistic atmosphere" cultivating the baby's voice.

THE REFORMERS (Sept 28).—The cast: Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); Vampire (Florence McLoughlin); Mrs. Ogden (Edna Reynolds); Her daughter (Ray Godfrey); Her son (Bert Tracey).

The fact that an unfortunate member of the canine race possesses a rather lurid appellation should not necessarily mean that the free passage of his breath ought to be prevented by means of a piece of hemp. Plump and Runt were jail birds. A religious revival hits a buried chord in their being and they reform in so much as they get jobs as a butler and as a chef. The same household shelters a wayward son, who is being bled by a woman of the world. To meet his demand for money his sister steals her friends' money and jewels, the blame falling upon our (this time innocent) heroes. How they emerge from the clouds of suspicion and finally bring the real culprits to justice is graphically told in the picture. The closing scenes show them, covered with virtuous indignation, vegetables and a few clothes, enthroned among the household gods.

TANGLED TIES (Sept. 29).—The cast: Mr. Pokes (Robert Burns); Mr. Jabbs (Walter Stull); Mrs. Pokes (Mabel Best); Mrs. Jabbs (Ethel Hurton); Mr. Newlywed (Harry Naughton); Mrs. Newlywed (Melba Andrews); Hotel Prop. (Frank Hanson); Old Maid (Edna Reynolds).

Pokes, a supposed nervous wreck, is sent by his wife to a hotel in the country that he may enjoy a well-earned rest. However, instead of resting, Pokes begins to flirt with the wives of Jabbs and Newlywed. Both husbands are incensed at Pokes' conduct, and finally their patience is exhausted; so they agree that Pokes must be taught not to flirt so promiscuously. Jabbs' wife, overhearing her husband's plan to punish Pokes, tries to warn the latter to escape, but when her husband discovers her in Pokes' room he is infuriated and refuses to listen to her explanations.

In the fight that follows Pokes defeats both Jabbs and Newlywed, but when his wife appears at the hotel he seeks refuge in flight. He escapes from the hotel via the telegraph wire but slips and falls into the well, out of which he is dragged in a half-drowned condition. But, upon his recovering consciousness, rather than face his irate spouse he again falls to the bottom and rises no more.

BIOGRAPH.

THE UNVEILING (Reissue—Sept. 18).—The cast: The show girl (Mabel Normand); the boy (Robert Harron); his mother (Grace Henderson).

The boy, who is the idol of his widowed mother, returns from college with a record of which she is proud. To mark the occasion his boyhood sweetheart and her mother come to spend a few days. The too-indulgent mother, however, is blind to the fact that the boy is spending most of his evenings in full dress, which should have told her that Bohemian society was engaging his attention. A show girl, who learns that he will soon come into great wealth, determines to win him.

Unsophisticated as he is, he is an easy prey. A friend of the family warns the mother of her boy's danger, which she is loath to believe until positive proof is presented. Pleadings are in vain for the boy is fascinated, and so the sorrowing mother, feeling she has lost all that she has lived for, determines upon self-destruction and is prevented only by the timely appearance of her visiting friend, who devises the plan that awakens the boy. She has the mother pretend suicide on account of the loss of fortune. This shows the boy the true nature and design of the object of his infatuation.

THE SUNBEAM (Reissue—Sept. 25).—The cast: Sunbeam (Inez Seabury); The old maid (Claire McDowell); Sunbeam's mother (Kate Bruce); The bachelor (Dell Henderson).

The little one is playing with her doll while her mother lies sick. The poor woman dies, and the child, thinking her asleep, goes downstairs in search of a playmate. First she visits an austere old maid, and by her artlessness soon melts her coldness. Next she goes across the hallway to a crabbed old bachelor and affects him the same way. The old maid misses one of her hair puffs and goes after the child, thinking she took it. While she is in the bachelor's room talking to the child, several tenement house youngsters steal a "scarlet fever" notice and stick it on the bachelor's door. This quarantines the three until the Health Officer appears and releases them. They then take the child to find its mamma and are horrified at finding her dead. As each wants to take the child they end the argument most logically—a wedding results.

THE WEDDING GOWN (Reissue—Two Parts—Sept. 26).—The cast: The girl (Gertrude Robinson); Her country sweetheart (Marshall Neilan); Her city sweetheart (H. S. Mack).

Billy had always loved May Belle. They were given parental consent to marry and mother decided to make a wedding gown as a surprise for May Belle. One night when she had invited Billy to supper with May Belle there came a hindrance to their plans in the form of a letter from mother's sister, Marion, who dwelt in the city. Aunt Marion was one of those individuals who believed in progress in life and indeed she had proved it in her own case, for she had left the country and had become the wife of a well-known man of wealth who had since died and left her all his money. But there had been no children, so it was natural that Aunt Marion should think of little May Belle and want her to come to the city. There, as she stated in her letter, she hoped to broaden out her life and bring something different into it. There was a party to celebrate May Belle's departure for the city and her engagement to Billy. Mother and Billy consented that May Belle might go to the city and be broadened.

The broadening process, as far as May Belle was concerned, consisted in attending musicales, parties and teas and at last Aunt Marion introduced her to the son of her most particular friend and implied that here indeed was an opportunity to broaden out her life, for she told little May Belle that it was her duty to marry this man. May Belle, being a conscientious person and, knowing how much her mother and she owed Aunt Marion for her kindness to them when they had been in trouble after her father's death, believed it was her duty to give her consent. She wrote to her mother; but she advised that she had better not tell Billy until it was over with. Billy, who brought the letter from the postoffice, thought it meant that May Belle would soon be coming home. Mother was grief-stricken when she read the letter and handed it to Billy, who smothered his sorrow and agreed to bring the wedding dress which mother had finished to May Belle. On the dress was a note which read: "My dear little May Belle. This was to be a surpriso for my little girl when she stood up with good faithful Billy on her wedding day. Every stitch means love, dear, and a happy life with a good honest man. Momzie." The dress came while May Belle was in the height of enjoying the new trousseau that her aunt had prepared for her.

Later, called down into the drawing room to meet her fiance, she withdrew unexpectedly after telling him that she did not know whether she cared to be married to him or not. There in her room she found her aunt's friends making fun of the dress her mother had sent. Marion showed them the letter and they retired in shame, while Aunt Marion took aside the young man and told him not to be troubled, that May Belle would soon get over her tantrum. But May Belle was soon stealing out of the house with the plain wedding gown in her suitcase. That night she crept back into the farmbouse where Billy and mother, good old pals, were waiting by the fireside. She was welcomely received, and everything ended as it should.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES.

FOR THE GOVERNOR'S CHAIR (Three Parts —Sept. 29).—Tobias Meeker, an accountant who has been in the employ of the state for years, is dying at his home. Meekers' daughter, Arline, is a stenographer in the governor's office. Ray Sanger, star reporter of "The Globe," on his way to see his sweetheart, Arline, notices the governor of the state, Henry Croft, and his secretary, Mark Ralston, entering the Meeker cottage. Scenting a news story, Sanger remains outside, watching. Within the cottage Governor Croft, through a threat of discharging Arline, persuades the dying Meeker to write and sign a fake confession that Malcolm Rush, Croft's opponent for governor, tried to bribe Meeker to change state records. Ralston signs the confession as witness. Arline overhears the plot. When the governor and Ralston leave, Arline tells Sanger of the scheme, while Meeker passes away.

Sanger at once warns bis friend, Rush, of the conspiracy. Governor Croft controls the police and the District Attorney, so that it is impossible to seek relief through tbe law. Sanger and Rush realize that if the fake confession is published the next morning it will be impossible to counteract it, as the following day is election day. At the governor's office, Croft orders his secretary to make an appointment with the newspaper men for the next morning, then locks the confession in the safe after having a number of copies made.

That night a masked man enters tbe governor's office and takes a paper from the safe. He wears a pair of white gloves so that he will leave no finger prints. The stranger safely climbs out of the window, but as he is standing taking off his gloves he is seen by the watchman. A chase follows, during which the pursued drops the gloves. The watchman loses the trail at the rear entrance to the Hotel Mitchell. Convinced that the prowler has done no harm the watchman forgets about the incident, although he keeps the gloves, which show the initials "M. R." within the wrist.

Next morning Sanger and other newspapermen meet the governor. They are given copies of the confession, but cannot publish it until they have seen the original. The governor discovers the original missing. The night watchman tells his story and shows the white gloves to the governor. The governor sees the initials, realizes that they fit Ralston and that the latter lives at tho Hotel Mitchell. Governor Croft accuses Ralston of being a traitor and attacks him. Sanger separates the two men, reminding the governor that Rush's initials also read "M. R."

Rushing to the office of the chief of police, Croft has officers sent to search Ralston's rooms at the hotel and Rush's office. They find nothing. The chief and the governor go to the latter's office where Ralston is searched and put through a third degree, but in vain. Croft suggests that Ralston be locked up until after the election, reminding Ralston that if he says anything of the obtaining of the fake confession, he (Ralston) will face prison as an accomplice. Ralston is arrested, but manages to escape.

He hurries to Sanger's room and confronts the latter, saying: "Look here, Sanger, you borrowed those white gloves of mine last week." Sanger laughs, tells him to forget the gloves, and working on Ralston's spite against the governor, persuades him to write a statement implicating the governor in the fake confession, Sanger promising to obtain immunity for Ralston in case Rush wins the election. Election day comes, and the Croft men resort to "repeater" methods at the polls Many bitter fights result, but in spite of these tactics, Rush is elected.

On inauguration day, Sanger confronts the retiring governor in his office in company with Ralston. Sanger asks Croft to give him an envelope labeled "Petition from Anti-Vice Society." Sanger tears open the envelope and reveals the Meeker confession. The morning after the robbery Sanger, in the governor's office with other newspapermen, had dropped this envelope on the floor while the governor was frantically searching the safe. Sanger had picked up this envelope and handed it to the governor, saying: "You dropped this out of that bunch of papers." Croft had glanced at the inscription on the envelope, then tossed it into the safe. Sanger, who was the burglar, had figured that this would be the safest place for the confession, so that he might have it later to convict Croft. It comes out at this point that Sanger is the new chief of police and his first duty is to arrest Croft on a charge of conspiracy. Sanger also introduces Arline as his future wife.

Betty and her father see him arrive at the hotel and think that the model is another woman. In the meanwhile Eddie takes the model to the salesman's room which is next to the actress's, and, after leaving it there, he hastens down to Betty. She at once asks for an explanation, so he goes up to get the model.

But the poor fellow gets in the wrong room and is detained there so long that Betty comes up and finds him in the arms of the actress. Of course the whole mixup is explained away in the end, and Betty and Eddie as well as the actress and the doctor are all reconciled.

As Jack is sitting in front of his fireplace, he hears a knock on the window. He opens it and a small girl dripping from the rain comes timidly in, tells him a hard luck story and begs Jack to shield her; this he promises to do.

He makes her as comfortable as possible, and insists upon her removing her wet dress and putting on a robe of his. Finally his sister comes and notices the shoes and stockings. She leaves, but no sooner is she outside the door, when the girl confesses that she is Jane, and that this had been done to test him.

THE INSPECTOR'S DOUBLE (Sept. 30).—The cast: Matilda (Gale Henry); John (William Franey); Frank (Chas. Conklin); Bess (Lillian Peacock); A Busy Cop (Millbura Morantl); Dr. Nut (Harry Mann). Written by Harry Wulze and Chas. J. Wilson. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

It was all because John was the image of Frank, the health inspector. John lost his purse and Frank found it. Then he went to the former's house and Matilda thought her hubby was crazy because he did not recognize her. Frank had forgotten his badge, and so could not prove his identity, and was taken to the insane asylum.

But Bess discovered that Frank left his badge and went to the first house on his list to give it to him. At the corner she met John looking for the wallet. He liked her and said that he would take her to lunch. When he arrived home he thought that Matilda was crazy, and sent to the asiyum for help.

Of course John and Frank were continually mixed up until at last the two came face to face in the asylum, and the whole mystery was explained. The cop and the keepers realized their mistakes, and the wallet and the badge were exchanged, and every one was happy.

ASHES OF REMEMBRANCE (Two Parts—Oct. 1).—The cast: The Young Husband (Paul Byron); His Wife (Helen Leslie); Grandpap Martin (Allan Holubar); Janet (Betty Schade); Joshua (J. F. Evers). Written and Produced by Allen Holubar.

Through indiscretion, the young wife has compromised herself, and although innocent, is cast out into the world by her young husband. Her efforts to prove her innocence are fruitless. She passes the house of Grandpap Martin, and goes in. The old man welcomes her, and the girl pours out her story. The old man comforts her.

The young husband is filled with uneasiness, and calls on old man Martin for advice. The old veteran rushes the girl into another room, and the boy tells his story. The old man gravely tells him he is on the brink of a precipice, and to impress the matter tells of an experience in his own youth.

When the Civil War broke out, Martin was called to the colors, and left behind him his girl wife. He begged Joshua, a friend, to look after the wife and see that she wanted nothing. Joshua promise. In the struggle, Martin lost his arm, and when peace was declared he returned home with a happy heart, and full of love for his wife.

Upon arrival at the house, he finds his wife and Joshua, his supposed friend, in loverlike attitude, and filled with a frenzy, orders the wife out of the house. Secure in his false pride, he drags along several weary years, and then receives a note from Janet, the wife, begging him to come and see her before she dies. He hurries to the address and finds he is too late. The woman had been taken up by Joshua, and then deserted, and at last had died in poverty and want.

The old man's story makes a powerful impression on the young husband, and he declares he is going to search for his wife. The old man smiles, and opening the door, brings her in. The two are happily reconciled, and leave to build their house of love anew.

THE LIE SUBLIME (Two Parts—Sept. 28).—The cast: Julian Ormond (King Baggot); Mr. Morton (Frank Smith); Mrs. Morton (Mrs. Slattery); Mollie Morton (Edna Hunter); Jack Wilson (A. Von Baussen); The Impresario (Joseph Granby). Written by Harry Ditmar. Produced by Henry Otto.

Julian Ormond, professional actor and musician, is all tired out from a strenuous season, and asks the manager for a vacation. This is granted and he starts out for a real rest. He arrives in a small town and boards with people by the name of Morton. Mollie, the daughter, reminds him of the girl he left behind him when he went on the stage.

That evening the girl plays and sings for Julian, and he is surprised to find that she has a really remarkable voice. He tells her parents that she has a wonderful voice, and sends for a great impresario to come to hear her.

Jack Wilson, the girl's sweetheart, fears that when Mollie is a great artist she will forget all about him. Of course she kisses away his objections, but Julian sees that it will be a repetition of his case and begins to doubt. Later Bonnelli comes in response to Julian's letter. But before the trial Julian tells him what to say. So when the moment comes and the whole family assembles to hear the verdict, the impresario says that, although she has a very pretty voice, she can never be a real operatic singer. He then takes Julian aside and tells him that the girl's voice is the finest he has ever heard. He asks Julian why he has sacrificed the girl's voice, and the latter says that the girl's love for her sweetheart is worth a thousand operatic careers, and tells of how his love was sacrificed on the altar of art.

Julian now makes a sudden resolution, and goes back to the girl who has waited for him all these years. Mildred, now grown grey, says that she knew he would keep his promise and come back, and the picture ends with the happy re-union of the pair.

THE SHADOW SINISTER (Sept. 29). The cast: John Barry (George C. Pearce); Florence Barry (Jane Bernoudy); Dick Stanton (Lloyd F. Whitlock); Peppo (James Farley). Written by Al. Russell. Produced by Al. W. Rice.

Florence lives alone in the mountains with her father, who is an invalid, and is in love with Dick Stanton, the sheriff of the county. But the father says that they ought to wait a while before marrying, as Florence is all he had in the world. Peppo, a Mexican neighbor, is also in love with Florence, whom he secretly covets. Shortly after that the old man dies, but Florence wants to wait for some time before marrying Dick, out of respect for her father.

One night the girl looks up and sees the face of the Mexican in the window. She manages to get out of the house, and runs to the top of a cliff. There the Mexican, in a clumsy attempt to get her, falls over. Later, when she tells Dick he goes to get the body and finds that it is a bandit for the capture of whom there is a reward of five thousand dollars out. So the girl gets the reward, and the picture ends happily as the two lovers marry.

HUSKS OF LOVE (Three Parts—Sept. 26).—The cast: Mary Holmes (Claire McDowell); Jimmy Hale (William V. Mong); Amos Bixby (William Carlock); Etta Mason (Nellie Allen); Dora Bixby (Laura Lyle); Mrs. Bixby (Mrs. Bertram Grassby). Written and produced by William V. Mong.

Mary Holmes, a reporter on one of the daily papers, is in love with Jimmy Hale, who works on the same paper. Amos Bixby, a society man, takes her to a fashionable cafe for lunch, where they are seen by his sister, Dora, and Etta Mason, who is in love with Amos.

Jimmy is in love with Mary, but she decides to marry Amos. After the ceremony she goes to live at his home, where life is made miserable for her by Mrs. Bixby, who feels that her son has married beneath his station. Amos, too, becomes disagreeable after the ceremony. Things go on in this fashion until Mary decides to return to her father. An open refusal to do his mother's bidding so angers Amos that he strikes Mary.

Some time passes. Mary is happy with her father, but one day there comes a note from Amos telling her he is ill and asking her to come to him. Her father insists that as long as Amos is her husband, her place is with him, so she returns. But Etta Mason is endeavoring to ingratiate herself into Amos' good graces, and being egotistical, does not realize what is happening. Etta endeavors to make friends with Mary, but the latter, realizing her hypocrisy, will have nothing to do with her.

Jimmy has been plugging along at his newspaper work, and one day is given an assignment for a society story. He calls upon Mary and is received in her apartment; Etta, seeing them, stealthily locks the door, and informs Amos that a man is calling upon his wife. In a rage, Amos goes to his wife's apartments. After Jimmie leaves, Mary and Amos are having a struggle, and she finally gets hold of a gun, TIMOTHY DOBBS, THAT'S ME (Episode No. 7—"A Hero by Proxy"—Two Parts—Sept. 25).—The cast: Timothy (Carter De Haven); Jeff (Robert Milash); Dollie (Ruth Clifford); Her Father (Hayward Mack); The Director (C. Casey).

Timothy and Jeff are living in the tenement district, being sadly in want of funds when Dollie Dalyrmple, a fluffy-haired girl, who has a penchant for "up-lift" work, visits the house, and is rudely assaulted by some roughnecks, who are trying to roh her. Timothy seeing that her assailant is larger than himself, sends Jeff to fight the battle. When Dollie revives it is Timothy she sees, and, of course, she thanks him and asks him to take her home, which the gallant Timothy gladly does, totally ignoring Jeff, who has a black eye from the encounter.

Dollie's father is very grateful—and shows his gratitude in a monetray way. He also discloses the fact that he is the manager of a film company, and then Carter tells him that he is the great star. Dollie's father offers him a contract at a fahulous salary, and asks him to be at the studio in the morning to sign the contract.

The next morning Timothy is wandering around looking for something to eat when he sees a picture studio; he sneaks in and is nearly knocked over by a prop boy who is trying to escape the ire of his director. The latter offers the joh of props to Timothy, many disastrous predicaments—not so much to himself—as to other directors and sets, but by this actlon, he calls down upon himself the wrath of some three or four directors. He happens to ask the name of the name of the studio and finds that it is the one where he is to be the star, so promptly he loses his overalls, and presents himself to Dollie and her father, who have just arrived. Later the astonished directors are introduced to the new star, hut Timothy loftily ignores them, and assumes his new positlon, and they, being wlse men, forget the morning's incidents—or try to.

THE JUNGLE HERO (Two Parts—Sept. 30).—The cast: Lucile Ames (Golda Coldwell); Jack Harding (Colin Chase); Mr. Ames (Rex De Roselli); Lord Arlington (Stafford Pemberton). Written by L. Hutton and Jay Hunt. Produced by Jay Hunt.

Lucile Ames is engaged to an English Lord. Capt. Jack Harding, an English Army Officer, reccutly returned from Africa, visits the Zoo the same afternoon that Lucile and her friends are there, to look after a lioness and two cubs he presented the Zoo.

Lucile ventures too near the lioness' cage, and is saved from injury by Harding. He receives a serious wound in the arm. He conceals the fact from Lucile, and is not able to reach a physician for several hours. The physician tells him that only the best of care can save the arm from becoming useless.

Calling on Lucile the next day, and not wishing to arouse sympathy for himself, he removes his arm from the sling. Several meetings follow and Harding asks her to marry him. But while she loves him she announces her intention to marry the lord.

Harding later learns that his pride has cost him dearly; in removing his arm from the sling he has caused complications to set in which render the arm useless. Unfit for service, he is forced to send in his papers and, accepting a commission from the Zoological Society to secure wild animals for the Zoo, he leaves for Africa.

Lucile persuades her father to allow her to accompany him on a trip to Africa to inspect some mines. Arriving there, Mr. Ames finds that trouble with the natives demands a perilous trip through the wilderness. The Ames party is attacked by the natives, and Lucile is captured. Her refusal to become queen of the tribe so angers the chief that she is condemned to death. Placing her in a native hut, they steal the cubs from a lioness and tie them in her arms.

Harding and his men have been trying to capture these same cubs and trace the lioness to the hut, arriving in time to save Lucile from a horrible death. Their gun shots arouse the natives, and a battle follows.

A runner sent by Ames' party notifies the army post of their peril, and a detachment of cavalry arrive in time to rescue them. When questioned by his old associates of the army post, Harding is forced to tell them why he sent in his papers. In this way Lucile learns of his sacrifice for her, and love triumphs in the end.

RED FEATHER.

IF MY COUNTRY SHOULD CALL (Five Parts—Sept. 25).—The cast: Margaret Ardrath (Dorothy Phillips); Patricia Landon (Helen Leslie); Mrs. Landon (Adele Farrington); Robert Ogden (Frank Whitson); Donald (Jack Nelson); Dr. George Ardrath (Lon Chaney); Col. Belden (Albert MacQuarrie); Zuroff (Carl Von Schiller); Mrs. Ardrath (Gretchen Lederer). Produced by Joseph De Grasse.

The whole Ardath family is collected together to discuss the proposed marriage between Margaret and Robert Ogden, a British citizen. The consensus of opinion is that the match is desirable in every way. The old Colonel says that in case of war the children of such a match would make fine soldiers. This frightens Margaret, as all her life she has had a dislike for war.

Dr. Ardath is on his way to an important conference and gets started on his favorite subject, the heart. He tells those present of a wonderful new drug that has been found by a Russian student who used it to depress the action of his heart to get out of military service and who, taking an overdose, was killed. The story makes a strong impression on Margaret and she falls into a troubled sleep.

A boy is born to Margaret. All through his childhood he shows signs of being a fighter, and when he grows up he wants to join the National Guard. Margaret is forced to give in and consents.

Shortly afterward, Donald, the son, becomes engaged to Patricia Landon. His father is called to England on business and he is put in full charge of the firm. A few months afterward, a letter comes from the other side saying that his father had enlisted when the war broke out. Margaret takes the news seriously, and Dr. Ardath is sent for. The doctor leaves his case of medicines on the table and Margaret sees the cardiac depressant in it. The idea at once comes to her that it might be of use to her in case the government should draft her son, so she takes the vial.

Then comes the news that the United States and Mexico are going to war. She at once makes use of the medicine and so affects the action of Donald's heart that he is rejected. The boy is heartbroken and goes to tell Patricia. He receives a cold reception and later the girl's mother argues with her until she agrees to break the engagement owing to Donald's poor health.

Donald takes to drink. His mother is heartbroken, as she thinks that she is to blame for it all, and hesitates to tell the boy that Patricia has married another man. Then the news comes that Robert is wounded.

Dr. Ardath returns and upon examining Donald, says that his heart is all right. They telephone the other doctor and from what he says, the doctor knows that some of the cardiac depressant must have been used. Donald, when he finds this out, rushes to accuse his mother. She goes to get the drug, but takes it herself instead. As Margaret comes to the head of the stairs she overhears Donald reading a telegram from Europe saying that her husband is dead. With that she falls over and——

With a bump Margaret wakes from her terrible dream. She is delighted to find that her husband is really alive and as the picture closes she says that at last she is convinced that one's duty to one's country is the highest, and says that she will never oppose Robert's responding to his country's call.

FANTOMAS (Episode No. 4).—"The Crook Detective" (Three Parts—Sept. 28). The cast: Fantomas, Father Moche and Tom Bob (Victor Navarre); Fandor (Louis Melchior); Inspector Juve and Cranajour (James Breon); Grand Duchess Alexandra (Renne Carl).

Since Juve, the greatest detective in France, had been unable to apprehend Fantomas, there had gradually grown the suspicion that Juve was himself Fantomas. It was argued that no one else had ever advanced the theory of a mysterious criminal, and that it was probably part of a clever scheme to attribute crimes to a phantom. Finally the head of the Department of Justice had Juve arrested and thrown in prison on the charge of being himself Fantomas.

Father Moche was the name given to a secretive man who dwelt on the ground floor of a cheap apartment house in a rather disreputable quarter of Paris. After a bill collector had been paid $1,200 by the old man, the collector went upstairs to get some money from a man named Paulet. When Father Moche heard the sound of a heavy fall, he knew that Paulet and his wife had murdered the collector. Rushing upstairs Father Moche seized the bill collector's wallet and raced back to his own apartment. When Paulet and his wife came after him, he told the couple they were working so clumsily that they would be behind the bars before nightfall. He was finally able to convince them that their only hope of escape lay in obeying his orders implicitly.

The disappearance of the bill collector caused a great outcry and it was attributed to Fantomas. A mysterious American detective, Tom Bob, led the police to an apartment where the body was found behind a wall. He disappeared before he could even be thanked.

Lady Beltham, who had sucessfully concealed her affair with Fantomas, had since married a Russian Grand Duke and was again the pet of Parisian society. She received a visit from Fantomas, who threatened to expose her past unless she opened a subscription to be given as a reward to the person apprehending the criminal. Soon after this Lady Beltham gave a masked ball. This was attended by Fantomas, wearing the celebrated black garb which had always made him more terrible in the eyes of his victims. Fandor, Juve's journalist friend, also went to the ball similarly attired. A third person wearing the Fantomas suit of black was a detective detailed to watch for thieves.

Fantomas murdered the detective, but during the encounter received a stab wound in his arm; this was dressed by attendants who thought him a guest. He disappeared before the murder was discovered. It was then clearly seen that Fantomas had been at work. If Juve was Fantomas, then he would have a wound on his arm. Fandor and police officials rushed to the prison and found the great detective seemingly asleep in his cell. A stab wound was found on his arm and instead of being asleep, he was in a deep stupor. When Juve recovered consciousness he caused the arrest of a keeper, whom he accused of having stabbed him in his cell. Juve was now free to continue his search for Fantomas.

Fandor traced the criminal band to a deserted quarry. Fantomas kidnapped Juve and delivered him to the band at this place. It was his plan to have the police find Juve at the head of the band of Apaches, thus convicting him of being Fantomas. However, Fandor's presence foiled the plot. The bandits were captured, but Fantomas escaped. Needing money, he hastened to Lady Beltham to secure the Fantomas fund. While at her villa he was apprehended by Fandor and Juve. They walked with him through the park on their way to the police station. Fantomas suddenly shoved his captors aside and they fell into pits which had been dug by direction of Fantomas with just such an emergency in view. He was thus able to escape to continue his war against society.

BEAUTY.

THE STINGER STUNG (Sept. 18). The cast: Hezekiah Petrie (Orral Humphreys); Zeb (Rea Berger); Simon Hicks (George Clancy); Miss Popper (Bessie Banks); Mrs. Bean (Lucille Ward).

Beeville is a cross roads town and "The Stinger" is a four-page sheet published by Petrie at spasmodic intervals. Petrie is a man beyond middle age, placid in disposition, perfectly illogical in mind and governed by a desire to follow the course of least resistance, avoiding trouble where possible, but otherwise meeting it with an effort to make a peaceful adjustment at any cost. His desire is to please every one, and in carrying water on both shoulders he comes to grief.

Zeb is Petrie's assistant. A good farm hand was lost when Zeb took up newspaper work. He is lazy, dull-witted, a lout who sets type, runs the press and delivers papers. Simon Hicks dominates the town commercially. Among the women there are two factions, each intensely jealous of the other. One is the Ladies' Aid Society, led by Miss Pepper. These are all small, thin women. The other faction is the Social Reform Society, led by Mrs. Bean. These are all large, heavy women.

Petrie publishes articles in "The Stinger" which are offensive to the two factions and in trying to square himself he gets in deeper. Then to pacify the Social Reformers he attacks Simon Hick's saloon business and loses all of the advertising which had supported the paper. In an effort to mollify Hicks he drinks himself very drunk. In this condition he is discovered by the Ladies' Aid Society leader, and in a supreme effort to get straight with her he attacks the loafers' club that gathers daily before Hick's store. This is the last straw. The loafers organize, seize Petrie and ride him away on a rail.

LAND O' LIZARDS (American—Five Parts—Sept. 21).—The cast: The Stranger (Frank Borzage); Ward Curtis (Harvey Clark); Wynne Curtis (Laura Sears); Dave Moore (Perry Banks); "Bobbie" Moore (Anna Little); Buck Moran (Jack Richardson). Directed by Frank Borzage.

Ward Curtis, president of a development company, comes to the western town of Los Huesos with his daughter, Wynne, to investigate a report made by one of his field scouts that there is a gold stream on the land occupied by the Bar C outfit. The Bar C people have no legal title to the land, but they have terrorized the neighborhood, and intimidated the government officials. The land is used for grazing purposes, and the Bar C people know nothing about the gold stream. There has also come to Los Huesos a cowpuncher known only as "The Stranger"—the only man who refuses to be intimidated by Bar C crowd. Curtis meets the Stranger, who consents to assist Curtis in his undertaking, hoping to win favor with Wynne. She is mildly interested in him, but is disappointed and bored by the town and its people, and after a week or so packs her bags and leaves for home, saying that the Stranger is the only picturesque thing she has seen in this land of lizards.

Near the Bar C holdings is a small sheep ranch operated by Dave Moore and his daughter, Bobbie, as a blind to cover more important operations—by moonlight Moore secretly pans the gold stream on the Bar C ranch. Bobbie maintains a disguise as a boy for her own protection from the lawless cowpunchers, and to keep them from becoming interested in her father's affairs. The Stranger sets out to investigate the placer site, and stops at the Moore cabin to make inquiries about the Bar C crowd. He meets Bobbie without suspecting her disguise, and she manifests considerable interest in him. The Stranger locates the placer stream, but is observed by Moore, who hastens to the land office and files on the creek bed.

By moonlight Moore builds on his claim, but is discovered by one of the Bar C outlaws and killed. The Stranger, who has set up his camp in a blind canyon known as the "Cow's Mouth" near the creek, hears the exchange of shots, gets into the scrap and drives away the outlaw, then brings Moore's body to Bobbie. The Bar C crowd, led by Moran, set out to "get" the Stranger. They come to Bobbie's cabin, but she directs them to town. They search the town, then decide that Bobbie has lied to them, and start again for her cabin.

The Stranger discovers that Bobbie is a girl, and falls in love with her. He leaves the cabin and goes to the Cow's Mouth to "hide out" from the Bar C crowd. The Bar C boys come to Bobbie's cabin, and she is handled brutally by Moran to get her to tell what has become of the Stranger. Her hat falls off, and her secret is discovered. Moran claims her as his personal prize, and they set off to pursue the Stranger. They see him enter the narrow passage into the Cow's Mouth. Inside he starts a grass fire, then slips out with his horse through a secret passage which is unknown to the Bar C fellows. Leaving one of their number to guard Bobbie, the others go in after the Stranger, but are soon driven out by the fire. As they come single-file through the passage the Stranger picks off the first two or three with his gun—the rest surrender. Moran is one of the men who was killed.

Bobbie is taken to the Bar C ranch house by the outlaws. The Stranger rides into town and turns his captives over to the authorities, and enlists the men there to go to Bobbie's rescue. Later, as Bobbie and the Stranger are about to board a train for their honeymoon, Curtis rushes up to them and announces that, by the death of her father, Bobbie is now the owner of the gold stream claim.

MOVIE STRUCK (Sept. 22).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Tess, his sweetheart (Claire Alexander); Hank, janitor (George George). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Tess and Jerry contract the movie fever, and decide to enter the profession. Tess' parents object and lock her up in her room. Tess communicates with Jerry, and the latter aids her escape. Jerry secures a rope and attaches one end to a stone which he throws into Tess' room. Just then the butler enters the room with her midday meal on a tray, when the stone hits him on the head and he falls senseless to the floor. Jerry climbs up into the room, and, assisted by Tess, they put the butler to bed, and put a woman's wig on his head to represent Tess. Both then escape by way of the window, and delightedly proceed to the studio where they offer their services.

Jerry gets in wrong right away with Hank, the janitor of the building, and the manager, so he is not admitted to the office. The manager, however, is very much taken up with Tess, and leads her into his private office for a conference. While Jerry is peeking through the key hole, Hank comes along and joins him, a mixup follows, and Jerry finds a handy brick and throws it through the glass window hitting the manager on the head. When Jerry sees the effect of his act he hands another brick to Hank and makes his debut. A general chase ensues all through the studio, wrecking sets and causing general disorder, the result of which is that Jerry is ejected and told never to return.

THE FATHER OF HER CHILD (Two Parts—Sept. 23).—The cast: Marion Gray (Ethel Calvert); Farmer Gray (Harry Davenport); Rufus Strong (T. H. Gowland); Eph Little (Al. Blake).

Marion, who has kept house for her father since her mother's death, has two suitors, Rufus Strong, the village blacksmith, and Eph Little, the village beau brummel. She favors the latter and marries him. After their marriage Eph becomes a loafer, and Marion does the work, greatly to her father's disgust. One of the village boys has become a sailor and comes home with the wonderful tales of the sights he has seen, and Eph decides that that is the only thing that will make a man of him. He steals off with the family wealth. The father, hearing someone moving about in the living room, decides to investigate, and gets to the door in time to see Eph remove the money from the old sock, but doesn't stop him as he is glad to get rid of him.

Months later the villagers learn that the ship on which Eph sailed was lost with every soul aboard, and immediately inform Marion. After a long period of mourning, Marion marries Rufus, but still worships her dead hero. Meanwhile Eph is tossed up on an unchartered island, and is rescued by the natives, and, being the only white man on the island, is worshipped by all of the women, much to the displeasure of the natives. A ship being blown out of her course by a storm, sends ashore for water, and the captain offers to take Eph back to civilization, but he is too well pleased where he is, and refuses to go with them. As the crew starts back for the ship the natives beg them to take the bad man away, which they finally succeed in doing.

Like the proverbial bad penny Eph turns up and walks right into the house, not knowing that his wife has re-married and has a child, but notwithstanding this fact she rushes into his arms like a happy child. Rufus tells Marion to choose between he and their child or Eph, and she decides to stick to the father of her child.

PASTE AND POLITICS (Two parts—Sept. 24.)—The cast: The reformer (Larry Bowes); his daughter (Gypsy Abbott); the boss (Edward Laurie); his son (Arthur Moon); the stranger (Paddy McQuire). Directed by Henry Kernan.

A political campaign is at its height just before the election that will decide the supremacy of either the reform party headed by a popular candidate or the old gang which is swayed by the rule of a typical political "boss." The reform candidate is heard making a speech in which he threatens to close the dives of the city, one of which is owned by the boss of the anti-reformers. Henchmen of the boss hear the speech and inform him. He decides to plot against the reform candidate.

During the election excitement a vagabond walks into town. He gravitates to the dive of the boss and is offered a job. He starts out with paste bucket and bills announcing the slogan of the anti-reformers. A series of ludicrous mishaps follows, in which Paddy, the vagabond, attempts to paste bills in the most impossible places and succeeds in covering most of the city with paste if not with bills.

Returning to the headquarters of the boss, he hears the plot being hatched to ruin the reform candidate, whom he met a few minutes before, having saved his daughter from the attack of two ruffians and the grateful girl having taken him to her home and introduced him to her father. The boss and his henchmen catch Paddy listening to their plot and throw him into the street, leaving to commit their low deed, which consists of luring the reform candidate to the room of a notorious woman, who is to fall and pretend to sprain her ankle just as the reform candidate comes along. All works well until Paddy recovers from the blow that he received when he was ejected from the dive of the boss. He runs to the home of the reformer and notifies his daughter, who has just refused a proposal of the boss's son, a wholesome young fellow to whom she objects on account of his father. All three hasten to the room where the plotters have just succeeded in getting the reformer and the woman together as planned.

Paddy and the two lovers dash in; Paddy explains the plot in the presence of policemen and newspaper reporters. A fight ensues, the reformer and his friends are victorious, the lovers are united, the boss resigns from the election race and shakes hands with the reformer and Paddy—walks out of town after having accomplished a deed that squares him with the world for all the worthless days he has spent.

THREE PALS (American—Five parts—Sept. 18.)—The cast: Louie (C. William Kolb); Mike (Max M. Dill); May (May Cloy). Scenario written by Ritchie & Whitcomb. Directed by Rea Berger.

Mike and Louie are at work pitching hay. In an idle moment they get hold of a Chicago newspaper, and Mike, who cannot read, sits absorbing the dope while Louie spells it out of the paper. Suddenly Louie comes to a want ad seeking Mike Schultz, who is heir to a fortune. They go to Chicago, see the attorney, Philo Markham, and receive the fortune of $10,000. Markham interests them in a western ranch which comes into his hands in lieu of cash for legal fees of $238.00, and, changing the amount to $23,800, sells it to them for $9,500.00, permitting them to retain $500 of their legacy for traveling expenses.

It happens that Markham's daughter, May, elopes on the same train west with Mike and Louie. Her husband is a disappointment. He gambles away all his own money. To avoid him she gets off at a small way station near Crowntown, the point to which Mike and Louie are bound.

Mike and Louie arrived at El Reposo, the name of the ranch, on foot and discover that they have been buncoed out of their wealth. Aside from their return tickets and their live stock, they have nothing in the world left.

While they are bemoaning their sad fate the goat eats the tickets. He is starting on their life insurance policies when he is discovered and runs away to the hills.

May meanwhile is overpowered by her husband and Pedro Her screams bring Miko and Louie to her rescue. The crooks are routed. May, remembering that her father had renounced her marriage to Chester, tells them she has no father. All go to the home of a farmer named Woods. Woods finds a job for May later as a piano player in a dance hall, but Mike and Louie, who have become her self-constituted guardians, determine to go there also and watch over her.

Steve Barton, a gambler, with the aid of French Bessie, succeeds in getting May into his power. Mike and Louie, however, again come to her aid and escort the weeping and repentant May home.

Mike and Louie realize that the quickest way to save May from total perdition is to immolate themselves on the alter of self-sacrifice, and thus permit her to gather in the coin on their insurance policies. They, therefore, change the names on their policies, making her the sole beneficiary. They decide that the best way to die is to fight each other to the death and the survivor then kill himself. They fire volley after volley at each other. Both fail, but neither is hurt. Then they embrace, but are confronted by Chester and Pedro, who force them to exchange clothes with them. A posse comes in pursuit of Chester and Pedro for bank robbery, and they are chased off a cliff and fall to oblivion. The posse naturally believes that Mike and Louie have been killed, so with the clothes of Chestern and Pedro on them, Mike and Louie decide to hoof it to Chicago. May secures the insurance and leaves for Chicago.

At a small mining town Mike and Louie give away the goat and sell the burro for an extravagant sum, securing enough to return by rail to Chicago. Reaching Chicago, they secure positions in a big hotel as waiter and bus boy. Markham discovers May in Chicago, recognizes her, and they become reconciled. They celebrate the event by a big dinner at the hotel, where May is seen by Mike and Louie, and to the consternation of everybody she embraces them both. Markham rushes up to find out who May is embracing. He is recognized by Mike and Louie and charged with fraud. Markham offers restitution by presenting them with a check for $20,000, and everyone is happy.

GREATER VITAGRAPH (V-L-S-E).

THE COMBAT (Vitagraph—Six Parts—Sept. 18.)—The cast: Muriel Fleming (Anita Stewart); Phillip Lewis (John Robertson); Graydon Burton (Richard Turner); Mrs. Fleming (Virginia Norden); Herman Slade (Winthrop Mandell). Written by Edward J. Montague. Directed by Ralph W. Ince.

Mrs. Fleming, in secret financial distress, counts upon a brilliant match for her daughter as a way out of her difficulty. Muriel, however, in ignorance of her mother's plight, is attached to Graydon Burton; but when they tell Mrs. Fleming of their love she becomes infuriated and refuses her consent on acount of his poverty. Nevertheless, Burton and Muriel secretly marry and he leaves to seek his fortune in the gold fields of the Northwest. He has two partners, Slade, a renegade lawyer from New York, and Rollins, an Englishman. The men strike it rich and Graydon writes Muriel that he is coming to claim her. Slade attempts to rob his partners during the night and is surprised by Rollins, whom Slade kills with Burton's gun. Slade escapes, but returns with police, who arrest Burton on Slade's charge. Seeing that everything is against him in court, Burton escapes and seeks refuge in the wilderness of the mountains, where he becomes a hunted outlaw. Meanwhile the train on which Graydon was supposed to leave is wrecked, and Graydon is reported to be among the dead. Muriel is griefstricken and decides to keep her secret.

Later Philip Lewis, a wealthy lawyer, becomes infatuated with her, and her mother practically coerces the girl into marrying him because of his wealth, finally telling her of their predicament. Soon after her marriage her mother dies. Graydon meanwhile grows desperate and eventually escapes. He starts for New York to claim his wife. Muriel's husband has been appointed district attorney. While Muriel is attending an opera her spying maid steals her secret marriage certificate and sells it to Slade, who has returned to New York and resumed his blackmailing law practice. He writes Muriel a threatening letter and asks her to come to his home to see him that evening.

Graydon arrives in New York and sees Slade. He plans to go to his home the same evening and force him to confess to the crime of which he is believed guilty. As he stands outside the French window he is amazed to see his wife there and Slade threatening her. Stepping into the room suddenly, he surprises both, and Slade confesses his guilt. While Muriel talks to Graydon, telling him of her life, Slade seizes a gun. In a fight that follows Muriel kills Slade, fearing her husband's life is in danger and intending only to frighten him by the shot. She escapes and Graydon assumes the blame. Lewis, her husband, prosecutes the case and determines to get a trace of the mysterious veiled woman who ran from the house the night of the murder. He gets a clue to his own wife and grills her until she confesses.

Angered and jealous, he prosecutes Graydon knowing he is innocent. Muriel, conscience-stricken, starts for the courtroom to confess, but arrives there after he has been convicted. Lewis promises to pardon the man when made Governor if she will keep her silence. He is elected but refuses to keep his promise. At the last moment when Muriel is determined to kill herself, he weakens and issues the pardon. She then rejoins her true husband.

IVAN FILM PRODUCTIONS.

HER SURRENDER (Five parts—September.) The cast: Rhoda Cortland (Anna Nilsson); Theodore Cortlandt, her father (William H. Tooker); Webster Stuyvesant (Wilmuth Merkyl); Madeline Stuyvesant, his mother (Rose Coghland); Burton Woodrow (Harry Springler); Clarice Lee (Frankie Mann). Written and directed by Ivan Abramson.

Rhoda Cortlandt, daughter of Theodore Cortlandt, a millionaire who is interested in charity, is beloved by Webster, son of Madeline Stuyvesant, a philanthropist who is Cortlandt's competitor. Burton Woodrow, employed by Cortlandt in order to send his consumptive mother to Colorado, steals $250 from his employer. He is detected and sent to prison for a year. Clarice Lee, a thief, is beloved by Chicago Jim, a gang leader. Mrs. Stuyvesant and Rhoda are visiting a poor family residing in the apartment adjacent to Clarice's.

Chicago Jim discovers Clarice in the arms of Pugsy, a member of his gang, and beats her. Her cries reach Rhoda and Mrs. Stuyvesant, who go to her rescue. Jim escapes. Clarice, to work upon the sympathies of Mrs. Stuyvesant, declares that Jim beat her because she would not steal for him. Mrs. Stuyvesant takes Clarice to her home. Cortlandt, believing that Mrs. Stuyvesant has procured a million dollar contract through bribery, calls her a trickster in Webster's presence; he defends his mother. A quarrel ensues. Cortlandt orders Webster from his home.

Clarice while in the Stuyvesant home becomes infatuated with Webster, who ignores her. Hearing of his love for Rhoda, she persuades Pugsy, her admirer, to lure Rhoda to his room for the purpose of degrading her. Pugsy entices and attempts to assault her there. Rhoda, defending herself, is severely wounded and suffers great loss of blood. At the hospital to which she is taken the doctors declare that only a transfusion of blood will save her life.

Webster, hearing of Rhoda's condition, offers his blood. The offer is refused by the stubborn and angry Cortlandt, who orders the doctors to advertise and offer $500 for the necessary blood. Burton, released from prison, unable to secure employment, reads the advertisement and applies at the hospital, where after a test he is accepted and a quantity of his blood is transfused to Rhoda's veins.

Before his discharge from the hospital Burton learns that the recipient of his blood is the daughter of the man who sent him to prison. Cortlandt and the Stuyvesants become reconciled.

Burton in the presence of Rhoda offers to return to Cortlandt the money he stole. Rhoda prevents her father from accepting it, and insists that he re-employ Burton. Cortlandt grants Rhoda's wish. Mrs. Stuyvesant gives a reception in celebration of Rhoda's recovery, during which the engagement of Webster and Rhoda is announced.

Rhoda is horrified by constantly recurring visions of Burton. Wherever she goes Burton appears before her, whatever she does recalls him to her mind. His vision constantly calls to her. She struggles against the thought, but realizes that with the blood given her by Burton has come love. Unable to restrain the call of his blood she surrenders herself to it and telephones asking him to visit her. He does so, and she confesses her love for him. Burton tells her that he loved her long before he was sent to prison, but that his past is a shadow that will darken her future. Rhoda pleads with Burton and declares that his shadow will fade in the warmth of her love.

That evening Webster finds Rhoda in Burton's arms, and is horrified. Rhoda returns the engagement ring to Webster, telling him, "Condemn me if you will, Burton gave me blood, and with it came love." Webster, realizing the power of true love, sacrifices his own love for Rhoda's sake and takes back the returned engagement ring. Cortlandt enters the scene, learns the truth. He is shocked and in great excitement denounces and orders Burton from his house. Webster tells Cortlandt that his stubbornness of not permitting him to give his blood caused it all. He pleads and moves Cortlandt to consent to the marriage of his daughter to the man he sent to prison.

THE REWARD OF PATIENCE (Famous Players—Five Parts—Sept. 11).—The cast: Patience (Louise Huff); Robert Penfield (John Bowers); Edith Penfield (Lottie Pickford); Mrs. Penfield (Kate Lester); Paul Dunstan (Adolph Menjou). Directed by Robert G. Vignola.

Friend Patience is a sweet little girl who has spent all her days in a delightfully secluded Quaker village. But she has felt the impulse of greater things and in her modest way she yearns for a broader life. Samuel Larabee, the girl's father, has chosen a gentle soul as a fitting husband for Patience—Friend John, whose complete negativeness wears upon the nerves of the girl. John, in his feeble way, attempts to make love to Patience, but she cannot respond and they are not actually betrothed.

Meanwhile Robert Penfield, a bridge builder, has allowed himself to become engaged to Edith, a New York society girl, largely because their respective mothers so willed it and he was too busy to think much about it. Penfield is commissioned to build a bridge at Amity Corner, the home of Patience. As the girl's father is finance councilman of the town, Penfield calls at the house to discuss matters with him and meets Patience, in whom he takes only a passing interest. But the charm of the girl soon captivates him.

Before Edith became engaged to Penfield she had been pursued by Paul Dunstan, who takes advantage of the absence of Penfield to revive his attentions to Edith. The sudden death of Patience's father leaves the girl penniless and Penfield induces his mother to take her as her social secretary. It is a terrible shock to

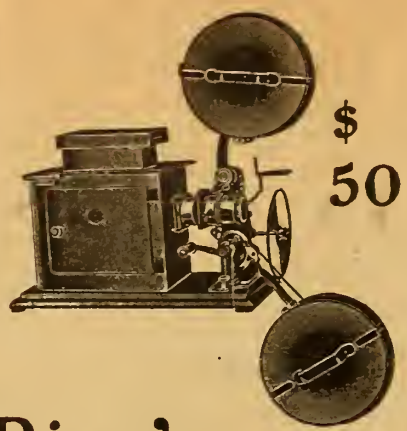
GEORGE KLEINE.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (Chapter 19, "Her Vow Fulfilled"—Two Parts—Sept. 25).—The cast: Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke); Dr. Stephen Royce (Henry Kolker); Richard Freneau (David Powell); David Stafford (William Roselle); Pierpont Stafford (William T. Carleton); Lois Stafford (Jule Power); Judge Freeman (Henry Weaver); Gideon Trask (Frank McGlynn); Nell Trask (Helen Hart); Staas Casinur (Maury Steuart).

Gloria Stafford receives a call from a committee of women, who are arranging a benefit to raise funds for establishing a field hospital for the American troops stationed on the Mexican border, and willingly offers to arrange a children's festival and pageant on the lawn of the Stafford country home, together with an amateur theatrical entertainment to be given indoors. Her father, brother, Doctor Royce, Judge Freeman and the other friends of the Staffords agree to assist in the affair.

After the committee has departed the Staffords are amazed to have Gideon Trask, his daughter, and Jed, her lover, suddenly appear. Gideon explains that he feels certain he is dying from the wounds he received when he was captured aboard his barge, and that ere dying he wants to confess himself the murderer of Freneau. Gloria sits down to listen to his story and Freeman summons Stafford's private secretary to take down the confession. Trask explains how he was left alone with his only daughter following the death of his wife and relates how happy they were together until Freneau appeared, met Nell, made love to her and then deserted her.



Upon learning how his daughter had been wronged, Trask vowed to kill the guilty man and confesses that he followed him to New York, came face to face with him at the base of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, and deliberately choked him to death. He assures Gloria that neither her brother, Doctor Royce or Judge Freeman had anything to do with the crime, and that the guilt is his alone. A great load is thus lifted from Gloria's heart and Freeman, knowing that Trask has not long to live, urges Jed and Nell to take him to some quiet spot and see that his last moments are peaceful ones. Gloria, though grieving over Trask, cannot but rejoice that her suspicions of her brother were unfounded.

THE YELLOW MENACE (Episode No. 5—"The Haunted House"—Two Parts—Oct 2).—The government authorities become increasingly alarmed over the activities of Ali Singh and his agents. Senator Stevens of Oregon shares the fate of Senator Johnson and his death is the result of "The Yellow Menace" treachery.

Najla, after being temporarily safe from Ali Singh's clutches, has taken up her residence with Margaret Bronson and May Manning, and the efforts of Errol Manning and Bronson are directed toward keeping the three girls protected and away from danger. In spite of all precautions, however, they are told that Errol Manning and Willard Bronson are being kept in a house some distance away and need their assistance. Fooled by this trick, the girls rush to this house; are captured and held as hostages with a threat of torture if they did not swear obedience to Ali Singh's commands.

Manning and Bronson are overwhelmingly alarmed at this fresh attack on the girls and immediately set about to rescue them, but their horror at the plight of the hapless girls is nothing compared with the consternation caused by a cable from London, announcing that Willard Bronson's father, the banker, has been murdered in London, whither he had gone on important business. Willard Bronson realizes that Ali Singh has carried out his threat on his father's life and swears new vengeance on this hostile arch fiend, who seems to stop at nothing and whose every threat so far he has carried out.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE EVIL WOMEN DO (Five Parts—Sept. 25).—The cast: Ernestine Bergot and Sarah Brandon (Elsie Jane Wilson); Henriette Ville Handry (Francelia Billington); Count Ville Handry (Rupert Julian); Daniel Champcey (Hobart Henley); Sir Thomas Elgin (C. N. Hammond); Justin Chavessat (Douglas Gerrard); Chrochard (Tom Lockhart). Scenario written by E. J. Clawson. Directed by Rupert Julian.

Ernestine Bergot is a child of the streets of Paris. One day she begs a few sous from a student of the Latin quarter. He becomes interested in her, takes her to his studio and declares he will adopt her. Later she meets Justin Chevassat, another artist, and there springs up a mutual infatuation.

Gradually Ernestine becomes a beautiful "vampire," hardened to any crime. One day she shoves her benefactor out of the studio window, after she has robbed him of a large sum of money. When he dies as a result of the fall Ernestine and Justin leave the Latin quarter.

To further their schemes they take into partnership Sir Thomas Elgin, who poses as Ernestine's uncle. The woman changes her name to Sarah Brandon and by her reckless adventures soon becomes known as the most evil woman in the city. Malgat, a banker's clerk, who has access to the funds, is her first victim.

Sir Thomas Elgin, acting as Sarah Brandon's decoy, feigns illness one day while walking in Boise de Bologne and attracts the attention of Count Ville Handry, who assists the supposed sick man to Sarah Brandon's home, where the woman proceeds to practice her wiles upon the old nobleman. In the end Count Handry asks her to marry him, and their engagement is announced.

Henriette, the Count's daughter, objects, especially when Daniel Champcey, her betrothed, a French naval officer, informs her of Sarah Brandon's reputation. The Count persists; Daniel is ordered to China and Henriette is left alone in her father's home, with the mistress of the house and all the servants (by Sarah's connivery) turned against the daughter.

Before leaving Daniel has mistakenly entrusted Henriette to the "tender" mercies of Chavessat, tool of Sarah. When Henriette is no longer able to endure the humiliation she suffers in her father's home, she begs Chavessat to take her away to some quiet spot where she may live respectably until she can get word to Daniel in China.

Chavessat's treachery imprisoned Henriette in a house of ill repute, where he threatens, by starvation, to compel the girl to submit to his will. In the same building where Henriette is confined lives Malgat, the banker's clerk, whom Sarah ruined, and it is through his discovery of Henriette's identity and his further activities in association with the Parisian police that Sarah is finally exposed at the moment when Count Handry, ruined by her iniquity, is about to commit suicide.

Daniel has hurriedly returned to Paris in response to Henriette's appeal, and, with Malgat and the girl, faces Sarah Brandon in Count Handry's home. Rather than submit to arrest Sarah Brandon drinks from a vial of poison and falls dead, as the police lead away to prison Chavessat and her other accomplice, Sir Thomas Elgin.

THE DAWN OF LOVE (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc—Five Parts—Sept. 25).—The cast: Jacqueline Allen, otherwise "Jack" (Mabel Taliaferro); John Lang (Robert W. Frazer); Miles Allen, "Jack's" father (Leslie M. Stowe); Capt. Ben Durling (Peter Lang); Ward Jennings (Martin J. Faust); chief of the revenue office (D. H. Turner); his assistant (Frank Bates); Tim, a smuggler (Jack La Mond). Scenario written by June Mathis. Directed by Edwin Carewe.

Not far from Capt. Ben Durling's lighthouse, which warns mariners from the dreaded Devil's Shoals, live Jacqueline Allen and her father. "Jack" knows that her father, who calls himself a fisherman, brings home silks and furs which he hides in the cave adjoining their house, but does not know that his operations are illegal.

John Lang, a young customs officer, comes to investigate the smuggling which is going on in spite of the earnest efforts of the coast guards. He goes to the lighthouse to consult Capt. Ben Durling and while there sees "Jack." She and Lang form a friendship that soon ripens into love.

Ward Jennings, a boat owner who assists Allen in his smuggling operations, is jealous. He has loved Jacqueline, and now tells her father that he wants to marry her. Although they work together, Allen does not want him for a son-in-law, and tells him that a sea-faring man is not good enough for his daughter. In his anger Jennings threatens Allen, who decides it is best to go away. On the very day that Lang has proposed to "Jack" her father tells her they are going as soon as the boat comes in. He goes to the city to make the necessary arrangements.

While "Jack" is packing she sees an old photograph of her mother in her bridal gown, and pictures herself dressed similiarly. Taking one of the bany bolts of silk in the cave, she stands before her mirror and pins and drapes it around her until she has formed it into a gown. Just as the desired result is obtained Lang enters. He is struck by her beauty in the old-fashioned gowa, but the bolt of silk confirms suspicions already aroused. He tells her to let her father know he will return in the evening, to ask him a question. He is think- of his duty, and she only of her love.

Jennings, to revenge himself on Allen, has told the coastguards of his smuggling, and of his cave retreat, and they come at night to capture him. In a struggle Allen is killed, just as Lang and Capt. Durling come to question him. "Jack" discovers that her sweetheart is a government officer and blames him for her father's death. She goes to Jennings for protection. Lang takes command of the coastguards and withdraws, first asking Capt. Durling to take charge of "Jack," as he does not trust Jennings.

Capt. Durling receives a letter from Lang, saying that he expects to land the confiscated Allen boat and will return after sundown to explain to "Jack" and once more ask her to marry him. He has discovered that Jennings is the real owner of the smuggling craft. The Captain is called away, and the letter falls into the hands of Jennings, who prevents "Jack" from lighting the lamp to warn her lover and other mariners away from the dangerous shoals. In desperation she throws the lighted lamp on the floor, setting fire to the house to give the needed light. Jennings discovers her trick and struggles with her, determined to be revenged. Lang arrives in time to save her. In the struggle that ensues, the body of Jennings falls to the rocks below. Lang quiets "Jack's" fears and wins her promise.

Beatrice Fairfax receives a pitiful note from Madge Minturn: "I must have a name for my baby. His father, a well-known lawyer, is to be married to-morrow."

Beatrice shows the note to Jimmy Barton who wonders if the man could possibly be James Conley, society man and lawyer, who is to wed Margaret Payne. He goes to the Conley law office on the excuse of securing a political interview, and casually mentions Madge Minturn. His suspicions are immediately confirmed, for Conley becomes confused at the name. Beatrice then goes to Madge and hears her story.

Conley's father, fearing exposure, advises his son to settle with Madge with money. Conley starts to see Madge and meets her in the woods with the baby. She scorns his offer of money. As he leaves, he sees a tramp lurking in the vicinity. He enters into an agreement with the man to kidnap the woman and baby, and to compel Madge to marry him.

Madge places the baby on the grass, and leaves it for a moment to get a drink of water. The tramp secures possession of it and takes it to an abandoned hut. Madge follows. She gains entrance and the tramp overpowers and binds her. The tramp hides the baby in a barn, and then tells Madge that he will kill the infant unless she consents to wed him. Madge struggles to gain her freedom but it is useless.

Meantime Beatrice has gone to the home of Margaret and informs her of Conley's duplicity. Margaret consents to aid Madge. Beatrice and Jimmy start for Madge's home. They are told she has been missing several hours. They trace her to the woods, and arrive at the deserted cabin while Madge is vainly trying to escape. A battle between Jimmy and the tramp follows. The tramp is overpowered, Madge is freed, and the baby recovered.

The next scene shows the interior of the Payne home the following day, with everything ready for the wedding of Conley and Margaret. The bride enters on the arm of Margaret's father. The ceremony is performed and Conely raises his bride's veil to kiss her. He is amazed to find that the woman he has wed is Madge, Margaret having arranged the details for the substitution. Conley indignantly declares that the ceremony is illegal, as his license calls upon him to marry Margaret. But Beatrice and Jimmy, who are there as guests of Margaret, forstalled such a complication by having Madge procure another license containing her own name. Beatrice has the baby with her. When Conley sees it and realizes how beautiful Madge is in her wedding dress, he agrees to accept her as his wife.

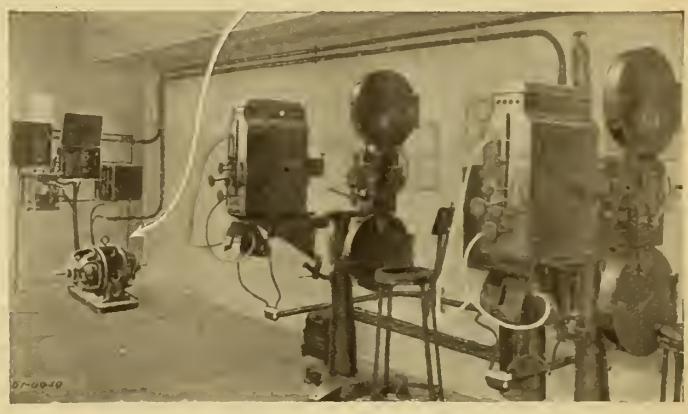
Projection

Perfect Projection is as Important to the theater as the motor is to your automobile



The Crystal Theater maintains a High Standard of Projection at all times. Has spared no expense to obtain the same.

No "wait a moment, please"-no stops and starts to annoy our patrons-just a steady picture at all times-that which cannot fail to impress the most causual visitor. That is our idea of Perfect Projection.

From Program of CRYSTAL THEATRE,
CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. Exhibitor:

sit right down in your own theatre and consider your pictures from the standpoint of your patrons. Does the light flicker? Are there projection ghosts in the pictures? Does your operator have difficulty changing from one arc to the other? Is your competitor giving better projection to his patrons and to yours?

Talk this over with your operator. He can tell you how the service can be improved. Send for Bulletin 10923, Subject, the Wagner White Light Converter.
